has set every heart throbbing to the call of the wild.

It is a man's picture, where great deeds are done without counting the cost.

It is a woman's picture for what woman does not respond to the heroism in man that recks not of life to win her love?

It is a boy's and girl's picture, for every child is close to nature and yearns for the thrilling action of life in the open.

The Eminent American Actor

Wilton Lackaye in "The Man of Shame"

Produced by Harry C. Myers

Fourteenth Prize Release
Broadway Universal Features
Released Oct. 11

A strong program for the week of October 11th, starts off with the Fourteenth Broadway Universal Feature, presenting the distinguished American star and New York favorite, Wilton Lackaye, in an adaptation by M. B. Havey of the celebrated French novel, "Roger La Honte," by Jules Mary, entitled for screen purposes—"The Man of Shame." Mr. Lackaye's stage reputation, based on his tremendous vogue as Svengali in "Trilby," his characterization in "The Pit," and other notable successes, has made his name familiar throughout the land. In "The Man of Shame" he plays a difficult dual role, in which double exposure is used with startling effect. Mr. Lackaye is supported by Rosemary Theby as leading woman, and by Harry C. Myers, who directed the picture.

"The Kiss of Dishonor" with Jane Novak and Ronald Bradbury

Directed by Norval MacGregor

Prize Heart Interest Drama
Gold Seal—2 Reels
Released Oct. 12.

On Tuesday, October 12th, we have the ever-welcome Jane Novak, whose work with Hobart Bosworth in "The Scarlet Sin" established her in prime favor. Playing opposite, is that vigorous young actor, Ronald Bradbury, in "The Kiss of Dishonor," a two-reel Gold Seal heart interest drama. Scenically the picture is artistic and beautiful; dramatically it is strong, with plenty of action and logical continuity. The heart interest is there, too, and with the punch that gets over.

"Under New Management" with Gertrude Selby and Alice Howell

Directed by H. Pathe Lehrman

Prize Novelty Comedy
L-Ko—2 Reels
Released Oct. 13.

Wednesday's L-Ko, October 13, is a novelty. It is called "Under New Management," and most of the fun is supplied by comediennes instead of comedians. Gertrude Selby, sweeter than ever, is first, a flirty stenographer; later disguised as a boy, she is made love to by the wife of her former employer and the complications speed the action up to the limit. It is very much out of the ordinary and will get the laughs.

"The Girl of the Dance Hall" with Agnes Vernon

Directed by Leon Kent

Prize
Emotional Drama
Laemmle—3 Reels
Released Oct. 14.

Agnes Vernon is doing splendid work, as shown by her latest release, "The Girl of the Dance Hall," a three-reel Laemmle drama. In this strong picture she is rescued from life in a mining town dance hall and marries a well-to-do city man. Frequently threatened with exposure of her past life by a former associate, Miss Vernon in the title role carries some big emotional scenes in a most convincing fashion. This picture is strong enough to boost hard, as it will make a strong impression on all who see it. Released Thursday, October 14.

J. Warren Kerrigan in "A Kentucky Idyl"

Directed by Jacques Jaccard

Prize
Idyllic Drama
Victor—2 Reels
Released Oct. 15.

J. Warren Kerrigan appears to advantage in the two-reel Victor drama of Friday, October 15, which bears the attractive title, "A Kentucky Idyl." As the local bad man, Bill Cameron, proprietor of a dance hall and saloon—"Cameron's Place," in the Kentucky mountains, the ever-popular Kerrigan's wonderful physique is a strong asset, and he plays a dominant role with his customary vigor. The story deals with the coming to the mountain settlement of a missionary and his pretty daughter, Helen Leslie, with whom Kerrigan, as Bill Cameron, falls in love to the extent that he closes his place and makes its frequenters attend the church services. His love is not returned, however, and he returns to his former sweetheart, though Cameron's Place is closed for good. Under the direction of Jacques Jaccard this picture is good; with a clean, wholesome story, and some very realistic and convincing settings.

"The Yellow Star" by Randall Parrish. With Marie Walcamp and Frank Newburg

Directed by J. P. McGowan

Prize
Secret Service Drama
101-Bison—3 Reels
Released Oct. 16.

J. P. McGowan, late of the Lasky Studios, contributes a strong three-reeler, "The Yellow Star," written by the popular author, Randall Parish, author of a number of "best seller" novels. It is released under the 101-Bison brand for October 16. Under his capable direction Marie Walcamp and Frank Newburg do some excellent work and the result is a very fine picture. The story concerns a band of crooks who are engaged in smuggling Chinamen into the United States. Newburg as a secret service officer, is detailed to round up the gang, which, after numerous thrilling scenes, and with the help of the resourceful Marie, he does to the great satisfaction of all who have seen the picture. The photography is fine and the dock scenes at San Francisco; the den of the "Yellow Star" gang; Marie's escape after being thrown down a trap door to the waters of the bay, are all real thrills that will grip any audience. You can boost this as much as you like. The picture will make good.

"A Mother's Atonement" with Cleo Madison and Arthur Shirley

Directed by Joseph DeGrasse

Prize
Dual Role Drama
Rex—3 Reels
Released Oct. 17.

Fine double exposure work marks the Rex release of Sunday, October 17, "A Mother's Atonement," reel emotional drama featuring Cleo Madison and Arthur Shirley. Cleo appears as a mother and her daughter. In one strong situation the mother induces the daughter to drink her first glass of wine, not knowing her identity. You will be greatly pleased with Miss Madison's characterizations in this scene in particular. As the mother she appears to be a handsome woman of the world, somewhat blase and hardened, but still beautiful. As the daughter she is simply "sweet sixteen" and the contrast is remarkable. The photography and the settings of this picture are noteworthy, and the whole of its prominent place on the program. Directed by Joseph DeGrasse.

"In the Palace of the King"
A Thrilling Love Romance

Knights of old and ladies fair step out of the realm of dreams to appear in reality in Essanay's six act photoplay, "In the Palace of the King."

F. Marion Crawford wove a thrilling love romance around the reign of King Philip II of Spain.

Five thousand persons, including 1,000 horsemen, 1,000 foot soldiers, hundreds of peasants, royal personages, courtiers and officers, take part in this great spectacular photoplay.

It is the story of a great love between Don John, half brother of the King, and Dolores, daughter of a Spanish general. Royal plots and court intrigues separate the lovers and nearly cause the death of Don John. But love is triumphant.

The all star cast includes E. J. Ratcliffe, the noted stage star; Richard C. Travers, Essanay leading man; Arleen Hackett, leading woman for William Faversham; Lewis Edgard, Ernest Maupain, Nell Craig, Lillian Drew, Sydney Ainsworth and Thomas Commerford. Directed by Fred E. Wright.

Famous Players Film Company

extends its thanks to the Motion Picture Press for its gratifying editorial comments concerning the manner in which we accepted the sudden disaster which recently befell us, and for its unlimited confidence in our spirit and resources, expressed as follows:

"The Famous Players are already in a position to assure the trade that no plan which had been formulated or contemplated before the outbreak of the fire will be in any way modified or impaired. The recuperative powers and efficient organization of the Famous Players Film Company could not be better demonstrated than by the rapidity with which actual production of films was resumed after the disastrous fire."—Motion Picture News.

"The blaze which completely gutted the Famous Players Film Company studio was the worst that has taken place in New York City since the beginning of the film industry. The Morning Telegraph extends its sincere sympathy to the concern that has suffered this loss. It is particularly unfortunate that it should have occurred at a time so near the completion of their big new studios outside of the city. That the Famous Players courageously and independently proceeded with its work of manufacturing film and has in no manner left a gap in the Paramount program of releases, would be a still greater occasion for surprise, if one were not prepared for it in a way, by a study of the picture trade as a whole, and the Famous Players Film Company in particular."—N. Y. Morning Telegraph.

"With characteristic energy the Famous Players Company has already taken steps to minimize the effects of Saturday's disastrous fire and the conflagration will not interfere with the orderly course of business. Nevertheless, the blow is by no means a small one, and the sympathy of film men is heartily accorded to Adolph Zukor, Daniel Frohman and Edwin S. Porter. But those acquainted with the spirit that animates the Famous Players organization need not be reassured that Saturday's disaster will not be allowed to halt in the slightest the vast expansion previously planned."—N. Y. Dramatic Mirror.

"The immediate result of the fire has been the rushing to a speedy conclusion of the plans in preparation prior to the fire for the erection of the studios and laboratories on the newly acquired tract of land at 225th Street, west of Broadway, overlooking the Hudson and Harlem Rivers, the recent purchase of which created a sensation in motion picture and real estate circles, as this is the largest plot of ground ever secured by a motion picture concern within New York City for construction purposes. These plans, which call for the erection of the largest and most comprehensively equipped motion picture studios in the country, are now in the hands of the contractors, who have been given instructions to rush the completion of the work with all the speed at their command.—Motion Picture Mail (Published by N. Y. Eve. Mail).

"So far as exhibitors of Famous Players films are concerned, they need not have been informed that there was a fire, as they are practically unaffected by it."—Motography.

HOW TOLEDO GOT A RECORD AUDIENCE

Two of the biggest merchants in this country, men who knew nothing of motion pictures except what they had learned from theatre seats, last week selected World Film features as the strongest drawing attraction they could find. The occasion was the biggest fashion show that Toledo, Ohio has ever known and the purpose was to display advance styles to the women of the community.

The managers advertised fine gowns from famous designers and fifteen beautiful models from New York to show them, and they featured in every bit of publicity that in connection with the Style Show they would present the famous World Film stars, Clara Kimball Young and Robert Warwick in two World Film photoplays.

The result ----- the biggest affair of the kind on record in the Middle West. The Toledo Times said: "The managers of the Style Show have been convinced that no other films could be more appreciated by a Toledo audience."

The fact that these two shrewd, hard-headed business men, top-notchers among the country's best, placed World Film features ahead of advance styles to attract women should mean much to every motion picture exhibitor.

WHAT THEY SAY ABOUT "DAMAGED GOODS"

"Staged with a great attention to detail and with the delicate plot handled in a manner to produce the most telling effect, while at the same time skirting the borders of impropriety, 'Damaged Goods,' E. Brieux' drama of the wages of sin, is visualized in motion picture form."—Washington Post.

"The vice of men in the form of horrible disease is reflected in the suffering of good women."—Chicago Examiner.

"'Damaged Goods' is a true and pure delineation of a social disease and its far-reaching effects on public and personal health."—Child Hygiene Committee, Mothers' Congress.

"The play clearly portrays the ravages and influences of dreaded diseases and shows the great need for serious work to be done for their prevention."—Rev. Earle Wilfley.

"The sooner the community comes to realize the dangers that threaten the home, the unborn child and the race through unregulated or ill-regulated marriages the sooner will a remedy be applied."—Dr. W. C. Woodward, Health Officer, D. C.

"'Damaged Goods' is a tract, a pamphlet, a sermon—one of the most awakening and hard-hitting we have ever seen."—New York Globe.

"'Damaged Goods,' a drama which should be seen by all."—Congressman A. B. Rouse, of Kentucky.

"'Damaged Goods' as presented by Mr. Richard Bennett and his co-workers should be seen by all parents, young men and young girls. There are awful truths brought to light which should be heeded."—Miss Florence Guernsey, President, New York City Federation of Women's Clubs.

"The effect of the play is wholesome. In it, no vulgarity and no unnecessary facts are permitted to appear. It offers the strongest arguments against hypocrisy and makes a tremendous appeal for the decencies."—New York Telegraph.

"I think the effect produced on those who witnessed 'Damaged Goods' will be beneficial. It teaches and enforces a most needed lesson."—Congressman Joseph Graham of Illinois.

"I would wish to take a young boy and girl of mine to see this play—'Damaged Goods.' If they could get harm out of it, I confess I do not understand how. It puts the horrible truth in so living a way, with such clean, artistic force, that the mind is impressed as it could possibly be impressed in no other manner."—Editorial, Hearst's Magazine.

"The more we have of 'Damaged Goods' on the stage, the less 'Damaged Goods' we will have in actual life."—Congressman Thos. L. Reilly of Connecticut.

"I welcome this new, brave and forward step in dramatics and sociology. It is the reformer's trumpet blast to the present to give the future a square deal."—Dr. A. Simon, Rabbi, Washington Hebrew Congregation.

"Bennett is very effective in pictures. His acting is splendidly adapted to the screen for the reason that his facial expressions are particularly powerful. The supporting company is excellent and the play promises to be one of the moving picture successes of the year."—Washington Herald.

A Revelation!

The Triangle "Bullseye"

BY this time you have heard of the bang with which the initial Triangle Plays went over at the Knickerbocker Theatre last Thursday.

Shortly you will hear other similar concussions in the vicinity of Philadelphia, Chicago and Boston.

A year from now you will look back and date the most important development of photoplay presentment from these Triangle Model Theatre openings.

Griffith — Ince — Sennett have sub-consciously been building up the Triangle organization for years. It remained for the Triangle Film Corporation to give them the opportunity to go their limit.

Now it is done. The greatest directors, the greatest stars, the best photographers, have been brought together to produce the best plays!

It is simply a question of values everywhere.

You know now what "TRIANGLE" means, even if you've only heard from those who have seen. And Triangle Quality is only at the apex of the TRIANGLE—the beginning.

Watch the plan grow in effectiveness, in value, in results!

Leonie Flugrath, and Herbert Prior

In a 3 Act Feature of Heart Interest

"THE UNWILLING THIEF"

By Mary Imlay Taylor, Noted Author

THERE are little girls and little girls in motion pictures, but there are mighty few—if any—who have had the dramatic career of the little girl who stars in this feature—Leonie Flugrath.

Unlike the many, too, little Miss Flugrath has both beauty and a charming personality which wins all picture patrons. But linked with this, and binding them all into genuine dramatic excellence, is that this school girl actress is filled to the brim, so to speak, with theatrical experience.

Shortly from a country-wide tour in the title role of one of Broadway's greatest successes, this little lady makes much of her appearance in this sympathetic feature where she suggests the lily in a swamp of crime.

Stolen in babyhood, still possessing instinctively the refinement of her parents, she is brutally forced in a life of crime—to thievery. The film is fast with action of thrills, and is compellingly sympathetic.

Herbert Prior, as the father, gives the convincing support always to be expected from him. Direction, Langdon West. Friday, October 8th.

"Black Eyes," by Lee Arthur, dramatist, is full of laughs of genuine heartiness—the escapades of man and wife. Featuring Ray McKee and Jean Dumar. 1000 feet. Direction, Will Louis. Wednesday, Oct. 6th.

"The Manufacture of Coin" satisfies the natural curiosity of how our every day coins are made in Uncle Sam's wonderful workshop. By permission of the U. S. Treasury Department. Saturday, October 9th.

Facts and Comments

FROM the office of "The Exhibition Censor, City Hall, Camden, New Jersey," we have received a year's subscription and this little line of comment: "I greatly enjoy the 'good things' you say about the censors, ha, ha, ha." Our friend seems to have a sense of humor, which would seem to disqualify him as a real 20 karat censor. With this delectable sense of humor and with THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD to guide him we entertain a fervent hope of his early conversion.

THE Ohio censors are again on the rampage. They have refused their sanction to a picture called "The Hypocrites." It was Pecksniff we believe who was most profoundly convinced that there were no Pecksniffs in the world. The action of the film inquisitors has called forth a vast amount of discussion of which we are glad. The more light we get on the subject the worse it is for censorship. The press is taking the matter up and an appeal will be taken from the decision of the censors. The result is a lot of free advertising for the film. If the fight is kept up the censors are sure to be defeated. The folly of the censors is generally cured by the common sense of the judges.

IT IS the habit of our press to indulge in sweeping generalities and in wholesale exaggerations whenever a so-called film fire is reported. The recent fire in the building where the Famous Players are located was at once attributed to the few films on storage there. As a matter of fact the fire originated in another part of the building. There is no justification whatever for the proposal to drive the studios and offices and exchanges out of the city into a sort of moving picture "ghetto." Even the board of fire underwriters have somewhat modified their extreme views of the inflammable character of films and reason is taking the place of fear, prejudice and exaggeration. Places where films are made, stored or shown do not in fact prove extra hazardous. Statistics prove this.

EVEN the serious papers prefer or seem to prefer a lot of picturesque misinformation to the plain facts of the motion picture industry. Within the last week we have been pained to see a quantity of this distressing flap-doodle encumber the columns of usually well-informed and well-conducted newspapers. The appeal to the weird and the freakish and the silly seems irresistible to many editorial minds.

OUR British contemporaries are amused over the claim of a London newspaper that many American-made films are released by so-called German-Americans. The London paper does not hesitate to imply that some of the money from these films goes into the Kaiser's war-chest. Our British contemporaries ridicule this stupidity in the proper manner and successfully uphold the standard of sanity. As far as we know there are no hyphenated Americans in the film business.

FILM shows at the front are becoming "quite the rage" in France. We infer that much from the columns of the Cine-Journal which tells of an entertainment furnished to a few regiments of soldiers "somewhere in the North of France." The films were provided by the Gaumont Company. We say with our French contemporary: "Bravo pour cette heureuse initiative."

FOLLOWING our time-honored policy of giving the fullest value to our readers, we have arranged for the publication of a series of articles on "Modern Theater Construction," by Mr. Edward Barnard Kinsila. Mr. Kinsila has achieved an enviable reputation in his chosen field as the architect of the famous Nollendorf Theater in Berlin, Germany. This theater is unrivalled for safety, comfort, elegance and all the latest improvements. In the course of his articles he will touch on all the important aspects of the subject of construction and no manager can fail to be benefited by watching the articles. Every article will be illustrated, enhancing thereby the practical value. We advise our readers who do not keep a file of the paper to be sure and save these articles for future reference.

Woman in Domestic Drama[*]

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

LAST to be created of all beings on earth, the culmination of creative impulse, herself the source of human life and character, woman has been called the everlasting riddle of the world, yet there are three ways through the intricate and interesting complications of her labyrinth, all leading to the cul-de-sac of her heart. One starts from the child's point of view. Very early in life a child has an occasional sense of wretched isolation, when all the world seems unfriendly, and learns that there is only one sure refuge, that of a mother's intuitive sympathy. That maternal sentiment often spreads over an entire family with warm affection, but from the second point of view, that of a husband, a woman's sympathy is narrow, affecting only her next of kin, so rarely is her conduct truly philanthropic. She seems incapable of reaching out beyond those with whom she is in contact to larger and grander actions of benevolence.

That SYMPATHY is exhibited to a very limited degree among animals and savages, that it finds its noblest expression among the highest types of manhood, that it finds false standards among people of limited education, all these facts indicate that keen sympathies are so closely associated with superior intelligence that one may very easily determine the other. From the affection which starts in parental family instinct may rise through education and control of egotism a larger social instinct and a broader spirituality which embraces humankind, which seeks to lift the fallen and do justice to unfortunates of limited opportunity, WHETHER IN A MAN OR IN A WOMAN. Splendid sentiments may become derangements and a menace to society unless well regulated by a rational mind, irrespective of sex.

The peculiar, erratic and sometimes depraved exhibitions of woman's sympathies cease to be a mystery to the husband who nourishes them with skill, and the cause of them is clearly discernible from the third, or parental, point of view. The apparent antithesis between the rational and the sympathetic in an average woman is cleared away when she is regarded as a child. There must be a certain amount of youth in her heart to enable her to understand children and shape their plastic minds, hence she is often moved by impulses which are beyond the grasp of a husband who longs to idealize her, which she does not wholly understand herself. These wayward impulses may spring from a purely childish hunger for demonstrative kindness and appreciation in the best women, with a consequent resentment and indignation when they are denied. Lack of response to the little tendrils of affection she holds out may even rouse the green-eyed monster in her breast, for she intuitively guesses that man is polygamous.

Misunderstandings in married life are all-too-easily solved by authors who do not get at the MOTIVES of a wife, especially when she constitutes the hypotheneuse of an "eternal triangle." To nominate her merely "capricious" and let it go at that is to ignore the real issue, the basis of a new and better understanding. Nearly all women have the social instinct and the moral instinct, the better class of them are products of developed social and moral desires. An author must dig deeper than mere caprice to get at the cause of marital disagreement, remembering that woman, because of her dependence, her closer adherence to social forms and exactions, her natal purity of heart, rarely gives up the co-operative habits of married life without a motive arising from a torrent of feeling sweeping her soul.

Lack of psychology in the pictured domestic drama deadens interest in the story. Why do wives wrangle over trivialities and foment discord to the destruction of their own happiness? A quaint philosopher claims that married women are divided into four classes, 1, the primitive, those actuated by small cunning when not brutalized by bad temper, 2, those who are honest and harshly frank, 3, those who are deceitfully tactful for selfish purposes, and 4, those who are naturally sweet through the impulses of a kind heart and gracious through an endowment of cultivation. There is nothing on earth so hard to subdue by forceful methods as the will of a powerful and vigorous male, yet he will strain hard in the harness and put forth all his strength to pull more than his share of the load when he is given an easy rein and quietly encouraged in the fiercest part of his struggle. He is ever engaged in a battle all his own between the lower and higher impulses of his nature, and the peculiar constitution of his mind becomes apparent to the wife whose tender sympathies are supported by the high faith and keen vision of intelligence.

Whatever the story, that of the devoted wife who fails to inspire her husband in his work, that of the innocent wife driven to false ideals by the cruelty of her mate, that of a disreputable woman's atonement, that of drifting apart through lack of congeniality, whether the end be adjustment or disaster, the mere facts become commonplace without an analysis of motive behind the action, and this means an analysis of sex and character. That one or another type of primitive woman is so constantly pictured on the screen, presenting little or no resistance to the pleadings of some wandering and predatory male inanity, is because the term "primitive" adequately describes the authors.

Throughout the wide realm of domestic drama, in nearly all of its varied forms, including those dealing with such barriers to marriage as difference in social station and parental opposition, no solution is offered to problems deeply concerning our supposed civilization. Is not society responsible for false theories of life for woman? Are we not imposing restrictions on women which make it unfair for us to expect her to do much for our boasted civilization?

There are many difficulties of presenting the rational cure for lack of congeniality between husband and wife. They are usually happy, "as well as could be expected," when his passion and her affection are tempered by intelligence and guided into the Golden Age by mutual respect and faith. Physically mated and mentally congenial, what greater happiness can be found on earth for both than a union of heart, mind and purpose? None of us can expect to escape the struggles and disasters of experience—they form a part of the great drama of human existence—but the battling power of man's will, sinking to brutish ferocity in times of war, may be converted to higher uses when woman acquires a vigor of body and spirit, losing none of her feminine charm, to stand on the same ground, always his equal, often his superior. To love her will then be a form of worship which will deprive us of materials for the domestic drama.

An Appeal to Exhibitors of New York

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE voters of this state will be asked to pass on the new constitution at the election on November 2nd of this year. The overwhelming majority of the newspapers in the state condemn the new constitution and advise the voters to reject it as reactionary and undemocratic.

The motion picture interests have a special reason to join in the chorus of condemnation and to use every reasonable effort to bring about its defeat at the polls. A committee representing the motion picture industry in all its branches appeared before the "Bill of Rights" committee of the convention urging that the freedom of the press be extended to the screen. These men who urged the freedom of the screen received very scant consideration from the Bill of Rights Committee. The chairman of the committee showed his attitude on the question by saying that he thought "the press ought to be curbed a little." An amendment enfranchising the motion picture and freeing it from censorship for at least twenty years was introduced but the Bill of Rights Committee smothered it without much serious consideration.

An industry employing hundreds of thousands of men and furnishing legitimate entertainment to millions more was left without legal protection to become once more the prey of the politician and the sport of the self-constituted reformer. The favorite amusement of the people is still at the mercy of all kinds of censors, who not only endanger the property rights of the producers, the exchangemen and the exhibitors, but who interfere with the reasonable enjoyment of the public.

Let us now demonstrate the power of the screen. Let every exhibitor contribute his share toward the defeat of this "Looking Backward" constitution by urging his patrons to vote against it. Texts for slides will be sent to you free of charge upon application. The present occasion gives the exhibitor a chance to gain the good will of his audience and to create a proper public sentiment against censorship by accompanying the slide with a good public speaker, who will give the whole question in a nut shell between reels. Every one of your patrons having seen the slides and having heard the speaker will be able to form his own conclusions on the injustice that has been done and is still being done to the motion picture industry.

A short time ago the public of Philadelphia was invited to listen to a short talk against censorship in the course of an evening's entertainment. The response was everwhelming, the public crowded the theater and showed by its attitude that the old American love of liberty is still alive and that the plain people of the land detest and abhor any kind of censorship.

Such a variation in your entertainment will at once stamp your house as one of quality, it will gain prestige for you and your pictures and it will create a wide and vigorous anti-censorship sentiment.

The Moving Picture World will furnish you with the slides and with the speaker, who will be either the writer of these lines or some other competent man. The Moving Picture World as the representative journal of the industry believes in DOING THINGS for the exhibitor and for the industry at large. We believe in real, practical service. Our service is offered to you absolutely free of charge. No assessment of any kind will be levied either upon the exhibitor, or the producer or exchangeman. Our only object and ambition is to render a service to the industry.

We suggest to the exhibitors in any one locality to co-operate in this matter. If they will meet and all agree to display the slides and to have the speaker appear in their theaters they can all be accommodated, as it will be easy enough for the speaker to deliver his talk at several theaters in the same city and in the course of the same evening. The proper schedule can be arranged by a meeting of the different exhibitors. They will lose but little time and suffer but little inconvenience while they will render an invaluable service both to themselves and to the good cause.

The campaign will open on October 1st. We ask all exhibitors in the city and state to write at once, to let us know whether they care to avail themselves of this opportunity to gain a new hold on their patrons and to popularize the motion picture. Remember that in the coming session of the legislature a number of bills will be introduced to hamper the motion picture interests. We are in a position to know that a strong effort will be made to pass a law prohibiting Sunday exhibitions. The Court of Appeals has said that at present Sunday exhibitions are legal but that the legislature may pass a law forbidding them in the future. Censorship too will be attempted again. Now you have a wonderful opportunity of giving your patrons a lot of interesting information about motion pictures, arranged in attractive form and presented by a competent speaker. Don't you think that will help when these hostile bills come up in January? Heretofore much of this hostile legislation had a measure of public sentiment behind it and often bad bills were introduced at the request of the so-called reform element. With a proper illustration of the subject legislators will get letters from their constituents saying something in favor of the motion picture and protesting against adverse legislation. The talk will run for about five minutes or as much longer as each exhibitor may think advisable.

Let us show the public, that the men engaged in this business are reputable and responsible, that the motion picture deserves the same privileges as the press, that all censorship is foolish and un-American and let us show above all other things that the motion picture interests are not defenceless but that we have the power to strike back at the politicians, who refuse to this great industry the consideration to which it is entitled.

Exhibitors in other states have given proof of their power to assert and to defend their rights. Slowly but surely it is dawning upon the politicians of that state that the motion picture interests cannot be trifled with. They are helping to keep the pot boiling and we in New York must imitate their example. Do you realize that the motion picture side of the censorship question has never been fully put before the public? They have so far heard the one side only, i. e., the side of the enemies of the picture. They have listened to the ill-informed critics of the motion picture who, with batlike vision, can only see the evil. Your audience is friendly toward the motion pictures and it loves to hear about them. The patrons will give any speaker an interested and patient hearing. It is the most natural thing in the world for them to take an interest in all matters that so vitally concern their favorite amusement. This is a chance to win their confidence more than ever and to keep alive their interest.

LET US HEAR FROM YOU AT ONCE.

Schools of Motion Picture Art

An Appreciative Study of Modern Dramatic Kinematography Both Here and Abroad.

By W. Stephen Bush.

ARTICLE II.

David W. Griffith.

IN POINT of brilliancy, in psychological depth and in the power of condensation, David W. Griffith stands in a class by himself. The sun of his genius poured its rays upon the motion picture in the early formative period and has left its impress on the art to this day. Indeed, like the immortal Tuscan, he has fashioned the language of the screen which before him in spite of its inexhaustible richness was but fragmentary and indistinct; a "patois" rather than a language. He was the first to speak the language of the screen. Many and various have been his imitators and here and there one succeeds in aping some of his mannerisms, but the crown of Griffith has never fitted any brow but the master's.

The rise of Griffith came at a time when the identity of player and director was unknown to the general public. People in those days used to speak of the "Biograph girl," they were even then deeply interested in the personality of the men and women who made motion pictures and eagerly absorbed a lot of floating gossip about them, but the personal pronoun had on the whole been left out of the motion picture literature. The organization with which Griffith was connected and which, thanks largely to his genius, long overshadowed all its competitors was ultra-conservative in all matters touching publicity. The ruling spirits of the organization underestimated rather than overestimated the value of publicity. In spite of all this handicap the fame of Griffith flashed forth on the horizon of the new art. The art of Griffith was, in the fullest sense of the word, compelling. In the midst of the overwhelming demand for Biographs with which every licensed exchange was visited not long after the formation of the Motion Picture Patents Company there arose the question: What manner of man is this director, whose pictures are always sure of filling our houses?

Griffith's Early Masterpieces.

If some disaster like Pompeii were to overtake us, leaving only dead relics for the judgment of posterity, and if I were asked to what samples of our art I would most willingly and most confidently entrust the fame of the screen, I would not hesitate in choosing as the choicest specimens of our art the pictures that Griffith directed in 1908, 1909 and 1910.

The first manifestation of a new genius is a most fascinating sight. Before Griffith's coming the motion picture rested its claim to popular favor largely on the charm of novelty and we could only hope that in this new and wonderful discovery there might be the roots and possibilities of a new art. Griffith converted the hope into sober certainty. He established himself at one bound as a master of visualization. His was no "middle flight," for he attempted big things at the very start.

A Wizard of Visualization Who Knew No "Middle Flight."

Intuition is but another proof of genius, and Griffith had no other guide but intuition. He really journeyed into an undiscovered world. No one in all the range of dramatic literature has ever surpassed him in his intuitive knowledge of the human heart. I find in his best productions traces of all the great schools of dramatic art and I find in addition thereto the masterful control of a new visualizing power, i. e., the screen. From the primitive emotions to the most complex and mysterious he dominates the register with the force and ease of a true virtuoso. It is true perhaps that he has at times erred on the side of pessimism and that he has most likely in the stress of "releasing on schedule" descended to "tricks." As to the first criticism it cannot be denied that pessimism is quite often the concomitant of genius. However, these touches of pessimism are never vitiating, they never degenerate into the cynical. Indeed, in a man of lesser fame and smaller achievement such a slight fault might escape notice entirely.

Some Outstanding Marks of the Griffith School.

We all stood in silent admiration, than which there is no finer tribute, when Griffith first waved his magic wand. Later, as we began to analyze, we discovered two outstanding characteristics—marvelous daring and a new use of humor and pathos. Let me cite an example of his daring. What author would on first impressions be more repellant to the searcher for good filming materials than Robert Browning, whose veins of poetry and whose touches of the dramatic are buried in the hard and heavy ore of philosophy. Even the most profound admirer of Browning will not claim dramatic distinction for the great poet. The genius of Griffith took two particularly difficult subjects, both essentially narrative in form and substance, and fusing them in the crucible of his own genius he drew from them two of the finest productions in the whole range of film literature. Now the man who can visualize Browning for the man in the street makes pleasing and definite proof of the full scope and the higher destiny of the motion picture. It is not, however, only in comprehension and adaptation that Griffith has accomplished triumphs which look like a guarantee of the great future of our art. His own original creations constitute not the least title to his mastership. What theme could have been more daring than the story of "The Baby's Shoe."

Here Was Daring Wonderfully Joined to Delicacy.

It is not too much to say when trying to characterize in one sentence the outstanding merit of the Griffith school that to Griffith the screen seems to be like wax. It records the slightest and daintiest touch with unfailing fidelity. There are thoughts and ideas and moods that elude the effort of the written no less than the spoken word. Many such movements of the human soul may be held, expressed and recorded in paintings and to a very much lesser degree in statuary. Griffith has proved that they may be seized and their meaning conveyed to others by means of the screen. Frequent manifestations of this rare ability accounted in no small measure for the unbounded popularity and the almost hypnotic power of the old Biograph single reels directed by Griffith.

In the scene of "King John," where Hubert is tempted to murder the young prince, the tempter repeatedly hesitates to employ words. He is most anxious to convey his meaning to Hubert and longs to do so "without the sound of harmful words, using conceit alone." He finally succeeds in conveying his idea, using but few words and depending on his manner far more than on his words. The scene reminds one of many a scene in a Griffith play, where words seem and are superfluous. The phrase, "using conceit alone," is the most apposite I can think of.

Griffith's New Uses of Humor.

The second characteristic is all Griffith's. I am speaking of his kind of humor and the use he makes of it in the building of his plays. He flies in the face of every dramatic convention and thereby makes convention look cheap, something which only a great mind can do and one who possesses originality. In real life humor, pathos and tragedy are often found in one and the same incident and really inseparable. Convention has been busy many centuries, separating, classifying, dividing along lines often artificial and arbitrary. The genius of Griffith laughed at all such conventions and he dares giving us humor, pathos and tragedy closely bound up together just as in life's realities. There is nothing more dreadful than what some directors call "comedy relief." It is a hideous expression to begin with. A good deal of the so-called comedy relief is dragged in with a derrick and about as welcome to the audience as a sudden leak from the ceiling. To open the vial of humor at the right moment and to pour not a drachm more than what the situation demands or will bear is the work of a master-hand and bunglers are "warned off the premises." Griffith is a creative master-hand in the mixture of humor with pathos and tragedy. Who can forget the scene of the two tow-headed chubby little ones crawling from under the bed and gazing at the audience at the tensest moment of "The Battle?" Griffith's art abounds in these things. To emphasize and filter the humor of the common-place has always been characteristically American. To this extent Mr. Griffith is in his choice and placement of humor somewhat indebted to the genius of his native land.

Transforming the "Commonplace."

Speaking of the "Commonplace," is there really such a thing to the true dramatist? Griffith has used the commonplace as no other director of picture plays. He saw what was universal, what was truly and widely human, what was humorous and pathetic and tragic behind the commonplace; and he made the world at large see it and appreciate it. There is not in all the plays of Griffith as much as a trace of sermonizing tendencies, and yet all his serious plays are sermons without words. He is a wizard in painting contrasts and he delights in showing the common humanity which underlies all our contrasts of class and wealth and knowledge and which rises superior to them all. Emerson called Shakespeare "a mere master of revels to mankind" because he did not moralize. This reproach Griffith too must endure. He never moralizes. He lets the spectator do the moralizing and the drawing of the lessons. Most of us, I think, will thank Griffith for staying out of the pulpit and sticking to the job of the dramatist.

No "Moral Parades" or "Horrible Examples."

It never occurred to him to subordinate the story to the moral and to parade "horrible examples in films." The story must force its moral home without any obtrusion. Griffith never attempted, and I think could not attempt if he tried, to cloak over a mass of filth with the thin pretense of teaching a lesson. As a New York judge said in forbidding the exhibition of "white slave" films: "It is not necessary to prove the beauties and advantages of sanitation by exposing the sewers to general view." It may be true that at times he skirted along the border of the morbid, but to revel in it for the sake of the panderer's profit was and is altogether abhorrent to his artistic genius. Here and there, especially among his later works, one will find touches of Ibsen, but he never has shown the Zolaesque delight in the analysis of decay. The soul struggling in the midst of contending influences is his favorite theme, but never does he seek to deface the image of God. There runs through all his plays the echo of that sublime sentiment: "A good man in all the vagueness of impulse well knows the right way." No clouds of despair, no fog of pessimism ever hangs upon his plays, but yield to the influences of that "planet which shows to every wanderer the true path." The sunshine wins. His respect for the dignity of man and his belief in a higher destiny are not the least among the subtle forces which have made the name of Griffith honored beyond others in this new art.

The Tools He Created and Worked With.

Griffith far more than any other director moulded the actors to his will, and doing so made them yield the best and the most there was in them. True, he had a cast the like of which we have never seen before or since. All of them shared in the fame of Griffith and on the strength of this reflected fame made bids for greater popularity and wider fields of action. Some measure of success has come to all of them, but none ever improved upon the work they had done for Griffith. I do not say this in derogation of their merits, for we all know that in this famous cast there were beauty, ability and talent far above the average. When I now call attention to the fact that away from Griffith they never rose above the level he had found for them it is only because I want to prove the extraordinary power of Griffith in ruling and balancing his histrionic forces.

No man or woman has ever come forth from the Griffith school without lasting benefit. When acting for the screen was entirely a new thing bad habits were painfully common. Among them were camera consciousness and mimic exaggeration. Of these cardinal vices the Griffith school thoroughly cured every one of its pupils. The same school likewise instilled a wonderful penetration of screen needs into all its actors. Thus it may be said that no man ever worked with better tools than Griffith. It must be added that he in most cases selected and in every case improved his own tools.

Weak in Allegory, Though Powerful in Staging Spectacles.

I have said that his intimate because intuitive knowledge of the heart distinguishes Griffith above most, if not all, of the directors. On the other hand, there are few who have surpassed him in the handling of groups and in the staging of spectacles. To paraphrase the Latin poet: "Nothing that pertains to the screen is strange to him." To be just, I must modify this last encomium to this extent: Like every other American director, Mr. Griffith has been least successful in attempts at allegory. He more than other of our American directors has perceived the value and the possibilities of good allegory on the screen. Ours, however, is not the soil for allegory. The classic atmosphere of Italy cannot be duplicated here or anywhere with the exception of Greece. Italy and Greece to this day live in the atmosphere of the ancient mythology which is the alpha and omega of all allegory. Allegory must have poise, dignity, impressiveness; it must sustain the sublime tone and the lofty spirit. The touch of modern sentiment is fatal. We have but one allegorical work in all our literature. It grieves me to this day to think how this was murdered on the screen. There have been rare flashes in Griffith's allegorical attempts, but on the whole he has not been felicitous.

Much has been said of the photographic excellence which distinguished the Griffith school from its earliest date. It is said that he has a chosen cameraman who understands his master thoroughly. To this chosen cameraman a word of praise is surely due. He has helped to establish one of the outstanding marks of merit of the Griffith school.

What Will the Future Bring?

The powers of Griffith are in their prime. The sources of his inspiration flow freely and generously. His keen glance still sweeps over the whole range of human history and human experience. Great and rare visions still throng about him. If he listens to naught but the voice of his genius and if he disdains in the future as he has disdained in the past an unholy alliance between art and commercialism, the world has a right to expect new and glorious creations in the future. No man living is able at this hour to foresee the ultimate goal of the screeen; none can fathom its finality. One thing is sure: None has seen further than Griffith. He may be destined to surpass all that he has achieved up to this time; such at least is the sincere hope and belief of the writer.

Joe Farnham

JOSEPH WHITE FARNHAM, advertising man, publicity expert, press agent, before and after-dinner speaker, and master of things pertaining to the better way manufacturing of better motion pictures, has again harkened to the call of the little wanderlust midgets who tug at the coattails of "we of the photoplays."

Joe Farnham.

Just returned from the battlefields of France, where he has spent the past four months with the motion picture camera in the interest of the Carnegie Peace Endowment, Mr. Farnham (or, as he was baptised by the farseeing minister, Joe) this time departed these whereabouts on Monday of this week to join the staff of the Lubin Manufacturing Company in the Brotherly Love City. He will sit at the especially-built desk of wide and generous dimensions from which will be controlled the advertising, press, publicity and selling campaigns of the Lubin Company, and which will be in constant touch with the inner office presided over by Vice-President Ferdinand Singhi and Treasurer Ira Lowery.

Joe's wide and varied experience in the motion picture field is a most valuable acquisition by Lubin. His rise has been a most interesting one, beginning from a time about six years ago, when writing as "Gordon Trent" on a New York newspaper, he first endeared himself and jumped into popular favor. Then came his association with the Film Supply Company of America as assistant to General Manager Raver, followed by the return, because of flattering offers, to the newspaper field where again he made an enviable record under the nom-de-plume, "The Big Fellow." At the organization of the All Star Feature Corporation, Joe once more joined hands with Harry R. Raver and became director of advertising and sales for that corporation and general assistant to President Raver, later succeeding Mr. Raver to the office of general manager and director of the All Star.

Mr. Farnham goes to Philadelphia with the heartiest well wishes of his host of friends, while Lubin receives a compliment for its choice. It's a good combination.

UNIVERSAL CHANGES TITLE OF FEATURE.

The title of the Universal Broadway Feature, "The Intrigue," has been changed to "The College Orphan." A mention of this multiple-reel picture was published on page 2205 of last week's issue.

Board of Trade Completes Organization

Board of Officers, Executive Committee and Standing Committees Are Elected.

THE organization of the Motion Picture Board of Trade, the start of which was reported exclusively in the columns of the Moving Picture World, was completed on Tuesday, September 20, when the Board of Directors met at the new offices, 18 East 41st street. The following officers were elected:

President, J. Stuart Blackton; manufacturers' vice-president, Carl Laemmle; supply vice-president, Nicholas Power; exchanges vice-president, John R. Freuler; exhibitors' vice-president, F. J. Rembusch, Shelbyville, Ind.; publication vice-president, W. Stephen Bush; miscellaneous vice-president, W. R. Rothacker; secretary, E. A. McManus; treasurer, Joseph W. Engel.

Then followed the election of standing committees, which resulted as follows:

Executive Committee—Walter N. Irwin, W. A. Johnston, Nicholas Power, P. A. Powers, E. A. McManus, J. A. Binder (ex officio).

Membership Committee—Carl Laemmle, J. Stuart Blackton, R. A. Rowland, S. L. Rothapfel, Siegmund Lubin, John R. Freuler, J. W. Binder (ex officio).

Auditing Committee—Fred Hawley, L. W. Atwater, Carl H. Pierce, J. W. Binder (ex officio).

Finance Committee—J. Stuart Blackton, Robt. H. Cochrane, Schuyler Colfax, Ferdinand W. Singhi, John R. Freuler, Joseph W. Engel, J. W. Binder (ex officio).

Arbitration Committee—Samuel M. Field, Walter W. Irwin, E. A. McManus, Paul Gulick, Will C. Smith, Arthur James, J. W. Binder (ex officio).

Publicity Committee—Arthur James, Chester Beecroft, Paul Gulick, Sam Spedon, Carl H. Pierce, Arthur Leslie, W. A. Johnston, W. Stephen Bush, Chas. R. Condon, J. W. Binder (ex officio).

J. W. Binder was elected executive secretary of the Board of Trade and William M. Seabury was chosen general counsel. Mr. Seabury is a brother of Samuel Seabury, of the Court of Appeals. Mr. Binder reported to the board that nearly ten thousand dollars had so far been paid into the treasury as initiation fees and annual dues. He said that he hoped for a substantial increase in membership, adding that he had received applications for membership by mail and telegraph from all parts of the country.

ASSOCIATED PLANS ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN.

A most important step, and unquestionably the best step toward acquainting the picture fans throughout the country with the quality and merits of its productions, was taken by the Associated Film Sales Corporation last week when they completed the details of a huge nation-wide newspaper advertising campaign that will carry the announcements of their activities into every important daily newspaper in America. Lee-Jones, Inc., a well-known Chicago Advertising Agency, will launch this campaign for the Associated early next month. At the present time it is intended to go into about six hundred newspapers.

Another arrangement of great value was consummated by the Associated when they extracted a promise from Myron C. Fagan, editor-in-chief of the National Newspaper Publishers' Drama Service Bureau that he would personally review their productions every week. Mr. Fagan is the official New York dramatic critic for many of America's most important newspapers, and this promise on his part carries with it an assurance that his criticisms of Associated pictures will be seen in very nearly every newspaper in the country.

Mr. Fagan is very well known to the theatrical and motion picture industry and it is hardly necessary to say that his criticisms will be based strictly on merit.

ED-AU CLUB MEETING.

The Ed-Au Club will meet Tuesday evening, October 5, at Brown's. All members are requested to be present at this meeting as business of importance comes up which will be of interest to each member. Candidates for membership will kindly send application to the secretary before the above date. The applicant must be something more than an amateur writer to gain admission, and is requested to send in the names of some of their script produced, or names of persons who will vouch for their qualification.

MARY LOUISE FARLEY, Secretary.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

Donald Brian at the Strand.

AT the Strand theater Donald Brian is seen for the first time as a moving picture star in "The Voice in the Fog," a photo-dramatization of the novel of the same name, written by Harold MacGrath, author of "The Goose Girl" and "The Puppet Crown." Mr. Brian will be remembered as Prince Danilo in "The Merry Widow," the role which made him famous throughout the country. "The Voice in the Fog" was produced by Jesse L. Lasky, who has given the star an excellent supporting cast. The story is as follows: Thomas Webb, a haberdasher clerk, is left a title, the famous Moncton pendant and $1,200 in cash. He celebrates his good fortune with Mason, a gentlemanly adventurer, who lives in the same lodgings. Mason is really a crook and, after getting Webb drunk, wins from him the $1,200, and secures the right to use Webb's title of Lord Moncton for three months. Webb meets Miss Kitty Killigrew an American heiress and falls in love with her. Kitty induces her father to buy for her the only existing copy of the famous Moncton pendant to wear at the Embassy Ball. Mason's man entices Kitty away from the ball, and Mason, reaching through the cab window jerks the pendant from her neck. The only clew Kitty has to the robber is a scarred wrist being thrust through the cab window. Suspicion points to Webb as the thief, but Kitty remembers the scar on the arm of the thief. Webb has no scar. Mason tries to escape, but is captured and his scar shown. Kitty turns to Webb and is about to return the real pendant, which she has put about her neck thinking it her own, when Webb tells her to keep it, as he wants it kept in the family.

Other film attractions on the bill are some beautiful and interesting travel and educational studies; the Topical Review, containing the latest news pictures from this country and abroad, a newly arrived lot of interesting and realistic European war pictures, and a new comedy.

The musical program is an exceptionally attractive one. The soloists are: Martha De Lachmann, soprano; Alfred De Manby, late baritone with the Royal Opera, Covent Garden, London, and Autumn Hall, the gifted violinist.

Elsie Janis at the Broadway.

Elsie Janis in "'Twas Ever Thus," a clever photo comedy of the art of love making, from prehistoric time to the present day, is being presented by Bosworth, Inc. at the Broadway theater this week. Miss Janis impersonates three entirely different girls: a bare-limbed belle of the Cave Dweller epoch, a refined daughter of the Boston aristocracy of Colonial days, and an up-to-the-minute New York novelist of the present day. Her athletic vigor as the first character, her grace with the difficult crinoline as the second, and her style and charm as the third, make the comedy a novel and pleasing entertainment.

New South American travel pictures, Pathe News, cartoons and selected comedies complete the program.

"The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty and "The Battle Cry of Peace," at the Vitagraph theater, are both playing to capacity at every performance.

APPLEGATE A REGULAR HEAVY.

Roy Applegate has been pronounced an ideal "heavy" by Isadore Bernstein, general director of the Equitable company, where Mr. Applegate is the heavy in the stock company, and he has been put under contract for a long term to appear in Equitable pictures. Mr. Applegate is in reality a "heavy"—weighing 190 pounds and measuring 6 feet 2 in his stocking feet. As a villain, he is most effective on the screen. The fact that he is able to create so decided an impression is all the more proof that he is an excellent actor, for in real life he is most quiet and retiring.

Mr. Applegate will be seen in "Life's Crucible," "The Bludgeon" and "The Fisher Girl," the last of which is now being produced.

CHANGES IN KLEINE ORGANIZATION.

Harry Scott, that genial and popular Kleine representative who has successively handled the Cleveland and Dallas offices, is now in charge of the Kleine Branch at Philadelphia. Mr. H. A. Bugie, formerly of Philadelphia, is transferred to Cincinnati, where it is planned to open a new Kleine office to care for the ever-increasing volume of business from that territory.

Freuler Working Out Plans

General Manager Graham Talks on Aims of President of Mutual Film Corporation.

SPEAKING on Tuesday about the aims of President John R. Freuler, of the Mutual Film Corporation, General Manager John C. Graham said one of the first movements made by the new official had been to bring every branch and sub-branch manager into closer touch with the home office. Secondly it had been the object of the management to put into the program the drawing power needed by the film regardless of its length. President Freuler in the working out of his plans has drawn on his experience both as an exhibitor and as an exchangeman. Through the two and a half score Mutual agencies he intends to reach every community large enough to support a motion picture theatre.

John R. Freuler.

"The personality of Mr. Freuler is going to be felt in every Mutual branch," said Mr. Graham. "The program is going to be handled as he feels it should be handled; it will not be controlled by men of different minds, who inject their own ideas. We have done away with district managers. All authority has been centered right in the home office. The man who runs a sub-branch in remote Texas will be just as close to us as the man in Buffalo so far as knowing what is going on in this office is concerned. We are going to issue to our managers a series of confidential letters which will give to them information in regard to the future movements of the company one week in advance of its appearance in the trade press. In this way managers will be the first in their jurisdiction to have knowledge of what the Mutual is doing; they will not be placed in the position of having outsiders in touch with New York impart it to them.

"Instead of district managers we have appointed a corps of efficiency men who work direct from our office. These men do not have autocratic rule over a certain group of offices where they can do as they like. They do go to the different branches to study conditions, to inspect, and to give constructive advice, whether it be in regard to poster shipments or film supply or what. That means better service. The efficiency men go into a branch with an open mind, without prejudice, and they and the managers are allowed time in which to work out their ideas.

"In the arrangement of the program our first thought has been as to its composition and then to the machinery that would guarantee the exhibitor getting the kind of film he wants. We don't consider that because a reel of film is 120 days old and it has passed from a buying office to a sub-branch it cannot be handled just as systematically in every way as it was when a first-run subject. We have seventy-two offices in the United States and Canada, and the perfection of the machinery means that we can get to every crossroads, to every man who wants to run a show even one day a week.

"We are not trying to play up any separate or exclusive feature to the detriment of our regular service, and the class of stuff we have put in proves it. Our manufacturers can place more money in quality of production, because we do not have to maintain a complete and separate overhead expense. We house everything under the Mutual home, and we point out to the exhibitor that he can run our features and our regular program also. We are putting into the regular program all the time the special drawing power stuff that enables a man to show it in front of his theater and along with it we carry one long feature a week to suit the class of houses that can pay for it. We can cover every known condition. Since Mr. Freuler has come in we have established seven additional sub-branches, giving us access to territory we could not hope to reach with facility from our buying offices."

Barney Gilmore

BARNEY GILMORE, the widely known stage star was, only a few years ago, among the popular and idolized comedy drama artists of the time. Mr. Gilmore was certainly a handsome man both on and off the stage and this quality alone had much to do with his popularity and placed him in the class commonly known as "matinee idols." Prior to his dramatic achievements Mr. Gilmore was well known on the vaudeville stage being, at the time, a member of the team Gilmore and Leonard, singing and conversation comedians but it was Mr. Gilmore's splendid singing voice that really carried the act. About twelve years ago Mr. Gilmore placed himself under the management of Stair and Havlin, at the time the leading promoters of popular stage plays. The first production Mr. Gilmore appeared in under the Stair and Havlin management was "Dublin Dan" in "The Gentleman from Ireland," after which followed each succeeding season, "Hogan's Ally," "McSorley's Infatuation" and "Kidnapped in New York." The later play he appeared in for five consecutive seasons with great success both to himself and his management. At the conclusion of the season 1913 Mr. Gilmore arranged for himself a comedy dramatic sketch and played the U-B-O time making his singing the principal element in the sketch notwithstanding he had two men and two women, besides himself in the sketch. During the idle period of last summer Mr. Gilmore became interested in the moving pictures and engaged to produce some of his stage plays he had appeared in and some he had not yet produced. Early the current season he signed with The Sterling Camera and Film Company to appear in two film productions, the first being a five-part New York detective story titled "The Game of Three" which was released September first and which the trade paper reviewers write in highly favorable terms as being unusually interesting and entertaining and photographically remarkable. The second production was Mr. Gilmore's own manuscript of his popular stage play "Kidnapped in New York" which is in five parts and will be released by the Sterling Camera and Film Company about October fifteenth.

CRAUFURD KENT IN PATHE GOLD ROOSTER PLAYS.

Craufurd Kent, who is appearing in the Pathe Gold Rooster Plays which are produced by Edward Jose, is another of those clean-cut, soft-spoken, gentlemanly young English actors that have been adopted by the New York theatrical public and made their own.

He was born in London and appeared there with success in "The Geisha" and various Gilbert and Sullivan operas. He was with the "Miss Gibbs" company and first came to the United States with that production. Later he was for three years with "The Pink Lady" and went with that company to London. An engagement with "Adele" followed, and he again returned to London with this production.

It is interesting to note that dramatic criticism in London was to the effect that "Mr. Kent's pronounced American accent hampers him in playing English parts!" The mother did not recognize her own child, in other words.

Mr. Kent had an important part in "Simon the Jester," an is now at work in "Nedra," both of them Edward Jose productions.

FILMING "A BUTTERFLY ON THE WHEEL."

Maurice Tourneur, who has directed so many distinguished features for the World Film Corporation, is at work on "A Butterfly on the Wheel." Heading the cast is Mr. Holbrook Blinn, who as a sterling actor, is known throughout the world. He has already proved himself one of the best screen actors in three of the World Film releases, namely, "The Boss," "The Ivory Snuff Box" and "The Family Cupboard." Vivian Martin will portray the feminine lead. Mr. John Hines, the inimitable comedian of the World Film forces, will have a prominent part and Miss June Elvidge will portray the second feminine lead.

World Film and Equitable Celebrate

Luncheon at the Astor Marks a Successful Year for the Parent Organization and an Auspicious Start for Its Offspring.

LEWIS J. SELZNICK, vice-president and general manager of the World Film Corporation, and Felix F. Feist, general manager of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, were the hosts at a luncheon given at the Hotel Astor on September 20, in recognition of the first anniversary of the World Film as a factor in the feature market, and to celebrate the auspicious beginning of the Equitable corporation. William A. Brady and Joseph L. Rhinock, directors of World Film, were among the guests that included representatives of all of the motion picture journals.

Under the general title of "Phantastic Parade of Phood," Harry Reichenbach and Jacob Wilk had devised a clever menu card, starting in reel one with Melon a la Trilby, following in reel two with Filet of Sea Bass Marguery en Selznick; chicken du Broulatour, Spuds el Spiegel, and so on to the conclusion, each course was given an appropriately filmish designation.

After the luncheon, Milton C. Work, chairman of the World Film executive committee, introduced Mr. Selznick, who in a brief address outlined the remarkable growth of the organization which just a year ago entered the field of feature photoplay producers. He referred to the valuable support given by Mr. Brady, the Shuberts and other allied concerns and expressed gratification at the manner in which exhibitors had received the first release of the Equitable. He intimated that in a few weeks the World Film would be prepared to make an announcement of great interest to the trade.

Toastmaster Work next introduced Mr. Brady, who spoke of the future of pictures with perfect confidence. He said that wherever he went he found conditions to be practically the same—all in favor of the screen at the expense of the stage. He said that when theatrical men still declared that pictures were a passing fad, certain to die out, he was inclined to laugh at them and think how little they appreciated the actual situation. Mr. Rhinock, who is asociated with the Shuberts as well as the World Film, referred to Mr. Selznick in the highest terms, as a man of remarkable capacity and energy and unquestionable fairness in all of his business dealings.

In presenting Mr. Feist, Toastmaster Work said that Mr. Selznick had insisted that the great need of a company such as the Equitable was just the right man in the office of general manger. Mr. Feist was introduced as the one man in all the country eminently fitted for the position. The general manager spoke modestly of the ideals of the new producing corporation and said that rather than promise too much he was ready to be judged by results. Mr. Reichenbach closed the speechmaking with a few characteristic remarks, at once frank and humorous.

Those present were Lewis J. Selznick, William A. Brady, B. N. Busch, Henry F. MacNamara, Felix F. Feist, Milton C. Work, Joseph L. Rhinock, M. Selznick, Jacob Wilk, H. Winik, Henry J. Brock, W. F. Newman, G. W. Newgrass, Harry Reichenbach, G. W. Lederer, M. E. Hoffman, James L. Hoff, Harry C. Drum, Harry Ennis, Joshua Lowe, A. S. Aronson, Fred J. Beecroft, Fred L. Stine, Tracy Lewis, P. B. Newman, Peter Milne, Stuart N. Lake, John W. Semler, Charles R. Condon, Lynde Denig and C. O. Kracke.

EDISON COMPANY BACK FROM VIRGINIA.

Harry Beaumont, Edison director, and company, have just returned from Norfolk, Va., whither they voyaged to take the scenes on board ship, going and coming, for the director's new feature, "The Land of Adventure," which concerns the amusing and dramatic experiences of young Americans in Central American republics. The picture, which was written by Mr. Beaumont himself, promises several novel effects which have already characterized the work so far of this actor turned director. Edward Earle will carry the burden of the play; others on the trip, cast, are Margaret Prussing, William Fables, Jean Dumar, James Harris, Johnnie Walker and Guido Colluci. An amusing incident of the trip was the near tragedy caused by a Southerner, his wits dulled with soothing wine. In one scene, a gun is thrust through the door of the smoking room and waved from side to side in threatening way. The Southerner awoke from his seat couch, saw the gun and, thinking it real danger, pulled his own and blazed away, dangerously close to Edward Earle and Margaret Prussing before he could be repressed.

Essanay Forecast

Summary of Offerings for the Last Quarter of the Current Year—Many Interesting Subjects.

GEORGE K. SPOOR, president of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, announces that the company has arranged for an usual number of strong releases for the next three months, or the balance of the year 1915. Essanay will release 181 reels in October, November and December. There will be produced 58 reels in October, 61 in September and 62 in December. The photoplays will include works by the greatest writers of the period as well as dramatizations of the old masters. Such authors as Edgar Allan Poe, F. Marion Crawford, Henry Oyen, Clinton Dangerfield, George Ade and H. S. Sheldon are among those whose creations will be put into photoplay form.

Among the best of the multiple reel photoplays which will be released are "In the Palace of the King," by F. Marion Crawford, and in which E. J. Ratcliffe, Richard C. Travers and Arleen Hackett star; "The Raven," by Edgar Allan Poe, in which Henry B. Walthall takes the lead; "Tides That Meet," by Clinton Dangerfield, Bryant Washburn leading; "The Family Divided," taken from H. S. Sheldon's play, "The House Divided," featuring Edna Mayo and Bryant Washburn; "The Village Homestead," by Joseph Byron Totten and featuring Darwin Karr; "The Old Sin," by H. Tipton Steck, presenting John Lorenz and June Keith, and "The Great Deceit," written by Edward T. Lowe, Jr., and featuring Warda Howard and John Lorenz.

There also will be forthcoming the George Ade Fables in Slang, the Dreamy Dud cartoons and scenic pictures, the western dramas by G. M. Anderson, the western comedies as well as Essanay-Chaplin photocomedies.

A new series of cartoons also will be introduced under the title of Essanay's Canimated Nooz Pictorial. This series, drawn by Wallace A. Carlson, author of the Dreamy Dud pictures, will be a burlesque on current topics of the day. They will be five hundred feet in length and coupled with five hundred feet of scenic. These are scenes taken in the Rockies of the Canadian Northwest.

There are a score of directors now at work, six more having been added to the company roll. Because of the magnitude of many of its productions, particularly "In the Palace of the King," for which both Chicago studios were utilized as well as a large out-door temporary palace, eight assistants working all the time to aid Director Fred E. Wright, other directors were kept busy taking out-of-door scenes and then working during the night on the indoor settings.

The new Essanay studio, which will be 350 feet long and 175 feet wide, with a floor space of 61,250 square feet, is being pushed as rapidly as possible in order to give plenty of room for the production of plays. This is the largest indoor studio, lighted by artificial lamps, ever built, and it will accommodate a dozen directors working at the same time.

FRITZ ORLAMOND.

New Technical Director of Gaumont Studios.

Announcement was made recently that Fritz Orlamond had been appointed chief technical director of the Gaumont Company, that is releasing its entire output exclusively through the Mutual Film Corporation. Mr. Orlamond, during the year that he has been affiliated with the Gaumont Company, has made a pleasing record for himself and has won a host of friends throughout the various branches of the industry.

His first work at the studios was in the comedy star company, in which he played and directed with a master hand. Following this work he became an important member of the stock company in its heavy dramas. During this work, his masterly understanding of the technique of the studio caused him to be appointed assistant to the director. He has continued in this capacity for some time, until the complete reorganization of the Gaumont forces.

With the addition of several directors and producing companies, it was found necessary to have one man in general charge of the studio, and Mr. Orlamond was appointed. This appointment finds great gratification among the actors, all of whom have the greatest confidence and regard for the new member of the Gaumont staff.

W. H. Swanson Returns to New York

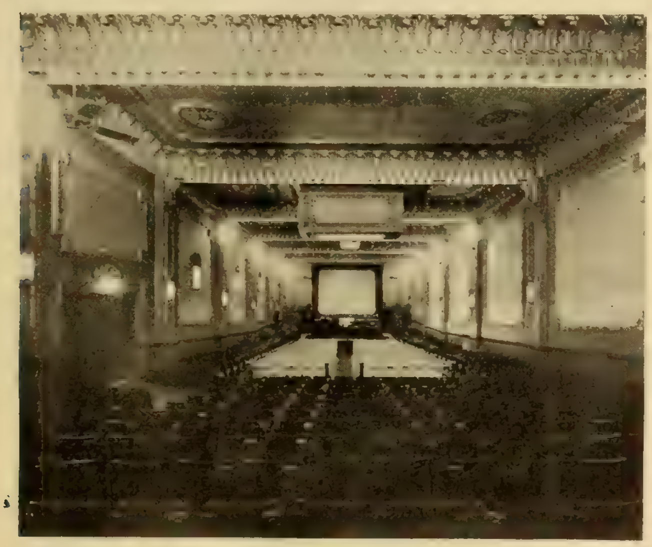
Former Exchange Man and Film Manufacturer Has Been Acquiring Western Theaters—Talks on Conditions.

AFTER an absence from New York of several months William H. Swanson recently returned to the city. A World man met him on Broadway Monday in excellent health and spirits. He had last seen him in Los Angeles, where the old-time exchange man and film manufacturer was busy compounding a wonderful drink for a couple of friends—and then, after the declaration that he was on the wagon, regretting his inability to join them. He smiled as he watched the two doing some rapid thinking; plainly discretion was battling with valor in an effort to drive them up on the wagon with him.

Mr. Swanson has had a rather strenuous "vacation," altogether. He admitted that he now controlled a baker's dozen of large theaters in the west, but when asked if he was all through declined to make any promises as to the future. The houses that are now under the Swanson banner are the American, Rex and Liberty, Salt Lake; Majestic, Grand Junction, Col.; Rex, Greeley, Col.; Grand, Pueblo, Col.; Rex, Leadville, Col.; Rex, Raton, Col.; Plaza and Theatorium, Denver; Rex, Albuquerque, N. M.; Teatro, Phoenix, Arizona, and the new $200,000 Rex of Butte, Mont. None of these houses has a seating capacity of less than 1,000, running up to 3,100 for the American of Salt Lake.

William H. Swanson.

The big exhibitor says he is putting all his houses on a New York basis or on the basis of the best theaters in any large city. For instance, he is putting a uniformed man in front of each house. In the American he is making an addition to the organ that will cost $20,000. In the two other Salt Lake theaters he is installing ten-thousand-dollar Fotoplayers. In the Rex of Greeley and the Majestic of Grand Junction five-thousand-dollar Fotoplayers are being put in. Other large sums are being expended on the chain of houses.



Interior, Liberty Theater, Salt Lake City, Utah.

The new Rex in Butte will seat not less than 2,000 persons. It will be built of steel and concrete, and will contain the latest improvements. It will be situated in the business center, on West Park street. While the plans have not been entirely worked out, it has been decided that the upper stories will be devoted to purposes other than those of the theater.

"How do I find conditions in the West?" replied Mr. Swanson to a question. "Well, I'll tell you, the cost of good film is getting to be a serious problem. The manufacturers of features are paying all kinds of money to their producers and players. That has to come out of the exhibitors. Just take a look at this statement of film cost for some of these houses. Here's one instance where, in my effort to give patrons the best, I have increased our former bills four and five fold. There seems to be an impression among some exchange heads that there must be practically the same returns in the smaller cities of the west as are obtained in the big centers of the east. I have found a sentiment that there is a waste in the cost of distribution for which the exhibitors have to pay.

"Then you must add to your film cost the expense of advertising as well. Here's a copy of one issue of one newspaper in the west. The advertising rates are a dollar an inch. You can see fifty-six inches devoted to my houses. Then the cost of a twenty-four sheet is $2.40, the posting is $1.20 more, aside from the expressage. It takes many of these properly to bill a show, and the cost mounts up. I believe the cost of features is one of the big questions facing exhibitors."

Mr. Swanson said he expected to remain in New York for several weeks.

Alexandra Carlisle With Equitable

ONE of the strangest contracts ever entered into by a stage celebrity and an engaging corporation was that consummated this week between the Equitable Motion Picture Corporation and the famous legitimate stage beauty—Alexandra Carlisle.

Miss Carlisle, who attained fame in England seven years ago, stepped into prominence in this country by reason of her unusual beauty and ability in "The Marriage Game" and recently as leading woman opposite John Drew in the Empire theater production of "Rosemary." Miss Carlisle, through her contractual engagements with Equitable, makes her debut on the screen under the guidance of Director Marshall Farnum, in Russell Edward Smith's scenarioization of Kate Jordan's novel, "Creeping Tides."

Alexandra Carlisle.

In the contract with Equitable, Miss Carlisle, who, by option, following her first effort if desirable to Equitable, becomes an exclusive Equitable star, demanded the insertion of a most curious clause. It reads thus:

"The Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation hereby grants to said Alexandra Carlisle the right to refuse to appear in any role, characterizing evil women, or indiscreet females. If the part apportioned her calls for the portrayal of an adventuress, evil creature, woman of the world or unfaithful wife, said Alexandra Carlisle will have the right to refuse to portray said role."

This clause is the first of its kind to appear in a motion picture contract and bears out the statement of Miss Carlisle's manager that within the past two months she refused to appear in the star parts of "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," for Klaw and Erlanger, in which she portrayed the role of the mother of an illegitimate child, and in "The Married Mistress," for William Elliott, both of which plays held unbounded opportunities for the delightful actress.

STOPPED PRIVATE SHOWING OF "HYPOCRITES."

The proposed private showing of the Bosworth, Inc., feature, "Hypocrites," which was to have been held at the Majestic theater, Columbus, Ohio, on Saturday morning, September 18, was summarily suppressed by Attorney General Turner, of the state of Ohio, who explained that he could not, under the law, permit the exhibition of the picture to take place. The show was called off accordingly.

"Zaza" Uninjured by Heat

Negative of Big Famous Players' Production Found Intact When Studio Vault Is Opened Following Fire.

WHEN the officials of the Famous Players Film Company opened the vault in the Twenty-sixth street studio three days after the fire which practically had destroyed the big plant they were delighted to discover that the negative of "Zaza" had escaped any mark of the intense heat to which it had been subjected. It was the only one of the eleven subjects in the vault that had been so fortunate. The feature, which will be released on October 4, features Pauline Frederick. On its making the company had expended an unusually large sum.

Scene from "Zaza," the Only One of Eleven Completed Features Wholly Saved from Famous Players Fire.

Miss Frederick, who had been distressed at the possibility of the destruction of the work to which she had given so much of her energy and skill, was correspondingly elated when she learned of its safety. "When we began the filming of the play for the first time I worked myself into a nervous tension that enabled me to put all my force into the role," said the actress. "With this tension gone, it practically would have been impossible for me to put the same spirit into a repetition of 'Zaza' as I did the first time."

When it was discovered that some of the scenes in "The White Pearl," in which Marie Doro was starred, had been injured in the fire, Messrs. Porter and Ford immediately began the work of replacing them. Mary Pickford also started work on an elaborate production of John Luther Long's "Madame Butterfly." Under the direction of Sidney Olcott the subject will be staged in America's most picturesque Japanese gardens. Hazel Dawn is busy on "The Masqueraders," by Henry Arthur Jones; Marguerite Clark on "Still Waters," and John Barrymore is being starred in "The Red Widow."

All the companies will remain at work in the east, the interiors being taken at the Yonkers' studio. It is expected that the new plant at 225th street will be completed by January 15. Its construction will be hastened by employment of double shifts.

PLIMPTON TO RELEASE THROUGH AUTHORS.

The Authors' Film Company, Inc., which has been so successful in its new method of express distribution with Walker Whiteside's "The Melting Pot" feature, announces that contracts have been signed with Horace G. Plimpton, formerly general director for the Edison Company, who has just formed what will be known as Plimpton Epic Pictures, Inc., whereby it will manufacture big features with big stars exclusively for the Authors' Film Co., Inc., and its express distribution. These will be released only through this firm.

FRANK FILM RULED OUT.

Justice Cohalan, of the New York Supreme Court, has denied the petition for an injunction to restrain Commissioner Bell, of New York City, interfering with the exhibition of the so-called Frank pictures, the showing of which was prevented by the Commissioner some weeks ago. The court said in his brief opinion in the matter, that it was his view that no good purpose could be served by the production of the picture, and that the Commissioner of Licenses acted reasonably and properly within his powers in suppressing them.

Hoffman Returns From Long Trip

Manager of Universal Exchanges Reports Many Exhibitors Turning from Features to Regular Program.

AFTER a trip, during which he visited every Universal exchange in the United States and Canada, M. H. Hoffman, manager of exchanges, has returned to his desk. The object of Mr. Hoffman's trip was to study conditions of the exchanges and to get acquainted with the seventy-two exchangemen who are responsible for the enormous output of this great organization. He met every one of his men.

The manager says he was especially interested in the bookings of the features and was greatly surprised at the large number of houses which are refusing to run features, preferring to stick to the regular program, with an occasional feature. "The features have lost their importance because of their being released daily by some of the concerns," says Mr. Hoffman. "The Universal is content to release one feature a week on the regular program, and this has met with success all over the country.

M. H. Hoffman.

"An exhibitor with a house that has a seating capacity of only three or four hundred—or even six hundred—who thinks that he can keep up with every big feature, every day, is thinking a lot of trash. He discovers eventually that he has to return to the program and the business his house will stand. The sooner the exhibitor learns what his business needs the quicker the moving picture industry will be standardized. During my trip I was greatly surprised by the manner in which some exhibitors conduct their business. I showed some of them how to advertise effectually, and have made arrangements with the exchanges to employ expert publicity men whose duties will be to assist both the exchangemen and the exhibitor, without any charge to the exhibitor.

"I found some of our exchanges had expanded so much that they needed more room, more facilities and more help. The exchanges in Detroit, St. Louis, Denver, Indianapolis and Toronto have had to move into larger quarters. Certain parts of the country, west and south, I found exchanges were in need of more film to handle the business, so I established additional buying offices in those places."

SELIG SUES MUTUAL.

The Selig Polyscope Company, through Nathan Burkan, its attorney, on Tuesday filed in the county clerk's office a summons and complaint in a suit for $25,000 damages and an injunction against the Mutual Film Corporation and the American Film Company, Incorporated.

The plaintiff alleges that it has the exclusive right of dramatization for motion picture purpose of Meredith Nicholson's novel, "The House of a Thousand Candles," and that the film of the motion picture production was released by it on August 23. In the meantime, so it is alleged, the defendants made arrangements to produce and distribute the play entitled, "The House of a Thousand Scandals." The plaintiffs claim that the use of the latter title is a manifest infringement on their rights and ask for damages as aforesaid and an injunction restraining the defendants from using it further.

Joe DiPisa is handling the publicity.

A Progressive Supply House

Picture Theater Equipment Company's New York Store Contains Everything for the Theater but the Film.

IT was an interesting half hour a Moving Picture World man spent with H. T. Edwards at the headquarters of the Picture Theater Equipment Company, 19 West Twenty-third street, New York. Mr. Edwards' most complete establishment seems to be the last word in equipment for the exhibitor who wants for his theater the best that is to be had. The Picture Theater Equipment Company has grown fast because it has grown with the industry whose needs it has aimed to supply. It has done more—it has sought to anticipate those needs, to put before the theater owner, and in thoroughly workable form, those "long-felt wants" the necessity for which he discovers in his everyday experience of catering to the public. Mr. Edwards has built up his business by reason of adhering to certain standards, and one of his principal rules has been the injunction to all customers: "If it isn't right, don't hesitate, send it back—we will make it right."

"We sell here everything in the motion picture line with the exception of film," said Mr. Edwards. "If desired, we will build the theater, but of course as a rule we equip the house, supplying every known sort of apparatus. We ship not only all over this country, but anywhere." Besides the New York quarters Mr. Edwards now has a large store at 158 Pearl street, Buffalo, which is busy supplying the many exhibitors in its territory.

The show window of the Picture Theater Equipment Company attracts much attention from the passing throngs. Prominently displayed is the new Power's 6B. There is a pyramid of carbons, showing the various sizes. Then, too, there are a safety fireproof rewind made by Williams, Brown & Earle, Inc.; a W. & S. vending machine, a spotlight, many lenses and general supplies.

Inside the store are found projection machines of Power, Simplex, Motiograph, Edison and Standard makes. There are picture frames and stands, plain and ornamental. Of these latter, two are of striking design, and handsomely carved. In size they are for one-sheet and three-sheet. A Wotton Rexolux, made by the Electric Products Company, of Cleveland, is prominent. There is a revolving stand for programs and announcements. Rheostats of all makes are seen, as well as the Fort Wayne Compensarc, Power's Inductor, Edison transformers, double dissolvers and ticket choppers, film containers for operating room, ozonators, carrying cases, film cleaners and pads, rewinders, including the safety device; Model B gas outfits, metal signs, attractively enameled in colors; carbons, Electra, Bio and Arco B; carrying cases, fire extinguishers, and an unusually large assortment of lenses.

The Exhibitor's Box Office Record is of Mr. Edwards' design and is most comprehensive. It is loose-leafed and enables an owner to tell just where he stands at any time of the year. There are theater tickets seemingly without end. Mr. Edwards makes a specialty of machine oils, if it may be said he makes a specialty of any one sort of equipment. He has a brand of his own for which there is a wide sale. There are screens and all parts of all machines, and many types of theater chairs. One of the novelties is the Motion Picture-scope, a complete projection outfit comprised in an asbestos-lined suitcase. This is having a wide sale among traveling men, who by hooking on to an incandescent wire can put on a perfect picture.

It's a fine store at 19 West Twenty-third. One of the factors contributing to making it so is the atmosphere of neatness. Everything in the establishment is continually under the polishing cloth—and everything shines.

WALTER HAMPDEN, KNICKERBOCKER STAR.

Knickerbocker Star Features will be responsible for the screen debut of another Broadway star with the release of their three-reel feature, "The Dragon's Claw," in which Mr. Walter Hampden takes the leading part.

Early in life Hampden left New York to begin his theatrical career in England in a repertory company, under F. R. Vincent's management, which has fed the English stage with its best actors. In 1904 he took London by storm when he made his great debut at the Adelphi theater in "The Prayer of the Sword." While there he also played in Hall Caine's "The Prodigal Son" and "The Bondman."

But Hampden was anxious to return to America, his native land, and in 1907 brought over with him "The Servant in the House," which he persuaded Henry Miller to put on. In this he won an enviable reputation on the American stage and the theater-going public from coast to coast remember his wonderful interpretation of Manson in this production.

His acting in "The Master Builder" at the Bijou theater in New York with Madame Nazimova along with other plays with her brought him more popularity. This was followed by a short season with Viola Allen, when he was featured in Clyde Fitch's last play, "The City." After a successful season in the lead of the curious Chinese drama, "The Yellow Jacket," Hampden has joined the Knickerbocker forces, adding one more to the list of Broadway celebrities who have harkened to the call of the camera.

PATHE SCENARIO MAN WRITES A SONG.

Douglas Bronston, of the Pathe scenario department, is a versatile genius. He wrote a song for "Neal of the Navy," the big serial success, that was so good Pathe has had it published by Berlin, Watterson & Snyder. The song, like the serial, is making good.

More Horsley Players

Producer of Centaur Pictures Engages Three New Stars and a Director.

DAVID HORSLEY continues to add the names of stars to his already long list. For the past month each week has brought an announcement from him of new acquisitions to his producing staff, and this week is no exception. The latest to enter into contracts with him are Mabel Van Buren, Donald Bowles, Grace Gibson and Marvell Spencer, all photoplayers, and Carl M. LeVinness, the director.

Miss Mabel Van Buren comes to Mr. Horsley from the Jesse L. Lasky studios, where she had been engaged for some time playing leading parts in the Lasky features released on the Paramount program. While all of her characterizations were of a high standard of excellence perhaps her greatest picture success was scored in the role of "The Girl," in "The Girl of the Golden West." In this release she attained great dramatic heights, playing the difficult part with so thorough an understanding and finish that critics proclaimed her unsurpassable in the character.

Besides "the girl" she played leading feminine roles in other Lasky productions, among them "The Woman," in which she portrayed the title part.

Donald Bowles.

Miss Van Buren's leading man is Donald Bowles, a great stock favorite in Los Angeles, where he appeared with the Burbank theater organization. He has had much experience on the speaking stage. He began his career when he was seventeen with the Herald Square theater company, New York, which comprised Amelia Bingham, Blanche Walsh, Edward Abeles, Aubrey Boucicault, Edgar Davenport, Frank Mordaunt and Lucius Henderson, and was then playing a revival of the big success, "Diplomacy."

From New York Mr. Bowles went to Chicago to become leading man for Minnie Dupree, who was starred in Gen. Chas. King's "Fort Frayne." Then Edwin Thanhouser, the film magnate of today, but then guilding spirit of the Thanhouser Stock Company in Milwaukee, engaged him for his company.

After playing ninety weeks with the Thanhouser Company, Mr. Bowles "split" a season with the Havlin Stock in St. Louis and Her Majesty's Stock Company in Montreal. Next he joined the Jas. O'Neil Company in Buffalo and came to the Pacific Coast with them.

Marvell Spencer.

After the San Francisco fire, Mr. Bowles went into vaudeville and played over the Orpheum Circuit in a sketch called "Thou Shalt Not Judge." Then Mr. Oliver Morosco engaged him for his Burbank Theater Stock Company in Los Angeles. Here Mr. Bowles remained for four years and it is this company which he leaves to join Mr. Horsley.

Miss Grace Gibson, another of Mr. Horsley's new players, is considered one of the most beautiful actresses in motion pictures. She was formerly with the Vitagraph Company, but later went into vaudeville, which she leaves to return to pictures, this time through the medium of Mr. Horsley's company.

Miss Marvell Spencer, the fourth of this week's acquisitions, was formerly with the Eclair Company. She played the leads in "The Beginning of the End," and was featured with George Larkins in "Red Tape," "The Unpardonable Sin," etc. Miss Spencer is of the ingenue type and shines particularly in characters that require winsomeness and prettiness.

Carl M. LeVenniss, the latest director to join Mr. Horsley's organization, is an old Reliance man. Mr. LeVenniss started in with Thanhouser at New Rochelle and then went to the Reliance studio in New York. When D. W. Griffith took charge of the Reliance Mr. LeVenniss was one of the few directors to remain. Later Mr. LeVenniss joined the Eclair Co., with whom he remained until his connection with Mr. Horsley.

Innovation in Theater Equipment

Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company's 1916 Model Now Ready for Delivery.

THE 1916 model of the Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register is now ready for delivery. At the offices of the company, 1476 Broadway, New York City, there is being demonstrated one of the twin type of ticket selling devices, which shows the improvements that have been made in the 1916 machine. These appear to be more in the nature of refinements rather than a departure from the style of the preceding model. One of the principal innovations is the automatic control by means of a key which operates a switch. This key turns on the power and at the same time locks the magazine, putting the tickets and the clock recording their sale beyond the possibility of tampering. In the cut shown herewith, from a picture of the twin model, the motor is seen at the lower left-hand corner. The lock into which fits the controlling key, is in the outside center.

Twin Model Automatic.

The present machine is the development of four years. The first device was operated by a foot lever. Last year came the electrical control, substituting the pressure of a key for the more laborious operation involved in the manipulation of the earlier models. "Tickets are delivered conveniently to the public and satisfactorily to the proprietor," said Sales Manager E. S. Bowman to a World man. "The manager has perfect control of his business at all times. There is no chance for a leakage. We are making machines up to the quadruple type, which means that a manager may sell four classes of tickets in series up to five. Each magazine carries four thousand, or if necessary, five thousand tickets. These are accessible only to the one holding the key.

"If a manager prefers he may have his tickets numbered serially. This will enable him, by using those inscribed "Good only on date sold," to protect himself against counterfeiting or other evils. Others who wish to conceal as closely as possible the amount of business being done use no numbers."

Mr. Bowman pointed out, as illustrating the belief in the efficiency and economy of the machines of his company by larger interests, that the two score Marcus Loew houses and the fifteen theaters of the Strand Company, are using automatic equipment. "Our reports indicate that the exhibitors who as yet control but one house are just as well satisfied as are the executives of circuits," added Mr. Bowman.

The factory of the Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company is in St. Louis. Besides the office in New York the company is represented in St. Louis, Pittsburgh and Chicago. The officers are Samuel Bowman, president; Herbert W. Cost, treasurer; S. H. De Roy, vice president; E. S. Bowman, sales manager. The vice president and sales manager are in active charge of the business.

Art in Motion Picture Advertising

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Furnishes in Last Week's Issue a Strong Example of Up-to-Date Publicity.

ONE of the most artistic advertisements that has ever decorated a number of the Moving Picture World was the nineteen-page insert of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., in the issue of September 25. That number, by the way, which is the final one of Volume 25, contained in all 212 pages, with two exceptions the largest issue of this publication to that date. The exceptions were the Pacific Coast Number, of July 10, this year, and the convention number of 1914.

The Pathe insert contained on its initial page a portrait of General Manager Gasnier and a list of the serials that the company has produced, with such notable successes: "The Perils of Pauline," "The Exploits of Elaine," "The New Exploits of Elaine," "The Romance of Elaine," "Who Pays?" and "Neal of the Navy," with, coming, "The New Adventures of J. Rufus Wallingford." Two pages are devoted to announcing the first Gold Rooster Play, "The Galloper," featuring Clifton Crawford, supported by Fania Marinoff. Two pages are devoted to the second Gold Rooster Play, "Via Wireless," featuring Gail Kane and Bruce McRae. The same space is given over to Heinie and Louie Comedies.

Then there are pages exploiting "Neal of the Navy," the Pathe News, Pathe-Bray Cartoons, the Balboa Amusement Producing Company, makers of "Neal of the Navy;" the Arnold Daly Series, produced by Arnold Daly, the first of which will be "An Affair of Three Nations;" the Frohman Amusement Corporation, which announces as its October release through Pathe "John Glayde's Honor;" Edward Jose tells of the three Pathe subjects he has prepared—"The Beloved Vagabond," "Simon the Jester," and "The Closing Net;" Donald MacKenzie tells of "The Spender" and "Mary's Lamb," to follow "The Galloper;" Mittenthal Film Company, Inc., announce their one-part comedies under the Starlight Brand; Wharton, Inc., of Ithaca, N. Y., call attention to past performances with three Elaine serials and announce the new Wallingford, featuring Max Figman, Lolita Robertson and Burr McIntosh; George Fitzmaurice announces "At Bay," to follow "Via Wireless;" and there is a description of the Feature Film Corporation, of which Edward Jose is director and producer.

The advertisement is dignified in tone as well as artistic in conception and execution; and it is a striking example of that advance in the art of advertising in the motion picture industry which is so marked these days.

BLOCK ISLAND'S MOTION PICTURE SHOW.

As a summer resort, Block Island, a particularly interesting bit of terra firma which lies some miles east of Long Island and south of Rhode Island, of which state it is a part, is better known to New Englanders. Steamers from Providence, R. I., and New London, Conn., make regular trips and frequent excursions to this resort, supplemented by almost daily steamers from New York, so that, during the summer vacation season several thousand resorters gather at its commodious hotels. The native population numbers but little more than fourteen hundred souls, most of whom gain a livelihood from the fishing industry. With so few in its permanent population there is but little incentive for promoters of amusements to establish on Block Island any kind of a paying business, hence it is therefore about ten months in the year Block Island possesses "no place to go," except fishing.

EMPIRE THEATRE

Fountain Square, Block Island, R. I.

Notwithstanding these unfavorable conditions a pictureman, taking his annual vacation after a rather hard season managing a picture show in Providence, noticed that the several thousand visitors, of which he was one, really had "no place to go" and took a chance in establishing a picture show in what might have been an old warehouse. It was some venture, for the season lasted but six weeks, but he took the chance and equipped his house with about seven hundred seats, a Powers machine, which he brought over from Providence, and went to it. The result of the first season encouraged him to try it again. Now the Empire theater on one corner of the Public Square at the Old Harbor is in flourishing condition—for at least six weeks—and is the one and only professional amusement enterprise of Block Island. Its proprietors are Messrs. Spitz & Stedman, well known and successful exhibitors of Providence. They run an excellent program of licensed pictures at the Empire, for an admission of 10 to 15 cents during the week and 15 to 25 cents on Saturday evenings. Two shows were given each evening and the house was usually crowded.

Saul Schiavone

Saul Schiavone.

SAUL SCHIAVONE says he does not like the war; he is now a full-fledged American, and a married man with a baby daughter. So all the charms and glamor of shining armour, coincident with joining the Italian colors, has been totally discounted in favor of lending his artistic talents to all that is artistic in the varied life of a property man and the ever-increasing demands of mother.

Since his entree into the film world, he has made rapid strides, starting with Gaumont under Mr. Levering, the director, where he stayed for quite a long time. He has been successfully connected with several leading film producers.

He and his two cousins left Italy as mere boys, and struggling without any help, they have made good in every sense. One being the artist for one of America's leading film corporations, while the second has had his oils hung in the National Gallery, and invited to all the galleries of America. Schiavone, until two years ago, well known in New England for church paintings and color designs, has now the high place Italians have always been given for all that stands for art and the beautiful in design.

Schiavone is making a tour of our leading studios to get a glimpse of what others are doing, and will then come back and try to go one better.

MOSS TO SCREEN "BOOTS AND SADDLES" AND "THE UNDERTOW."

"Boots and Saddles" and "The Undertow," which Eugene Walters wrote, and which were given stage productions several seasons ago, are to be filmed by the B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation, who have secured the screen rights.

The author, Mr. Walters, will be remembered for having given to the stage such triumphs as "Paid in Full," "The Easiest Way" and "Fine Feathers."

The screening of both productions will take place in the identical locales in which the original dramas were supposed to have been enacted.

DR. DUMBA IN HEARST-SELIG WEEKLY.

In the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial to be released September 16, Dr. Constantin T. Dumba, Austrian Ambassador, is seen visiting the State Department to explain charges brought against him. The scenes showing the Ambassador are unusually interesting and timely. President Wilson, together with Secretary of State Lansing, is also seen attending a baseball game in an endeavor to ease his mind from the present unusual cares of state. There are also some interesting and educational war scenes filmed along the Serbian battle line.

Lubin Stages Big Scenes in Newport

Summer Colony of the "Four Hundred" Greatly Entertained by Company of Picture Players Producing "The Peril."

"THE PERIL" in the making drew a number of people to the upper Point shore, Newport, R. I., the other day, where Lubin street is in temporary existence. Many were in automobiles, and so the collection for the American ambulance fund in France received a good start, with expectations of an inflation tonight, when the more spectacular scenes are scheduled. The private grounds were patrolled by guards from the Training Station, while a corps of citizens' money-takers were on duty. The immediate field for the participants in the picture was substantially roped off and patrolled by another guard. Within this field a horse belonging to the illuminating company indulged in a brief runaway during one of the battles, since it had not been trained to such a commotion.

First came the flight from the street in the attacked village, in which local actors formed the populace who dashed from one end of the street to the other to escape the oncoming invasion. There was action all right, and then came fighting, during which more or less wrecking of the more fragile parts of the structures resulted.

More battle scenes followed in which the troops drove the sailors to a retreat. There were several companies of naval apprentices, some in "whites" and some attired as infantry in khaki and campaign hats. This scene opened with the army massed at the far end of the street and the church as a background, while lying in the street were the killed and wounded of the previous fighting. The soldiers steadily advanced, driving the sailors from the street and from the buildings, where they were taking shelter. Some of the sailors even tumbled from the windows to make the scene more realistic. While the fighting was going on there was a continuous discharge of rifles, the boys having all the ammunition they could dispose of and the din was deafening.

This was as things appeared in the street at the south end of which were four picture cameras and several hand cameras all making records. The men were grinding away at the cranks while the other workers were pulling slides and taking exposures as fast as they could, intent on securing views of what was transpiring.

The main part of the happening was not photographed. General Director Terwilliger stood near the cameras, armed with a megaphone, while his assistants, picture men and naval officers, were about in the wings, as if they were prompting the action of the men in the street and all working to inspire realism in the scene.

In the afternoon another section of the picture was taken, but the location was shifted, being this time at the Training Station, where another fight of inhabitants was posed. In the evening at eight more fighting bombs were exploded, the buildings becoming more wrecked every moment, fire breaking out and thus it wrought before one's eyes the waste which comes from the invasion of an enemy in time of war.

NEW V-L-S-E SALESMEN.

Two new members have been added to the ever-expanding sales force of the V-L-S-E, Inc. Thev are P. B. Elliot, who will be attached to the Cincinnati office, and E. B. Shaw, who joins the Cleveland branch. Mr. Elliot recently resigned as manager of the Boston branch of the World Film Corporation. Previous to that, he was connected with their New York and Indianapolis exchanges. In going to Cincinnati, Mr. Elliot resumes his association with R. S. Shrader, the manager of that branch, with whom he worked when both were World Film men. Mr. Shaw, who is to be stationed at Cleveland, has for some time been connected with the Mutual Film Corporation, in the Buffalo office.

DIRECTOR CAPELLANI'S BROTHER ARRIVES FROM FRANCE.

Charles Capellani, one of the leading members of the Comedie Francaise Paris Stock Company, a brother of Director Capellani of the World Film forces, has just arrived from France on the French liner Chicago. M. Capellani is to be associated with the French theater in the city during the coming season. He appeared in the French version of "Kismet," playing the part of Haji, the beggar, which was done in this country by Otis Skinner. M. Capellani is accompanied by his mother, who is making her first visit to this country.

Two Sides of Selznick

By Harry L. Reichenbach.

THERE are two Lewis Selznicks. There is L. J. (Equitable) Selznick, then there is Lewis J. (World Film) Selznick. The undiscovered side of Lewis Selznick is the Equitable side. This because Mr. Selznick has been allowing Equitable to move along, with Feist and Spiegel at the helm, he remaining discreetly in the background—but spiritually and physically present at each and every intimate move.

Lewis J. (Equitable) Selznick, is thinking new thought. The Lewis J. (World Film) Selznick is another personality. It is no Dr. Jekyll-Mr. Hyde case. There is no Mr. Hyde. But there is a great and glowing depth to Selznick that World Film did not bring out during its year in public life.

This depth is the thoughts and actions of Selznick with his newest creation—"Equitable."

Lewis J. Selznick (forgetting he was ever connected in any way with World Film, for the nonce) spends his nights at the offices of Equitable. There, when other executives are snoring the snore of hard-earned repose, Selznick, Feist and Spiegel, dream out the early future of their mighty enterprise. Enough innovations have been instituted by this trio to establish any concern in the hearts of its clients:

1—Traveling press agents who work gratis with the exhibitor at his own theater.

2—Communication with three million daily paper readers by the medium of an expensive rotogravure supplement which will be issued October 9 with five hundred first-class city newspapers.

3—Direct representation with local dailies, procuring for them special advertising rates in their own cities, arranging a closer communion between exhibitor and editor and furnishing high-grade stereotyped material for quick insertion, on a plane equal to the highest class traveling attractions.

4—Eliminating absolutely the profit on accessories so that the exhibitor is encouraged to spread himself in exploitation.

5—Avoiding the engaging of new and untried material for the screen productions. Gathering of tried stars and known support, so that poorly screening personalities will not appear.

6—Placing of social mentors in Equitable studios to aid and instruct directors to procure proper types, period articles, scenic environments in keeping with the time and locale of plays.

7—Engaging of noted artists for the sketching, from imagination, climacteric moments from the play, for advertising material.

8—Establishing location departments at the parent office to procure, with the least effort and greatest effect, locations for the six working companies of Equitable, so that a repetition or duplication of scenes is practically impossible owing to the general head supervising and inspecting each individual location chosen.

9—Establishing a central employment agency for the hiring of supernumeraries so as to eliminate the grafting and irresponsible agent and unlicensed parasite who preys on the weaker employees.

10—The establishing of a sharing basis and participation in the profits plan that should urge every responsible employee to greater efforts.

11—Instituting a policy of stocking up well ahead with features ere one is sent over the program, in order to avoid the necessity of releasing a mediocre production owing to lack of productions on hand. Equitable is eight weeks ahead at all times.

These are actual developments in the short life of Equitable, and Lewis J. (Equitable) Selznick has borne his share of creative labor.

It was Selznick who procured "Trilby." It was Selznick who sat up, evening after evening, overseeing features—laying out the program with Feist and Spiegel, and who, by reason of his greater experience, was so potent a spirit in deriving, from the first ten Equitable pictures, an unusual and satisfactory diversity of stories, stars and titles as to appeal sufficiently to send his newest enterprise off to an overwhelming start.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

MASSACHUSETTS LEAGUE MEETING.

Will Discuss Plans to Prevent Adverse Legislation—Large Attendance Desired.

By Edwin H. McCloskey.

A MEETING of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts will be held in Rathbone Hall, Washington street, Boston, on Wednesday afternoon, September 29. The purpose of the meeting will be to plan for an active campaign against the enactment of any detrimental censorship bills in the legislature during the coming session. The meeting will be addressed by Granville P. MacFarland, personal representative of William R. Hearst, in Boston. Mr. MacFarland has been interested in the fight against censorship and during the fight of the past year ably supported the motion picture interests in both the news and editorial columns of the Boston American.

Mr. MacFarland has outlined a campaign which, with the co-operation of every exhibitor, ought to prove successful.

As election time is fast drawing near, it behooves every exhibitor in Massachusetts to do his utmost to work for the defeat of those legislators who were hostile to the moving picture business last year. Each exhibitor knows how the man from his district voted.

The legislators fear the power of the screen as well as the newspapers. They proved this when they displayed uneasiness at one of the committee hearings last season. One senator asked if it were true that the moving picture interests would project the pictures of hostile senators on the screens of their theaters and urge their defeat.

The screen is the most powerful of all mediums. The average person is more easily interested, instructed and convinced by pictorial arguments than by circulars or stump speakers. The exhibitors should realize the power that they control. They should learn the attitude of the candidates from their district on censorship. If one is hostile, it is not necessary to urge his defeat outright, but project the favorable candidate's slide and urge his election for the betterment of the community.

Last year, it was necessary to wage a bitter fight against censorship at the eleventh hour. Do not let matters be delayed this year. Every exhibitor should join in this fight. The work of last year was left to a few, while the proponents of the censorship bills turned out strong. Remember at one meeting over two hundred women alone were present and were recorded in favor of the censorship bill. At this meeting were there two hundred exhibitors present to voice their sentiments? Sorry to say there were not twenty-five.

If you expect to defeat censorship you will have to show your strength to the members of the legislature.

The censorship fight will be more bitter this year than ever before. The majority of the exhibitors fail to realize the hardships of censorship. This is expecially true of the majority of the smaller theater owners. They claim that the bill will not affect them. They really believe that the manufacturer will be the only one to suffer. Indeed, this is not true. The manufacturer will be the one who will not suffer and the small exhibitors will be hit hard. If the manufacturer cannot have all his products booked in Massachusetts, he will raise his prices and therefore will increase the overhead expense of operating the theater. He must make his profit.

During the fight last year, very few, if any, of the small exhibitors came out against the censorship bills. The work was all done by the exchangemen and the large exhibitors. President Ernest Horstmann, of the Exhibitors' League, was the leader in the fight, and if the bill had ever become a law, his concern would suffer the least. As head of the league he is working for the interests of all exhibitors and should receive at least the good wishes and co-operation of each and every one.

Members of the league are most lax in the payment of their dues. If they cannot help in the fight personally they might at least contribute the just assessments. It is not a hardship for any man to pay the small tax that is asked. Let every exhibitor in the state be present at the meeting on Wednesday and do his mite in this campaign against the greatest evil of the business, censorship.

NEW ASSOCIATION RESUMES LEAGUE'S WORK.

By Abraham Nelson.

THE Portland, Ore., down-town exhibitors held an informal meeting on Sept. 14 to discuss general business conditions and the change in prices which some managers intimate will go into effect soon. The Portland Amusement Company, controlling the Globe, American and Casino theaters, the People's Amusement Company, controlling the Star and People's theaters, and the Sunset, Majestic, Columbia, Circle and New Grand were represented.

The Portland Exhibitors' League, in the sense of being a working association, has been dissolved for some time and the managers of the downtown houses have affiliated themselves with the managers of the larger theaters and vaudeville houses, the Theatrical Managers' Association also being dissolved. The officers of the new association are Milton Seaman, of the Baker theater, president, and I. Leeser Cohan, of the Portland Amusement Company, secretary.

The Portland Protective Association was originally organized by the employers of union music, hotel and grill-room proprietors included, and at the termination of the musicians' disagreement, the success of the organization prompted the amusement men to continue it in the place of the Exhibitors' League and the Theatrical Managers' Association.

NATIONAL PRESIDENT HERRINGTON IN NEW YORK.

Both He and President Ochs, of the New York League, Approve of The Moving Picture World's Campaign Against the New Constitution.

NATIONAL President Frederick J. Herrington called at the office of The Moving Picture World upon his arrival in the city on Tuesday, September 20. Mr. Herrington has been very active in attending to the duties of his office ever since his election and has a strong grip on the situation.

"I am going to peg away," he said to a representative of The Moving Picture World, "until we have an organization such as we ought to have. I realize it's no easy task, but perseverance will accomplish a good deal. I want to have New York in the National League stronger than ever before, and that's why I am here."

Mr. Herrington later had a conference with the president of the New York organization, Lee A. Ochs. The plans of the national president and Mr. Ochs will be made known later.

Both Mr. Ochs and Mr. Herrington heartily approve of the campaign which The Moving Picture World is making against the adoption of the proposed new constitution. The details of the plan will be found on the editorial page of this issue. Mr. Ochs thinks that the campaign is well conceived and he hopes that the exhibitors all over the state will avail themselves of the offer which The Moving Picture World is making to the exhibitors. Mr. Ochs has himself appeared before legislative committees and he is well qualified to judge of the need and the probable results of a campaign such as is proposed by The Moving Picture World.

"It is well," said Mr. Ochs, "to let the politicians know that the motion picture interests are capable of striking back whenever their plain rights are invaded. We have been altogether too patient and too submissive in the past. I anticipate a good deal of hostile legislation in the coming session at Albany and if we moving picture men assist in defeating this new constitution at the polls I think it is more than likely that the men in Albany will sit up and take notice."

Meeting of Philadelphia Exhibitors

President Herrington Urges Discussion of Several Matters Requiring Immediate Decision.

All exhibitors residing in Philadelphia and the surrounding country are invited to attend a meeting to be held under the auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League at their headquarters, 1339 Vine street, Philadelphia, on Sunday, September 26, at 2 p. m. Many subjects of vital importance for the exhibitor will come up for discussion. The national president, F. J. Herrington, who is personally known to so many of the Philadelphia exhibitors, will be present at the meeting and will make an address. President Herrington is making a strong and conscientious effort to strengthen exhibitors' organizations everywhere, and he expects to be welcomed by a generous gathering of Philadelphia men.

NO OHIO LEAGUE CONVENTION AT CLEVELAND.

An announcement published in the last issue of the Moving Picture World that a convention of the Ohio State League would be held in Cleveland on October 19 and 20, brings a prompt denial from President Max Stern, of the Ohio branch, to the effect that the regular convention of the Ohio League will not be held until January, time and place yet to be determined. President Stearn says that he has no knowledge of any meeting to be held in Cleveland. Ohio exhibitors should be governed accordingly.

MILWAUKEE EXHIBITORS' ASSOCIATION ELECTS.

The Motion Picture Association of Milwaukee elected John H. Silliman, president of the Liberty theater, president. Other officers chosen were Phillip O. Gross, vice-president; B. K. Fischer, secretary; Harry D. Graham, treasurer; board of directors, Col. O. Preusser, Henry Trinz, Samuel Trinz and S. Grauman.

FOR EXHIBITORS IN NEW YORK STATE.

Exhibitors in the city and state of New York should read what The Moving Picture World wants to do for them and with them. Turn to the editorial page and read "An Appeal to New York Exhibitors."

Ethelmary Oakland

ONE of the most charming of the children in motion pictures is little Ethelmary Oakland, the blue-eyed, light-haired, little girl, who has a great big part to play, and plays it well, in the Charles K. Harris feature picture, "School Bells."

Ethelmary Oakland.

Ethelmary is only seven years old, but she has had one whole year of life on the stage behind her, young as she is. Her home was in the middle west. She was so pretty and so bright, that nearly everyone who met her mother would ask her mother why she did not train Ethelmary for the stage. Strangers would even stop on the street and ask the same question. So at length Ethelmary's mother decided that she would bring the child to New York to see what could be done. It was a simple matter, after having come to New York, and not long after their arrival, little Ethelmary was playing a real part with Madge Lessing in "Fads and Fancies." She played the role of "Belgium."

Ethelmary had appeared in several pictures before "School Bells." The most pretentious one, perhaps, was the feature written from the song by Charles K. Harris, "Always in the Way." She is having a scenario written especially for her by a well-known writer.

In "School Bells," Ethelmary plays the part of a little Dutch girl.

Edythe Sterling

TO STEP out of leading roles in dramatic productions and into the dangerous business of working with the beasts of the jungle is an undertaking few present-day screen actresses would care to attempt. That, however, is what pretty Edythe Sterling, late of the Western Lubin Company, did when she signed as leading woman with Mr. Franz in the production of Universal animal releases.

Edythe Sterling.

Miss Sterling was born in Kansas City in 1894, and it was in that city that she received her education. She was stage struck, went on and made good, which means that the quality "work" had a great deal to do in between. Her first parts of any size came during a three-season engagement with Weber and Rush, followed by a season with Mabel Hite in "A Knight for a Day." At the close of this engagement she saw what looked to her like "the handwriting on the wall," for she joined the forces of the St. Louis Motion Picture Company. She left that concern to accept a better offer with the Frontier Company where her work in the production of western photodrama caused trade journal reviewers to assert that in this particular line at least she had no peer. Then came her experience with the western Lubin Company, followed by her entrance as a regular citizen of Universal City.

Before Miss Sterling began work upon the production "The Queen of Jungleland" she was told of the uncertainty of action on the part of the animals and of the chances she was taking. Although unfamiliar with the temperaments of the lions and tigers used in the pictures, Miss Sterling laughed and said she would be ready for "the cats" at any time.

ACTIVITY AT THE LIBERTY PLANT.

The Liberty Motion Picture Company, Germantown, Philadelphia, has just completed the five-reeler entitled, "For Five Thousand Dollars a Year." The leading part in this photoplay is taken by Louis Huff, lately with the Lubin Manufacturing Company of Philadelphia. The story is said to be a strong domestic drama and is the work of Edward Tilton, who is likewise the author of "The Struggle," a play in which Mary Mannering made a splendid success some years ago and a picture portrayal of which is now being made by the Liberty Company.

"An American Gentleman," another production of the Liberty Motion Picture Company, with William Benelli in the leading role, has attained remarkable sucess, according to the Liberty officials.

Arrangements have been made for a long line of five-reel pictures by the Liberty Company, who at present are working two producing companies. Incidentally, a few single and split reels are being made for the independent trade.

QUICK WORK BY ANIMATED WEEKLY.

By reason of Wednesday being the release day of the Animated Weekly, Jack Cohen, Animated director, by quick work was able to put over a scoop on his contemporaries. The explosion in Seventh avenue, New York, under the temporary street, wherein a street car and several vehicles were dumped into the uncompleted subway and a number of persons killed, occurred at 8 o'clock. Mr. Cohen and three of his cameramen were just going on duty as they heard the reverberation. It was hardly fifteen minutes later before the quartet were on the job with cameras. They took 250 feet. That amount of film was abstracted from the issue of the Animated to be released on that day and the scenes of the explosion inserted.

The revised weekly was shown in the Strand on the evening of the day of the explosion.

Real Stories from Reel Studios

By Thornton Fisher.

IT WAS my privilege to spend an evening recently in the quaint little town of Cumberland, Md. The natives of the little city, on that particular evening, were strutting about like a flock of pouter pigeons on parade. I asked a man if the latest census report had shown a fifty per cent. increase in local population, or what was it caused the apparent conceit of his fellow citizens. Whereupon I was gently but firmly led to the entrance of a moving picture theatre, and pointing to a blazing banner, with disgust coloring his tone, he replied, "Don't you never read the papers?" Right away I tumbled. The poster in front said: "To-day! 'The Diamond from the Sky.'" And everybody knows it was their own former townsman, little Roy McCardell, who wrote it. So I knew what was ailing Cumberland.

Beatrice Van

BEATRICE VAN, engaged by President S. S. Hutchinson, of the American Film Company, as the feminine lead of the newly organized "Beauty" company No. 2, now releasing twice a week on the Mutual's new $8,000,000 program, makes her initial bow to Mutual audiences in "When His Dough Was Cake," released Sept. 11.

Beatrice Van.

This talented young blond beauty of the screen possesses exceptional ability as a film star, and enjoys the distinction of having been selected by so shrewd a judge of screen players as President Hutchinson, from a list of a score or more of well-known favorites placed before him.

Miss Van is not only talented, vivacious, beautiful, but she possesses an unlimited assortment of humor, and the ability to adapt herself to any role, regardless of how ludicrous it may seem. In following releases screened by the second Beauty company, Miss Van will continue to share honors with John Sheehan and John Steppling, who appear in her support in "When His Dough Was Cake," one of the most laughable comedies ever screened. Steppling will direct the staging of the second Beauty releases as well as play in them. As a dirctor, Steppling, judging by his work in "When His Dough Was Cake," will make just as much of a success as he has as a screen player.

BUHLER LIKES TO DO THIS.

In "Evidence," the F. Ray Comstock feature, which will be released September 20 on the World Film Program, Richard Buhler, the well-known classical actor who made his second appearance in films in that picture, had an opportunity to gratify one of the longings of his heart.

"It is traditional that an actor always wants to play roles which no one but himself feels he is perfectly qualified to play," says the actor. "For so long I have played what are termed 'rugged' parts, or classical roles such as Ben-Hur, in which I wore robes and other garments which were anything but modern, that I have really longed for an opportunity to appear dressed as an ordinary. well-bred man. Secretly, I think I appear to greater advantage in a dress suit than in a robe. In 'Evidence' I was a regular, modern English lord, and I wore a dress suit through almost the entire picture. The directors of the company say that they are very much delighted with the pictures. Now I will tell my friends who say that I am only good in a robe 'I told you so.'"

Mr. Buhler is working with Lubin now in a series of pictures from the stories of Rex Beach.

WHEN APPLEGATE MET ARMSTRONG.

Roy Applegate, who is playing the heavy lead opposite Kathryn Osterman in "The Bludgeon," which is being staged for the pictures at the Equitable studios, cherishes an unusual memory of Paul Armstrong, the playwright, and the author of "The Bludgeon," whose death occurred last week, after the picturization of his play had been in progress for several weeks. Mr. Applegate has an exceedingly difficult role to play, one taking a great deal of understanding and imagination. One day after he had completed a big scene, and stepped back exhausted out of the "set," a stranger reached out his hand and said, "That was great, old man. That's an unusually hard role to play, and I think you've got it just right." Mr. Applegate thanked the stranger, who continued to converse with him on various points of the play. At length the actor turned to the stranger and said, "You surely know a great deal about this play, don't you?" and the stranger answered, "I ought to, I am the author."

"There's a Picture Company in Town"

By Hanford C. Judson.

ONE of the World men is fond of the writings of John Burroughs, the Catskill Mountain naturalist, so he chose Shandaken, which means Rushing Waters, for his vacation. There is only one big hotel in the neighborhood, but the village is known to the "profession," who regularly summer in a pretty row of bungalows on the eastern slope of Shandaken mountain.

Jerome, the youthful but quite up-to-date driver who copped our bag at the depot, informed us as soon as he had said "gedap," that "there's a picture company in town." That Eva Tanguay had just arrived he also informed us, as well as the amount of her weekly salary, but the "company" was the real event to him. We told him that we, too, were pretty closely interested in the picture business, and we were no longer declasse. He was even willing to hold a conversation with us. "They're goin' 'ter hold up the post office tomorrer. Gee, I wisht they'd let me ride a horse in the picture. Jim—he works for us—he used to be a cavalryman; he's goin' to be in it. I could do it too, better'n some of the guys in the pictures." Then he told us the plots of about a dozen films that he had seen and we weren't sorry to reach the steps of the Glenbrook.

"O, see, those men have ridden all the way from the West!" some one exclaimed in the breakfast room next morning. We looked out at two men on ponies passing along the road and at first we thought that was what it was, but as soon as we met Jerome we knew better. "They're takin' it now; they're up the road." About a mile up the road we found a company of the Federal Players at work with Wil Rex and his sister, Miss Hessie Johansen, directing "A Woman's Past." There were just a few sheriff's posse scenes and a touch of sentiment between the heroine (Margaret Harmon) and the young engineer (Al Ray) to be registered near a little mountain cabin. The location was perfect. Near a flat farm, pretty high up, it had big peaks and wooded mountain glens all around it, where almost any angle at all would make an impressive scene.

The big scene, as far as the town knew, was the hold-up at the village post office, which Dick Cowan, the picture's very bad man, was to rob and then kill the constable. All this soon took place in view of the inhabitants. Wil Rex needed two kids to fill out. Jerome, the one who, of all, most wanted to play in a real picture, was left out merely because he stood on the wrong side of the road, the side where the scene could be witnessed the best. Too bashful to ask, he was getting red in the face from the surging emotions in his breast. But we interceded with Mr. Rex and got Jerome a job. The other kids guyed him on blushing, but the story was realism itself to him; he didn't know he was acting and we will bet his work comes out well.

The spectators were not all from the beautiful but not too populous mountain village of Shandaken; for one came through the crowd whom we heard say, "Our studios at 93d street, where is yours?" And the performers found a fellow player in a spectator.

British Notes

THE effect of one year of war upon the different industries of Great Britain has been productive of much speculative conjecture from the press and platform. But one certainty is that the moving picture business has suffered as little of the ill effects as any, and, so far as the financial status of the industry can be ascertained, its condition is as healthy as ever. Through the registrar of joint stock companies we have an accurate check upon the workings and extensions of limited liability undertakings; with private trading concerns the figures are not so reliable. Compared with the returns for last year, the situation is eminently satisfactory. The only two large companies to go under during the year were United Electric Theaters, Limited, and Standard Electric Theaters, Limited; but over a hundred smaller companies, representing nearly a million pounds registered capital, were similarly unfortunate, as compared with ninety companies with £800,000 capital in 1914. Only fifteen new companies engaged in kinematograph enterprise have been registered since January, with £65,000 capital, and a similar number increased in capital holding. The corresponding months of last year comprised part of the prewar boom and saw the incorporation of close upon three hundred new undertakings with an aggregate capitalization of two and a half million pounds. In both years only twenty-seven companies were wound up voluntarily by the shareholders, involving £277,000 in 1914 and £160,100 this year, but receivers were appointed in the current year to seven companies, representing £240,000, as against twelve companies last year, representing only £36,000. Non-compliance with the Companies' Acts has been responsible for something like sixty companies, with a capital of half a million pounds, being struck off the register, compared with forty-nine companies with the same amount of share capital during last year.

Who does supply the Sunday papers with their moving picture "intelligence"? Scare headlines, quite enough to break the peace of the Sabbath, yesterday informed one that "Charlie is so pestered in America that he contemplates flight to England." Other delectable fantasies of a wandering mind as tactless as they are factless have become irresistible bait to the score or more week-end journals which are biographing Chaplin by installments. These canards of the "Cackle King" themselves suggest origination from some central generating station, some secluded bureau either in London or New York, where an undiscovered genius of exaggeration with a particular penchant for Charlie is successfully commercializing his dreams; that is, without taking into account the multitude of anecdotes originally imported by one Noah, dished up in new guise and saddled on the back of Chaplin. In very truth there are more jokes in this country woven around Charlie than a certain European monarch, which is saying something. This is one of the best I have heard: When the eminent Russian vocalist, Chaliapine, performed recently in grand opera at Drury Lane, a well-known stage celebrity was asked, "Have you heard Chaliapine yet?" "No," was the reply, "but I saw him last night at the New Gallery." He has also introduced a new word to our vocabulary, although, frankly, until etymologists recover from the first shock, we are still wondering whether "Bally-Hoo" is Chaplin's accredited war whoop or a new kind of fruit.

Thanhouser Films, Limited, the European selling agents of the New Rochelle producing house, openly declare their intention of catering (with a few exceptions) for the free and open market exhibitor. This declaration of policy, in common with other firms strictly opposed to the new Pathe and Essanay modus operandi, was resolved consequent upon Mr. Edwin Thanhouser's decision to specialize in short subjects. The exceptions to this arrangement, I am informed, may not necessarily be multiple-reel productions. Short films of particular merit may be disposed of as exclusives. Meanwhile, the storm has intensified rather than subsided over the Essanay Company's ultimatum to the renter. Apart from the reception of any such principle in America, the crux of the difficulty that would upset it here is that too many renters are exhibitors and likewise too many exhibitors interested in renting exchanges. And now the Exhibitors' Association has taken up the gauntlet with the following resolution passed at an emergency meeting last week: "Resolved by this Association, having considered the Essanay announcement, is of opinion that the firm's proposals are inimical to the best interests of exhibitors and are an attempt to dictate to the trade and to close the open market, which should be resisted to the uttermost by every exhibitor. Exhibitors are most strongly urged to book Essanay films on the merits only of the film and on no account to book otherwise than through the usual channels." At some of the provincial centers the district committees of the Exhibitors' Association have adopted stronger and more drastic minutes than the one cited above. There is no hiding the fact that opinion throughout the trade generally is at a high pitch against the impending change. The main grumble is against the inclusion of all Essanay productions.

Dr. E. Distin-Maddick has been appointed by the Government director of kinema operations with the British forces in Flanders. The Kinematograph Manufacturers' Association are empowered to nominate the cameramen for service and under the auspices of the Association in consultation with the War Office to arrange for the circulation of those films passed for exhibition.

Motion pictures, or, for that matter, photographs of any kind, have hitherto been strictly prohibited in the immediate vicinity of Downing street, the official residence of the Premier and other Ministers of State; so when an American company set up a camera the other day in one of the rooms of the Foreign Office to take moving pictures of the Ministers as they arrived the surprise was not exactly a mild one. The particular occasion was the return of Lord Kitchener from the front. From the extraordinary facilities extended to the cameraman, both by the police and parliamentary authorities, the portrayal of these men of the moment should excel anything hitherto attempted on celluloid.

Now It's Official.

JIMQUIN, formerly known as James C. Quinn, of Los Angeles, has adopted the new spelling as his trademark, adding "of L. A." to the combination. Perhaps that is why he is dropping into poetry these days. But Mr. Quinn stands in need of correction when he says that "a limerick is poetry that isn't." We shudder at the Jimquin ignorance. A limerick is a definite form in which the first, second and fifth lines rhyme while the third and fourth are rhymed. Anyhow, it comes in a Jimquin style of folder which means that there is nothing but a catchline on the cover and plenty of meat inside. Here the only type on the covers is merely "A limerick." Inside he offers:

Here's it:

When the weather is hot'n,
The business is rotten,
Here's something you're taught'n
It's what you should know:
The glooms will be naught'n
The joys will be got'n
(If properly bought'n)

Now, a limerick is poetry that ain't. But sometimes you can get a little kick in a limerick, where poetry, real or alleged, would never, never get over.

So it doesn't matter whether you're a poeter or just a plain limericker if you get the push in your points. The point to be remembered here is that a good picture show (ISIS suggested) is a splendid tonic when you feel droopy.

Another example gives on the cover:

TWO

That naturally interests and inside he dilates on the new Triangle admission while announcing that the Isis will remain a five cent house, but that the nickel represents only the price and not the quality; an excellent point to make.

As a rule the front page should be made to work and work hard, but now and then this style is good and if the middle pages are smartly written, the effect will be better than loading the front page with type. It is not as easy as it looks to get a good teaser line.

A Suggestion.

If you have any large plant in your neighborhood, read this clipping twice through. It refers to the Rhode Opera House, Kenosha, Wis. You might make it refer to your own:

> In order to show appreciation of the loyalty of the hundreds of girls and women employed at the Chicago-Kenosha Hosiery Company the officials of this great company are giving a series of big theater parties. Last Saturday afternoon two hundred of the young women employed at the plant were entertained at the matinee at the Rhode Opera House and for three succeeding Saturdays the same number of women will be the guests of the company at the Paramount pictures at the Rhode. "We just want the girls to have a little fun at the expense of the company," was the comment of one of the officials who is promoting the Saturday afternoon theater parties.

The house also sends in a double column advertisement, not novel in any way, but making effective use of the space at command. The best point is that the house title is set into its own panel at the top of the larger box.

Likes the T. T.

Walter Murphy of the Star, Two Harbors, Minn., sends in an adaptation of the Quinn time table and says it made big business for him. He uses the time table as part of a railroad hand bill of the sort they get out for excursions, anouncing a special excursion train of six sections. Take any excursion leaf, paraphrase it to fit the show and you have a good piece of advertising, but the time table idea, as such, is even better when used weekly as a regular feature. People come to expect it and to ask for them.

Why?

The Colonial, Jackson, Mich., sends in its program (number 32, too) with the ads all dotted up with numbers. We wonder what it is. They use plenty of space for their own announcements and still have 25 outside advertisements, mostly one inch each. Each day gets a panel to itself. It would be better were the dated days set in slightly larger type and a more pronounced face. As a whole it does nicely and there is plenty of personal chat on the back page to help make business. That is why they are in their thirty-second issue and still going.

Udells.

Here are two more clips from Dave Udell, of the Majestic, Paxton, Ill. Both lead down to the film announcements:

"We Believe in Truth

the corner-stone of all honorable and successful business, and we pledge ourselves, each to one and one to all, to make this the foundation of our dealings. We believe in Truth, not only in the printed word but in every phase of business." (The declaration of principles of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.)

AND SO DO WE

We believe in Truth and tell the Truth concerning our pictures and their value.

Broad Minded People

can easily see the great good in pictures. "The lure of the city most of the time means nothing more than love of amusement. The motion picture provides substantially the same films for both country and city. The motion picture, indeed, does far more than merely amuse the rustic population. It enlightens them. It furnishes that contact with the outside world the continued absence of which very often leads to mental depression and mental flatness. Rustic solitude may be the delight of the philosopher, but farmers and villagers cannot thrive on it mentally as a steady diet," says the World.

A Small City

will never become depopulated as long as there is a good picture show within its folds.

AND BETTER STILL

The moving picture theater is in the lead when it comes to temperance work.

The Longer You Live the Better Opinion You Will Have of Moving Pictures.

We submit the following program for your approval tonight:

YOURSELF

After all, the most important person in the world is YOURSELF.

You think more of YOURSELF than anyone else.

You know secrets about YOURSELF that no one else knows.

You know that YOURSELF could be the president of the U. S. if you wanted to, or the greatest preacher, lawyer, doctor, architect, railroad president, cook, dishwasher, ball player, suffragist or anything else—if you wanted.

Now That Great Person

you know so much about cannot work too hard. The mind needs so much rest. The eye must see something else besides work. The whole body needs a rest from the general routine of everyday duties.

You must have that change or you are going to play out some of these days. What you need is good, wholesome amusement.

So why not be good to YOURSELF.

The Play's the Thing

Shakespeare was right—"The Play's the Thing." What is more soothing for the nerves than a play—and more so the silent play—the photodrama, alias moving pictures.

You Can't Fool Yourself

when you attend the Crystal Theater. Everything the heart desires and longs for is right there.

Our program is so well balanced no one thing becomes tiresome.

Up In the Air.

The Majestic, Grand Junction, Colorado, has been doing some things lately. One stunt was to have a balloon ascension and to throw away three hundred free tickets, set loose by a slow burning fuse.

Another stunt was the presentation of a local play by local talent and its subsequent showing. But we would like to know what they mean when, after cataloguing the features, they close with:

> Then the wedding scene at the Congregational church in which Rev. John Hoking officiates. The whole reel is a scream from start to finish.

Some do not regard marriage as a scream, particularly after the honeymoon. They have a voting contest that is plugging along nicely, the prize being a trip to the fair at Universal City, and with really good sense they are booming educationals as strongly as they do the dramatic features.

Another Chaplin.

Victor Eubank, of the Essanay Company, sends us this photograph showing how A. W. Eiler, of the Bijou-Grand, Walla Walla, Wash., advertises Chaplin nights. Mr. Eiler writes that the announcement of Chaplin without the name is sufficient, so they have a permanent cut-out that is arranged to be tied off to the bow of the auto top on Mr. Eiler's car. That is run around town a couple of times and the crowd comes. But that Chaplin cut-out offers quite a little wind resistance and it should be possible to make a light frame that will hold two cut-outs, back to back on the bonnet. The value of the cut-out over the painted sign is that wherever it is seen it is known. The sign has to be close enough to be read. Mr. Eiler, by the way, is putting up a $60,000 house and writes that Chaplin is helping to pay for it.

A Little Careless.

The Cameraphone, East Liberty, Pittsburgh, gets out a nice program, but the editor is getting a little careless. He reproduced clippings without seeing that they fit. One carries this line "and she gave me the famous wink which is reproduced in our illustration." That is all right, only there is no illustration. Another starts off with "Reine Davis, who makes her debut in motion pictures in this offering—" and "this" offering has not been announced, though a line later reference is made to her name—part of Sunday. It would take but slight correction on the printer's copy to get these little things straight.

Not New, but Good.

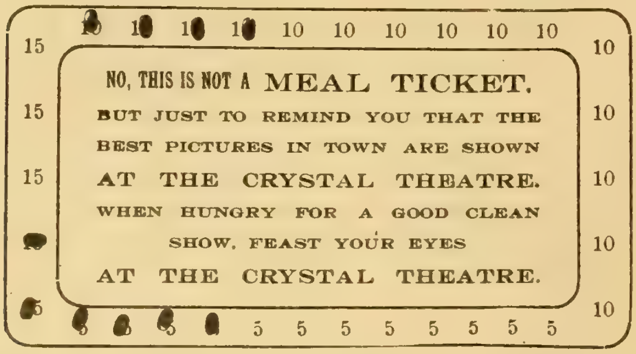
Albert H. Estes, of the Crystal, Orangeburg, S. C., sends in a fake meal ticket which he says made business for him. He is passing it along because he thinks it new. The meal ticket idea is hardly a novelty, but it is good where patrons are mainly of a class interested in rebate meals. But the form might be improved. Mr. Estes card' is reproduced:



10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10
15
10
10
10
10
10
5 5 5 5 5 5 5 5

NO, THIS IS NOT A MEAL TICKET.

BUT JUST TO REMIND YOU THAT THE BEST PICTURES IN TOWN ARE SHOWN

AT THE CRYSTAL THEATRE.

WHEN HUNGRY FOR A GOOD CLEAN SHOW, FEAST YOUR EYES

AT THE CRYSTAL THEATRE.

It would be better to have set the top lines this way.

This is not a

Meal Ticket

Then give a little space and follow with the text. But it would have been better still to have worked some scheme whereby the fascination of having the ticket punched could be made available; perhaps a free admission for every five or ten punches, a souvenir for a certain number or a pack of photoplayer postcards when the full ticket has been punched, a hole being punched at each visit to the house. Then it becomes more than a temporary advertising novelty and works longer for the house. The patron is apt to carry it and show it as a joke, and each time it is shown it reaches some other possible patron.

Better.

Lately we commented on an advertisement of Piper's Opera House, Virginia City, Nev., in which they occupied the space to no very great advantage. It is evident that not all of the work is that way. Daniel Connors (it is Connors' Actograph theater, when it is not the time-honored "Piper's") sends in another example. Here the top goes to a comment on the current bill and the underline is given to that form of advertisement in which the display lines form a part of a running story and an advertisement all their own. As well as it can be shown here, the advertisement runs:

SUPPOSE

you had a nice home, and you were living happily with your husband and

A WOMAN

whom you thought your friend came between you and your home and

STOLE

him away from you!
What would you do? Would you leave

YOUR HUSBAND

and forget him, or would you suicide, or kill him, or would you

KILL THAT WOMAN

This is what you will have decided for you next Thursday in a big five-part Photoplay at the Opera House.

"THE NAKED TRUTH"

In his letter Mr. Connors hits one of the sore spots of the business when he writes:

> I was forced to keep away from the story on account of having had a number of cheap films with the same plot. This ad. is a little strong, but this is a town where they like spice and tragedy. Some time ago I advertised "Should a Woman Tell?" in the same strong "mysterious" way. I got them into the "Well, I'm-going-to-see-what-it-is, anyway," mood. I got the largest house of the season and the film got over. I believe it is fatal to tell the story of most any film. And now comes the question: Can they keep it up without rehashing what has been seen in the regular service film?

Virginia City may be the has-been that Charles Van Loan said it was recently, but Mr. Connors doesn't go with the town apparently. That is the big question of the time. Can they keep up stories?

With a Supplement.

The Empire theater, Los Angeles, sends in a program for Monday to Thursday inclusive and a supplement for Friday and Saturday. It would have been better to have gotten out a six page folder if the stock could cut that way, but it is probable that they had to use the stock at hand, in which case a four page program would have been better than a four and a two.

We think they make a mistake in trusting to the story of the film. In most instances it is an error to tell the complete story and leave nothing to the imagination of the possible patron. Here each story is told in detail and nothing is added. A half dozen lines of eight point description of the play but not the story would have let the full week into the four page sheet and would still have left room for some house argument.

Another error is in using a five point face in a four and a quarter inch line. It is too long for type so small and the eye does not readily follow across the page. That size column would do for eight point, but for the smaller face it would have been better to have split and used two columns to the page. It is not a good plan, however, to use type so small. This department is set in six point, three and a half inches, which is about as wide as a line that size should be.

All on the Front.

The Mary Anderson, Louisville, Ky., sends in number eight of its house organ. The best thing about it is a calendar on the front page that covers all of the feature releases for the two week period the issue is supposed to take care of. It repeats in display the advertisement of these subjects, but it puts it all where the man who is not apt to care will get a look if he looks at all. They take about two-thirds of a page for editorial house talk that is simply and sincerely written, and runs a column of notes as well.

Repeating Scenes.

SEVERAL have asked about repeating scenes. They want to know if the scene must be written again and how it should be written. As a general thing a scene does not need to be repeated a second time. Let it be supposed that Jim asks Jane to marry him. This is a boy and girl affair and both wander off and marry. Jane weds a man for his money and does not get even that. Along about scene 46 she thinks of Jim and wishes that she had remained true to her childhood sweetheart. She recalls the pledging of their troth. Perhaps it is worked like this:

46—Library—Constant in drunken stupor in chair—Jane enters—goes to him—sees his condition—shudders—looks away from him—thinks. FADE.

47—Fade in scene three. FADE.

48—Fade up No. 46—Jane turns away—calls Butler—tells him to put Constant to bed—exits.

The director turns to scene three in the script and finds this:

3—Rustic bridge—Jim and Jane looking down into the water—Jim proposes—they exchange their first kiss.

In the scene plot, if one is supplied, he has already found:

Rustic Bridge—3—47, so when he makes the scene three he makes it again for scene forty-seven. He probably makes two negatives, one straight and one faded in and out. If there are several scenes in the bridge location it will be well; though not necessary, to add a reminder that this is the scene to be duplicated, so three is written:

3—Rustic bridge—Jim and Jane looking down into the water—Jim proposes—they exchange their first kiss.

(NOTE—This scene is faded in and out for vision in No. 46.)

Now the director is reminded to make two negatives at the moment he is making that particular scene. He will probably remember without being told, but it is just as well to give him the reminder.

Where but part of a scene is used the exact part is told. In this action it might be that in the vision it is enough merely to give the betrothal kiss so No. 47 is written:

47—Fade in only the betrothal kiss from scene three. FADE.

Now if a note is made it reads to the effect that "the kiss in this scene is used as a vision in No. 46," and the negative is faded at the proper place and not on the entire scene.

If Jim also thinks of his old sweetheart a second visioning back is done but only one negative of the vision will be made for the same negative can be used to get both visions as a rule, since the scenes are printed singly and a double number of vision prints will be made from the one negative.

Be Friends With Your Plot.

Get friendly with your plot. If you like a story you can write a good plot of action from your scenario, but if you are not on friendly terms with the developments, you may make a story, but it will be hard work and the story will lack spontaneity. Sometimes you'll get a plot that seems fairly to beg you to write it. You sit down and drive away at it and the further you get along the better you like it. It is apt to be a better-than-unusual story. On the other hand, you may develop a good story through sheer hard work. It will go on the screen nicely, but it will not have that intangible something that comes only from work that is a labor of love.

Sometimes holding a scenario for growth will help it. You may be able to work it over into something that you like. Then it will write itself and you will have something worth while. As a rule you do not like a story because sub-consciously you know that it is not quite "right." It does not follow always that the stories you like are good. Sometimes you'll like a story that is all wrong, but if you do not like your layout of action, it is because some secret sense tells you it is not yet complete.

One Good Reason.

"I can give you several good reasons why the synopsis alone idea should not be encouraged," offered a newly appointed script reader for a big concern. "The first is that if I had done synopses only, I should never have won this position I now occupy."

That is about as good a reason as can be advanced, for the man who knows synopsis but not action, does not know the greater part of his job. But the man went on:

"Since I have started to read, I have found a number of things of interest that bear out what you have always said. For example, I read in the synopsis of a certain happening. It is more or less a question as to whether the point can be gotten over. I turn to the action. Perhaps the author has not written the action properly, but I can, at least, get his point of view more clearly than I could from a line or even a paragraph in the synopsis. I can see precisely how he has visualized his idea. I get the story he is trying to tell and not the story I can get from the synopsis. They are not always the same, for what I may see as dead action may, through good handling, become excellent and vivid work.

"At best it is not easy to get the precise point of view of the author. Without action written in, it is often times impossible, and the more original the idea of the story, the more important it is that the action should supplement the synopsis."

The first reason is the best. No man ever won success who deals in synopsis only because he does not know his business and therefore is not qualified to do editorial or constructive work.

Saving Words.

The Western Universal has a couple of word saving ideas. They do not use "Back to scene" when continuous action follows an insert, and they do not mark "cut-in" where a leader goes into the scene, contending that the typographical aspect of the cut-in leader is a sufficient indication that the leader is to be cut-in and not taken from its place and moved to before the scene. Another new idea and one we do not like so well, is the separation of each scene by means of a dotted line extending across the page. White space should make a sufficiently definite breaking. Each scene carries a marginal note that it is "same as" the first scene in that set or location.

Inserts.

A private letter from a man in Los Angeles to a friend in the east carries a very simple definition of the difference between bust and insert. At the Universal studio "close-up" is used instead of bust and "insert" instead of "on screen." He writes:

> For example, a watch is an insert, but a wrist watch being worn is a close-up.

The wrist watch, if worn, goes with the player. The watch, by itself, can be made apart from the player.

Freaks.

Some writers go to a lot of trouble to make their copy distinctive, but they get the effect in the wrong way. Some space so that the action runs only on the right hand half of the page, others double and triple space between lines and space five or six between scenes. Others run regular machine work but concentrate on covers, getting a most elaborate binding. These bindings are clearly home-made and instead of showing the experience of the author, they prove his inexperience. Some established authors bind their scripts, but they are too busy and their time is of too much value to be spent in making a cover out of an old shirt box and brown paper. They use loose leaf binders or some printed cover. Probably the most elaborately handled script is Emmett Campbell Hall's script for "The Road of Strife." This is a bound book with pages five by eight inches and nearly three inches thick. It was attractive in appearance, but not easy to work from.

The best means of attracting attention to one's copy is to follow the usual practice but to give the script the knowing air of competent preparation, and that comes only through practice. Freak indentations, elaborate designs in colored inks and all the rest of it will only serve to emphasize the author's ignorance of the business, because a script is not purchased because it is spaced thus and so, because it is indented at certain points or painted up. A script is purchased because it has an idea a company wants and because the idea is told in a way to let the director reproduce the story in clear action. Devote all of your inventiveness to your scripts. They will not even need covers. Later on, when you have arrived, play with covers if you will, and you'll be able to afford to do it right.

Hundred Dollar Scripts.

"Will the hundred dollar a reel story ever arrive?" That is the burden of a recent wail. It is a wail because it is written by a man who thinks he can do better work IF the price is pushed up. He cannot—and he will not be among those present when the three figure checks start to come through, but he can take a mournful satisfaction, if he will, in the thought that the hundred dollar stories are getting closer all of the time. There are still few who regularly get a hundred dollars a reel, but either a hundred dollars a thousand feet will be the standard price presently or there will be no moving picture business. The public is more tired than manufacturers think of the stories we are getting, and to get better ones will require that men who can make a hundred or a hundred and fifty from a short story will have to be tempted into the picture end. Most of those who dropped in, dropped out again because they found the hundred dollar price too often a myth. They will have to be coaxed back presently, for something must soon be done.

If a real theatrical star cannot be a success in dramatic work unless he has a proper play, it is idiotic in the extreme to give him a four figure price for a picture, pay ten or fifteen hundred dollars for the rights to some novel and then pay perhaps a hundred or a hundred and fifty dollars to have it done into a play. Some already know that, others are finding it out. The Sheriff will tell the rest. Watch and see.

Both Ways.

There must be a cause for every effect and also an effect for every cause. You cannot have a murder trial without a murder nor a murder without an after effect.

A Hundred to One.

If you write one plot it may be bad. If you write a hundred you have the odds in your favor. Play the long shots.

A Synopsis Kink.

When you write a synopsis remember that some editors read first of all for the censors and after that for story. If the story suggests that it will not get past the average local censorship, the script will not be read with a view to acceptance. If you have a story that deals with the prohibited factors, but in such a way that it will be likely to find acceptance, plan your synopsis in such a manner that the interest of the reader will be gained before the possibly prohibited material is reached. Do not, for an example, start off your story with the statement that "Jim, a young burglar," does certain things. Tell what Jim does, get interest and then, quite casually, explain that Jim used to be a burglar. Then the interest of the reader will lead him to more carefully consider the action to see if this fact will result in rejection or whether it may possibly get past. To put a big crime thought in the first line of the synopsis is no more foolish than to write that "this is a great story, but probably it will not pass the censors."

Even now, after all the hammering, there is far too little attention paid the synopsis. This is what, in ninety-nine cases in the hundred, makes the sale, in that it induces the editor to appraise the plot of action. If you cannot interest him in your synopsis, you never get an opportunity to interest him in the full plot in action, but having gained interest in the synopsis, you must be able to clinch the interest with the full exposition of the plot in action.

And it can be done in 250 words. It is done in 50 words for the Pennsylvania State Censorship, because that is all the space their application blank affords.

Establishing Character.

We must decline to comply with the request of a correspondent who wants us to write about 500 feet of intricate auto chase that he may see how it is done, but we welcome real plot problems that are generally applicable, and one sensibly presented question deals with the establishment of character, the letter reciting:

> Last evening, at a meeting of the Chicago Press Writers' Club, of which I am a member, Mr. Frederick Ireland, President of the Emerald Film Company, affiliated with the American Standard Motion Picture Corporation of this city, gave an excellent talk on "Scenario Writing." We all expected to be crammed with a lot of technical knowledge, but were agreeably surprised to find that, as he said, "he has no method." The general gist of his talk was to allow our souls full sway, to give birth to real people in our stories, to try to bring out noble characters and ignoble characters in our situations, but to bring out the character. The situations and so forth are necessary, of course, but if we depict real, red-blooded human beings, if we follow logic, if we forget the technical details which the "Ten lessons for 10c" schools give us and try to develop real persons, we cannot help but succeed. Of course, I am in the swaddling clothes of moving picture writing, but I try to do just that thing, and I felt in a measure that he had stolen the idea from me! But we all have a bit of that egotism, don't we?
> I fear I have burdened you, for which, pardon! My question is simple. Should I waste (?) ten scenes or about two hundred or more feet, on establishing the character of my lead? My lead in this case is engineer on the Limited and is introduced by the leader:
> An honest man, close-buttoned to the chin,
> Soiled clothes without, but a clean soul within.
> These first scenes show how he aids an immigrant woman to find her place on the train as the Limited waits at the depot, the engine panting, ready to pull out. The woman has three children with her and he gives an apple to each. They are helpless in the hurry and scurry of boarding, and the engineer is moved to pity. That is the idea. I fear that I am taking up too great time to do this, but there is no way I can bring it out in the action of the plot, for the action of the plot is a result of his warm heart and "clean soul."

Ten scenes are too many for this action. Simple effects are strongest and best. The woman with her children are making inquiry of some stranger. The latter impatiently shrugs his shoulders and moves off. The engineer, standing beside his engine, lays down the oil can, steps up, picks up the two smaller children and leads out of the scene. In the second he enters with them and puts her aboard the right car, claiming a kiss from the kiddies as his reward. In scene three he gets back to the engine, gets his oil can, swings aboard and the train pulls out.

The advice given by Mr. Ireland is excellent, but do it briefly. If one developement does not answer, take something else that will be sufficiently brief, but remember that always there can be found some one or two scene actions that will throw a light on character without the labored effect of a dozen or more scenes.

Experience.

A Southern woman writes: "I sent two dollars and fifty cents to a photoplaywright to reconstruct and market a script for me. In about a week I received a carbon and his promise to market the play. Waiting a year, I wrote him again and was told that the play was lost in the mails, but that he would like to handle others for me."

You can buy a lot of stamps for that much money, but perhaps the investment will save other disbursements of the same sort. The Writer's Magazine for August has a very illuminating article on literary agents—and these are more generally more businesslike than the photoplay sales agents. If the authors could only see from the editorial side the imbecilic fashion in which plays are offered by these agents, the entire troupe would go out of business within three months. We do not believe that any of them could even pay expenses on a sales commission of even 25 per cent., let alone show a profit. The profit comes from the reading fees, reconstructions and copying; none of which materially aid an author's chances, as the work is done.

Confidence and Egotism.

Asks a reader: "How does one get confidence in his work? Egotism is, indeed, a blessing."

Egotism is not a blessing and it is not confidence, but an over-development of that quality.

Confidence is not complacent self-admiration. It arises from the knowledge that one's work is competently performed and competence is gained only through experience, a quality the writer seems still to lack. When you have done your ordained practise work you will know that your product is good and have confidence in it. Until that time egotism cannot possibly serve in its stead.

A New Kick.

Here is a new one. A correspondent complains that blank return envelopes frequently carry a rubber stamped card of the returning office. She says this is annoying to the writer who has not made good. Very true, but the rubber stamp is put on that the envelope may be returned to the company if, for any reason, the address is incorrect because of a mistake of the writer, removal or absence from the city. It is a safeguard and not a studied insult and if the writer objects to the postman knowing she is not selling her stuff, she should arrange with some less sensitive friend to receive the mail.

Multiple Numbering.

A correspondent writes that she has a copy of Technique of the Photoplay but thinks that perhaps there is some later information on numbering the scenes in a multiple reel play.

There is a growing tendency to avoid duplication of scene numbers and to run from scene one to the last scene of the last reel in consecutive order. When Technique was written the multiple reel was just beginning to come along and it was not possible to lay down an exact technique, because there was none existent, but the suggestions made then were along the lines of subsequent development and most of the trick schemes have been dropped in favor of the simplest form of numbering, which is from the first to the last, not using a fresh sheet for a new part, but breaking the parts merely by some lesser means such as writing "Part II" following the end of Part I with a few extra lines of spacing.

Not His Fault.

The editor is not to blame because you have no typewriter, so do not complain if he refuses to read your pen written scripts. You would not offer to paint a man's house and expect him to suply the ladder and brushes.

Adaptations.

The adaptation that is not carefully made can spoil the best play or story ever produced. Many production heads are beginning to find this out and prices are going up. It is foolish to pay four figures for a book right and only a hundred for the adaptation. Too much or too little of the story can spoil the work of the best author. The work must be done with both skill and sympathy.

Equipment.

The more you know, the better equipped you are for writing. If you are possessed of only a limited number of facts, you can use these and none others in your stories. The more you know the wider your choice of ideas.

If you know nothing of medicine, you will make a botch of it when you try to write stories about physicians. You may write stories, but they will not be convincing because they will lack correct details. If you write of a lawyer who makes a will for an old man and then sells it to the young nephew to alter, you must know something of the law and legal practice. Frequently a nice point of law—but one that can be quickly and clearly explained—will provide a better climax than the stolen will. Anyone can write of stolen wills and few will sell their stories, but it takes a writer like Melville Davidson Post to make a nice legal point his climax and then prove it by citations from the authorities.

Broaden your field by increasing your knowledge.

Classified Lists.

Nine times out of ten when an author wants to have some character injured, he uses an automobile. Ninety-nine times out of a hundred a lover's quarrel is precipitated by the man or the woman overseeing some perfectly innocent but apparently guilty flirtation.

Suppose that some rainy day you sit down at your machine and make out a little list of ways in which a person may be injured without the aid of an automobile. For example:

Gasoline waste in the sewer is exploded. A manhole cover is blown off.

A brick falls from a chimney or a tile from the roof.

He is hit by a batted ball from some vacant lot game.

A box falls from a passing truck.

A fallen live wire.

Build up on this list. Read the papers for odd accidents. Look up the vital statistics. Presently you will have a couple of hundred ways of getting a man injured or killed. Work the same way for quarrels and the other standard ingredients of plots. The work can be done when genius does not burn and perhaps even the thinking of ways and means will lead to the creation of good plots.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed, or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles have been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps, (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 104.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

> Suppose you had a 4½ inch diameter plano-convex lens next the arc. How close could you advance the arc before encountering the critical angle, and where would its first effect be felt? Is there any possibility of encountering it at any other point than at the rear surface of the rear condensing lens? Does placing the shorter focal length lens of two plano-convex lenses in front tend to bring about loss through critical angle?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 98.

The Roll of Honor on Question 98 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; John Solar, Watertown, New York; Manuel Nosti, Tampa, Florida; J. R. Andrews, Burlington, Vermont; Minneapolis, Minnesota, and C. A. Dann, Toronto, Canada. The reply of Minneapolis has been selected for publication.

Reply to Question No. 98.

By Minneapolis, Minn.

The Question:

What is chromatic aberration? What is its cause and its effect on the screen? How may chromatic aberration be lessened or eliminated? Give us your idea of what course a light ray takes through the lens system. Illustrate by sketch.

The Answer:

Chromatic aberration is based on the fact that light is made up of rays or waves of different colors and that these colors are not all affected alike by the action of a lens. That is to say, rays of certain colors are refracted more than rays of other colors when passed through a lens.

When light is passed through a true prism it is completely separated into its various component colors. The heavier the angle at which light strikes the surface of a lens the more nearly the action of the prism is approximated, and hence chromatic aberration is greatest at the outer edge of a lens receiving diverging rays. The ring of colored light around the spot of the cooling plate of the projector is due to chromatic aberration.

Chromatic aberration is corrected by using a combination of lenses of flint and crown glass. Chromatic aberration may be practically entirely eliminated by a proper combination of these two elements. The effect of chromatic aberration is a discoloration of the light, hence a dimming of its brilliancy.

(I have eliminated that portion of the answer dealing with the course of light rays through the lens, because of the fact that this will be thoroughly and completely dealt with in the light ray experiment text which is now in course of publication.—Ed.).

Interesting Letter.

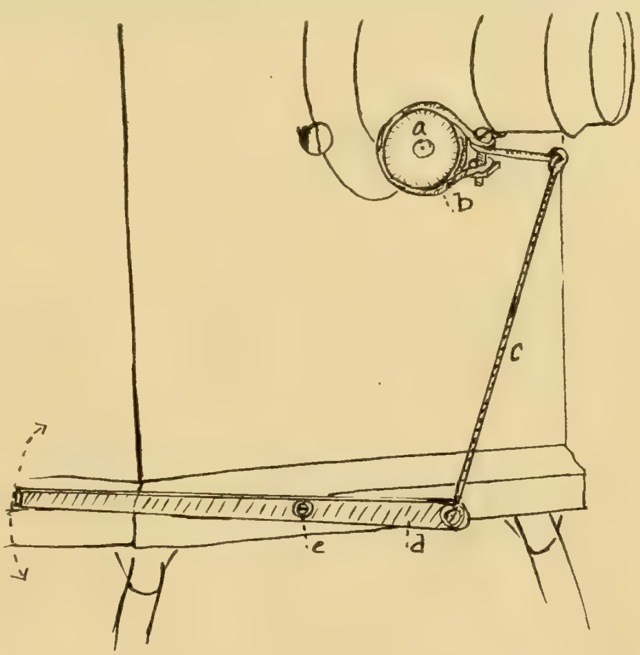
C. B. Pitts, Collbran, Colorado, writes:

> My sole and only excuse for this intrusion is to bring to your attention a little wrinkle which is a source of much satisfaction to me, and might prove of equal value to some of the other boys. On the Power's Six machines I am running I find it very inconvenient to adjust the focus of the objective lens while the machine was in operation. The shutter, the crank, and one of the large gears were in the way, so that focusing was a delicate and sometimes painful operation. To meet this situation I deviced the focusing lever shown in the sketch; a represents the focusing screw of the lens; b a loop made of No. 12 wire, bent to receive a bolt with which it is clamped to the lens thumb screw; c is a wire link connecting lever d with loop b, as shown; e is a screw which holds lever d to the side of the machine table. It needs but a glance to show the operator, and the lens stays right where it is put, because screw e gives sufficient compression to hold it in place.



The device is very good, and is passed along for the benefit of Power's Six machine users. Some accomplish what amounts to the same thing by omitting link c and lever d, simply putting on loop b and letting the end extend straight down below the edge of the revolving shutter.

I am glad to know, Brother Pitts, that the Hankbook and department have been an aid to you, because, by reason of your being able to put on a good show, those "broncho busters" are allowed to enjoy real moving pictures instead of a dim, shadowy, jumping imitation. That's a thing many operators who oppose the spread of knowledge of operating lose sight of.

Fake Contests.

George L. Wilson, Greenwood, South Carolina, says:

> Last time I wrote the department was two years ago when I was in West Virginia featuring Bernhardt. Recently, however, a contest scheme was pulled off in this town, and I think it is good policy to protect against similar future blunders on the part of exhibitors who are prone to fall for clap-trap fakes. In May a certain "advertising agency" came here and induced several of our business people, including one theater, to enter into a "contest," the aforesaid advertising agency agreeing to give to the most popular white lady in or around this city who, after a contest lasting ten weeks, received the most votes, a first prize of one Ford car; second prize, a suit of furniture valued at $75, and the third prize a $50 suit of furniture. There was also a diamond ring, valued at $50, and a watch of the same value offered. The merchants agreed, and signed up to pay 5 per cent. for the privilege of sharing this contest, and bound themselves to give one thousand votes with each one dollar purchase of merchandise, and fifty votes with each 5 cents purchase. The gentleman conducting this contest entered as many ladies as he could get, about one hundred, giving each 2,500 votes as a starter. Each week the votes were counted and the results published in the local paper. The sole right of settling disputes as to how the votes should be counted was retained by the advertising agency. The merchants agreed to allow access to their books at any time to see that the contestants got their proper amount for the goods sold. After the contest had ran about five weeks the auto was bought and paid for by the above gentlemen, as later, were also all the other prizes. Sales were light and they did not get the receipts expected. The the> ater paid nothing, except the small percentage for tickets sold, but acted as means of publicity. When the contest finally closed, about three weeks ago, the agency claimed they had been treated unfairly by the merchants, and left on the day the contest was over, leaving all the votes uncounted, and the matter in the hands of local attorneys to represent them, stating they would return in a week. They did not return, and a count of the votes was made, which showed several million more than the total each merchant paid for, and, again, the leading lady had some two million more than anyone else, and had seventeen other ladies' votes, with their names on, in the box with her votes. The votes were counted by disinterested parties, home people, who, owing to the large difference in votes bought and votes in the box, refused to make an award through fear of manufacturing a healthy crop of trouble and enemies. It then developed that the advertising agency had offered to sell votes to a number of the contestants and their friends, all of whom claimed they did not buy. These men cannot be brought back here, as they have not violated any criminal law, though they have broken their contract by not remaining and delivering the prizes. The merchants are all at sea as to what disposition to make of the prizes, and the matter is tied up in a hard knot, where it bids fair to stay. In the meantime the theater that had its name on all the votes and sold books of tickets in advance, giving votes with them, has to suffer, and the people in the contest are raising—umph! well they are raising it good and plenty, because the awards have not been made.

> This letter is not written in any carping spirit, but it seems to the writer that managers ought to be warned against this contest business. It is not good from any point of view, and may, as in this case, lead to all kinds of trouble, particularly when one is dealing with strangers. The cigarette coupon business is being worked in this territory too, and that is another great evil.

The writer firmly believes that "contests" are not a good business proposition from any point of view. If, as we have many times pointed out, exhibitors would pay less attention to contests and fake schemes of one kind or another, and more to perfecting and improving their show, they certainly would be the gainers. The editor of this department joins with Brother Wilson in warning exhibitors to steer clear of schemes of this kind.

Motor Generator.

J. W. Shawcross, Attica, Indiana, says:

> I have run up against a proposition I don't know what to do with, and would very much appreciate your advice as to what would insure best results. I am going to locate in Flora, Ind., where current is taken from a traction system, and it is three-phase, 25 cycle, 110 volts. Our room is 60x18. Have one of the Rembusch silver fibre screens, and other equipment O. K., except we have nothing to handle alternating current. Would you prefer a Hallberg or Fort Wayne compensarc Have studied the Handbook but cannot make a decision.

I would not prefer either one of them if you mean the A. C. transformer. What you need for this particular proposition is a motor generator set. I cannot possibly, through the department, give advice as to the relative merits of the apparatus put out by the various manufacturers. If I did that I would create a riot in short order. The motor generator set will, of course, give you D. C. at the arc, and that is what you need. Twenty-five cycle current is mighty poor stuff for projection. There are several makes of motor generators, viz: the rexolux, made by the Electric Products Company, Cleveland, O.; the Fort Wayne compensarc, sold by the General Electric Company, Schnectady, N. Y.; the Wagner, manufactured by the Wagner Electric Company, which has an office in New York City, and the Hallberg, made and sold by J. H. Hallberg, New York City. The first cost of one of these outfits will be considerable, but, nevertheless, it is the thing.

Light Ray Dope Put to the Proof.

St. Louis, Missouri (I withhold the name, because the gentleman paid for the advice by mail), asked for the proper condenser combination for his machine. I consulted the tables prepared for the light ray article now appearing and sent him information in accordance therewith. He now writes:

> Received your communication of July 28th, and immediately put your advice to the test with excellent results. I discarded my old condensers, and bought two Kleine lenses, marked 6½ and 7½. Set them 1/16 of an inch apart; set the lamphouse back as far as it would go, which lacked about one-half an inch of being 18 inches to the curved surface of the condenser. I find my light to be much whiter and brighter, and it covers the screen perfectly, even when the carbons have burned apart quite a bit. I am much indebted to you for the information, and am looking forward to the publication of the data you have prepared with reference to light rays and lenses.

In this connection I might say a brother who is traveling over the country is making various tests in theaters, using the tables we have prepared. In some instances he finds the results to be perfect, and a very great improvement; in others he finds the data to be apparently of little or no value. Here are some of the cases:

> Case No. 1. D. C. converter; 39 amperes; volts 68-70; ⅝ cored top carbon; one lamp crater ½ inch; ¾ cored top carbon; other lamp crater 9/16 inch; B. F. 5¼ inches; diameter 2¼ inches. Note: Present results, 6½-7½, excellent— A1, extra fine. Scale will not work as when aligned as called for, cannot put lamp far enough forward in lamphouse. Machines Power's SixA and it is the same on each. (That is not our fault. If the lamphouse is at fault it will have to be changed. —Ed.)
> Case No. 2. Amperes D. C. 58-59; volts 66 (normal); ⅝ cored top carbon; crater ½ inch and very flat; B. F. lens 4 13-16; diameter 2¼. Note: Scale calls for 6½ and 7½. (No good; shows highlight.) Condensers in use 7½ and 8¾. Result excellent. Distance machine to condenser 20½ inches.
> Case No. 3. Amperes D. C. 35; voltage 52 normal; ⅝ cored top carbon; crater 7/16; B. F. lens 4.97; aperture 1 11-16 inches. Note: Scale does not cover this. Condensers in use 7½ and 9½. Result clear field. Distance aperture of machine to condenser E. F. 27 inches.
> Case No. 4. Amperes D. C. 56; 62 volts (normal); ⅝ cored top carbon; crater 17/32 (approximately); B. F. lens 4⅞ inches; aperture 1¾ inches. Note: Scale does not cover this. Condensers in use 6½ and 7½ (exact). Result excellent. Distance machine aperture to condenser 20 inches.
> Case No. 5. D. C. rectifier 32; volts 51-51½ (normal); ⅝ cored top carbon; 9/32 crater and deep; B. F. lens 3 1-32 inches; diameter 1¾. Note: Used scale and worked out O. K. Results great.

I immediately sent these to Brother Griffiths and here is his reply:

> Case No. 1. Conditions: B. F. 5¼ inches; diameter 2¼; amperes 39 D. C.; condensers 6½-7½. Scales calls for 6½ inch-7½ inch at 18½ inches between condenser and aperture. Complaints: Cannot put lamp far enough forward in lamphouse for this distance. Comments: Why not? I can get a suitable spot at 18½ inches with 6½-7½ with 60 A. C.
> Case No. 2. Conditions: B. F. 4 13-16 inches; diameter 2¼ inches; amperes 58; condensers 7½-8¾ inches; distance between condenser and aperture 20½ inches. Scale calls for 6½ & 7½ inch lenses at 17 inches. Complaint: No good shows highlight. Comment: This is the only set of conditions I do not understand. The report says crater very flat. What does it mean? Horizontal plane or vertical plane? Is the carbon set interfering with results? At the ——— theater, ———, the operator has similar conditions with the exception of a smaller diameter lens, getting excellent results with 6½-7½ inch condensers.
> Case No. 3. Conditions: B. F. 4.97 inches; diameter 1 11-16 inches; ampere 35 D. C.; condensers 7½ & 9½ inches; distance between condenser and aperture 27 inches. Comment: If the tables were continued to 27 inches it would call for 7½-9½ inch condensers, and if the back focus was continued for objectives of 1 11-16 inch diameter, it would call for about 28 inches, so that the operator in this case is practically working to the scale in the tables.
> Case No. 4. Conditions: B. F. 4⅞ inches; diameter 1¾ inches; amperes 56 D. C.; condensers 6½-7½ inch; distance between condenser and aperture 20 inches. Results excellent. Complaint: Scale does not cover. Comment: If the diameter of the lens was 2 1-32 inches instead of 1¾ inches the condition would be correct, as the scale calls for, except that the distance between condenser and aperture is 1 inch longer than the limit I gave for 6½-7½ inch condensers, which means a little more illumination if the condensers will stand it. The result of the smaller diameter means a little loss around the objective. The scale is also practically in operation here.
> Case No. 5. Conditions: Gets great results at 16 inches with 6½-7½ inch condensers with 32 amperes D. C. Comment: He, No. 1, will, of course, get better illumination at 20 inches, and the 18 inches is only given as a minimum. Under the above conditions the scale in the tables is practically in operation. Note: Distance between condenser and aperture omitted. Results excellent; A1; extra fine. Operator is working to scale and getting great results.
> | Case No. 4. | Case No. 2. |
> |---|---|
> | B. F. 4⅞ inches. | B. F. 4 13-16 inches. |
> | Diameter 1¾ inches. | Diameter 2¼ inches. |
> | Amperes 56 D. C. | Amperes 58 D. C. |
> | Condensers 6½ & 7½ inches. | Condensers 7½ & 8¾ inches. |
> | Distance 20 inches. | Distance 20½ inches. |
> | Result excellent. | Result excellent. |
> It seems to me that the same conditions should fit both the above cases.

First let it be observed that we cannot re-make lamphouses, condenser holders and machine tables. If the tables are found to be correct it will be up to the machine manufacturers to enable the operator to comply with the conditions called for.

On the whole, it seems to me, these experiments are not unfavorable. I would also like to impress upon operators who experiment with this light ray matter, when it is published, this fact: be sure your condensers are what they are supposed to be. If you have a 6¼ instead of a 6½ inch lens next the light and a 7¾ in front instead of a 7½, it will make considerable difference. I am pretty thoroughly convinced right now that the light ray matter, as we have it, is essentially correct.

In sending this data in the correspondent remarks: "Here is some dope which won't work out. Why? Please look it over, but remember it is for your personal use, as the projection department is not strongly liked here, so don't use it for publication." How silly!—I don't mean on the part of the correspondent. What earthly good do the men in that particular section imagine it is going to do for them to dislike the projection department. I presume they also dislike the public schools because they are educational, and a college ought to be an abomination to them. However, they will recover if you give them time enough. If they don't it won't make any particular difference, except to themselves.

THOSE LIGHT RAY EXPERIMENTS*

Some Interesting Data Worthy of Further Study.

Part III.

IN Fig. 4 the long scale marks condenser distance, and the short scale, to the right, indicates the back focus of the objective. Now here is a thing that has always puzzled the editor, viz.: Any given objective lens may work at any one of several different distances from the film. That is something I have never been able to make fit in with any plan I could evolve for matching up a projector lens system. Like most other things, however, once you get hold of the right key it is very simple, and the key to this particular problem is "back focus."

In matching up a projector lens system, first, using the well-known formula for finding the equivalent focus of the lens required to project the size picture you want at the distance your condition calls for, determine the E. F. of the lens you want, procure it, mount it in the machine, and, using any condenser, project a picture, and very carefully adjust the objective until the picture on the screen is in sharp focus. Having done this, stick a rule through the aperture and, with its end against the lens, measure the exact distance of the rear surface of the rear combination of the objective from the film track surface on the aperture.

This measurement will be the BACK FOCUS at which your lens will work, and it is this measurement and not the equivalent focus, which must be used in matching up the lens system. The E. F. has absolutely no value whatever except to enable the operator to select the proper lens to project the size picture he wants at the given distance.

At this point we reach an item of much importance concerning which positive data cannot as yet be given, viz.: The selection of an objective lens of the right diameter to fit local conditions. Excess in diameter is undesirable, in that it is likely to set up trouble in the shape of travel ghost. Insufficient diameter, on the other hand, means loss of light, and loss of light is expensive. On the whole, it is much better, I believe, to get a lens of too large than too small diameter, because it is an easy matter to stop down the large lens to just the size needed, whereas the small diameter cannot possibly be made larger.

On the whole, I think the best recommendation we can make at present is that the E. F. of the required lens be found, and that a lens be ordered having a diameter equal to one-half its E. F. up to 5 inches E. F., the diameter beyond that focal length to remain fixed at 2½ inches, because I do not believe it is practical to use a lens of larger opening in conjunction with a revolving shutter. When the lens is received, place it in the machine and focus the picture sharply on the screen, then measure the back focus, as already directed, and remove the lens. Now place a sheet of white paper inside the mechanism in the exact position occupied by the back surface of the lens, supporting it in any convenient way, and, without having changed the position of the lamp with relation to the condenser or of the lamphouse with relation to the aperture, strike an arc, and measure the light on the paper. If the lens measures 2 inches in diameter and the light measures 2 inches across, all is well. If the light measures more than 2 inches across, but only 2 inches up and down, the lens still will do fairly well, though there will be some loss. If, however, the lens measures greater than the light, stop the lens down to the diameter of the light at both ends, by means of rings of metal in which you have made a circular opening of proper size. I do not pretend to say that this advice is perfect. It is, however, the best I can offer at this time, and is, I am sure, based on the right idea.

A Digression. Let me pause here, for want of a more fitting place, and digress for a moment to show you an interesting light ray picture. Dozens of photographs were taken, but those shown in this article are the ones which appear to have more real value to the work in hand.

In Fig. 9½ we see a condenser covered with a metal plate having a number of holes, each about ¼ inch in diameter. This picture has no considerable value, except to allow the operator, or student to trace the light ray action on both sides of the objective. It will be noted that the screen illumination is not complete, especially at the outer edges where there were but few holes in the metal plate. Another interesting point in this picture is the circle of light on the back side of the aperture plate, showing the loss of light through reflection from the polished surface of the lens. In fact, there are a number of things in this photograph that will interest the student-operator.

SPHERICAL ABERRATION. An examination into the effect of spherical aberration points to the fact that it operates mainly to cause impurity of the light, by reason of the fact that those rays which draw in toward the center earliest must naturally reach somewhat into the center of the spot, and coming, as they do, from the outer edge of the lens, they carry with them considerable color.

This, so far as I was able to determine, was the principal practical effect of spherical aberration. It amounts to a discoloration of the light, and hence a diminution of its brilliancy, though it may or may not be sufficient to be perceptible to the eye in individual cases. Later, an examination of Fig. 9½ would seem to suggest that spherical aberration may also have an effect on definition of the picture since Fig. 9½ seems to show that rays from each point of the condenser are carried through to a corresponding paint on the screen, hence, if any be misdirected by spherical aberration surely the picture must suffer.

Another important point in connection with the condenser is loss of light through poorly polished, unevenly finished surfaces, and through discoloration of the glass. Of late there have been those who have advocated the addition of yellow to the condenser lens glass, with the idea of mellowing the light. With this I cannot agree. I think it is hardly necessary to enter into a discussion of the matter, and most emphatically advise operators to avoid the use of lenses containing discoloration of any kind. In selecting a condenser lens first examine its surface, and, unless it presents a perfectly smooth, polished appearance, and evidence of having been ground to the true surface, reject the lens. In order to perform its function properly a lens must be a perfect segment of the surface of a sphere, and this perfect shape can only be obtained by grinding. It cannot, by any stretch of the imagination, be had by merely polishing the surface of a molded lens.

Some of the practical effects of chromatic aberration is seen in Fig. 10. It will be observed that, whereas the holes in the metal shield covering the condenser are of equal size, the lower ray is much the stronger. This is partly due to its position, but also to a very considerable extent to color in the upper ray which reduces its actinic effect on the photographic plate.

Stop and consider the matter for a moment. In order to secure even approximately perfect results in illumination at the spot it is necessary that all light rays emanating from any point on the crater and falling upon any point on the surface of the lens, be so refracted that they will reach the same point in, or on the spot.

Now this can only be accomplished by a perfectly true lens surface, and it therefore follows that if the surface of the lens be not perfectly true, some of the rays are going to be refracted properly and some are not, and this of necessity means loss in effectiveness. With this in view I would call the attention of theater managers to the fact that the cheap, molded condenser lenses, having an uneven, wavy surface, may be cheap in its first cost, but are a mighty expensive article in the long run, because of the fact that, since it takes current to produce light, and you have to buy the current, anything which makes for ineffectiveness in illumination means a waste of current, hence you are simply saving a small sum of money in the original cost when you buy a cheap condenser lens, and are paying out money every minute you run for current to produce light which the cheap lens is wasting. I would also recommend a careful study of Fig. 9½ in this connection.

Also reject any lens which does not measure exactly 4½ inches in diameter and which has an excessively thick edge. Condenser lenses should be exactly 4½ inches in diameter, and should come down to an edge but little, if any thicker than 1-16 of an inch. A thick edge means unnecessary glass; therefore unnecessary absorption of light. In Fig. 11 A shows the wrong and B the right lens edge. It is important that the edges of condenser lenses be of standard thickness, and that their diameters be exactly 4½ inches, because not only is excessive glass wasteful (it is impossible for manufacturing reasons to bring the edge right down to a thin edge at a 4½ inch diameter) but with edges of varying thickness it is impossible to make the lenses fit properly in many of the machine lens holders; also any change in diameter alters the fit of the lens in the holder, and these variations will render it practically impossible for the operator to properly line up his lens system. I would suggest that operators pay careful attention to this matter because lens manufacturers seem to think that "near or about" is good enough, both in diameters and lens edge thickness. They will only change that attitude and come down to a fixed standard when a large number of kicks are registered by purchasers. I have pointed out the reasons why diameters and lens edge thickness should be absolutely standard. I think you will have no trouble in recognizing the fact that these reasons are sound. It is now up to you to compel lens manufacturers to produce a standard article, and I would suggest that you insist on an exact 4½ inch diameter and a lens edge thickness exactly 1-16 of an inch. It is quite true that to thus standardize lenses might add somewhat to their cost, but even so, it will be money saved in the end, no matter from what angle the proposition be viewed.

In selecting your condensing lens, first examine its surface, and if it is not perfectly smooth and highly polished it is not a good lens. Next look through the lens edgewise, and if it does not show clear (has any trace of color when looked through that way) reject it. It is not a good lens.

If you have any doubt whatever as to the inadvisability of using lenses containing color, either purple, greenish or yellow, break a clear, white condensing lens in half; also break a lens containing discoloration in half, put these two halves in as the front lens of your condenser combination, being certain that the rear lens contains no color, and project the clear light on the screen. I think the appearance of the screen will satisfy you thoroughly as to the advisability of rejecting any lenses containing any color whatever.

In a camera the lens receives rays directly from an object and delivers them directly to the screen (plate).

In the projector there are two absolutely separate lens systems, one of which receives its rays from the other, and one of our problems is to so join these two systems that the film picture will not only receive a maximum of illumination, but also that that illumination shall be evenly distributed over the entire area of the photograph, and that the second, or objective system be enabled to pick up the light rays delivered to it by the first, or condenser system, with the least possible amount of loss.

Now these various propositions look reasonably simple, but there are, in fact, some very intricate problems involved. With relation to the condenser system, there is one point on which we have very little accurate data, viz: the exact diameter of the crater for a given amperage. Until this matter is accurately determined our efforts in that direction can only be appproximately correct, and possibly there may always be some differences in this item since doubtless different carbons will slightly alter crater size for a given amperage.

One exceedingly important point, which must be borne carefully in mind, is that when the source of illumination is greater than a point the light ray from the condenser can never be brought to a point. For example: Assuming the crater to be an object, and the spot on the aperture an image (which is the exact condition), if the crater be 4 inches from the apex of the curved surface of the back condenser, and the spot on the aperture 16 inches from the apex of the curved surface of the front condenser, then the diameter of the spot on the aperture will be four times the diameter of the crater, of which it, the spot, is an image, and the spot will be the narrowest part of the condenser beam, since at this point the beam will begin to diverge, therefore we cannot consider the condenser beam as coming to a point further on, as it has always been supposed to do.

Not only have we discovered, in the course of these experiments, the fact that there is a direct ratio between the diameter of the crater and the diameter of the spot on the cooling plate, but we have also discovered the fact that in order to obtain the most even illumination of the entire aperture it is necessary that the crater be "in focus" at the aperture of the machine, or in other words, that the crater and spot be at the respective points of conjugate foci of the condenser lens.

Now in order to understand this some of you must do a little studying. Take a condenser lens and hold it near the wall of a room, opposite an open window, and you will find that with the lens at a certain distance from the wall you get a fairly good image, or picture of the scene out of doors on the wall. This means that the lens is at a distance from the wall equal to its focal length, or, in other words, in a position where rays emanating from a point on an object are brought to a focus in the image, not where the light beam, as a whole, is brought to a point, which it never is. Move the lens further from the wall and the ray increases in size and is quickly lost.

Now, taking the condenser as a whole, the crater of the carbon takes the place of the scene out of doors, and the aperture of the machine the place of the wall. Of course the image is formed much further away than was the case with the lens held near the wall, but this is by reason of the fact that the crater (object) is close to the lens, whereas the out-of-door scene was far away. If a single lens were used, instead of a double one, these distances would again be altered.

And now the question comes. When is the crater in focus at the aperture? This is a somewhat complicated proposition, in which we must take into consideration the known fact that spherical aberration exists in the condenser system, and the further fact that the crater does not set parallel to either the condensing lens or the film, therefore, due to the latter equation there is bound to be precisely the same effect at the spot as there is when the machine sets at an angle to the screen. In other words, since the surface of the crater is not parallel to the lens the whole crater cannot possibly be put in sharp focus at the aperture, or anywhere else. We must therefore adopt a "mean focus point," or point of actual mean focus, since we cannot expect to get a sharp focus of the entire crater for reasons already pointed out. The point of actual focus must, due to spherical aberration, be beyond the plane where the rays from the outer edges of the spot would naturally focus, they being focused nearer the lens than the rays forming the center of the spot, therefore the plane of actual mean focus will to some extent have the appearance of back focus at the cooling plate. In fact the focus of the crater may be assumed to occupy any position between the circle of least confusion, which may be recognized as a round spot with reasonably sharply defined edges, and a plane a few inches in front of the circle of least confusion, which latter may be recognized as a white spot surrounded by a bright blue outline. This blue outline consists of the aberrated rays on the back focus, the white spot in the center of the haze being the image of the crater.

The ordinary practice of the operator is to carry a clear, round spot at the cooling plate, rather than the actual focus of the crater, and so long as he can maintain this spot small enough, and still keep his arc near enough to the back condenser to give good illumination, all is well —provided he can maintain a distance sufficiently great between the condenser and aperture to prevent the rays in front of the aperture from diverging beyond the limits of the objective lens—see Plate 8.

When the distance between the condensers and film becomes too great to maintain a suitable size focused spot at the aperture, and still keep the arc near enough to the condenser, the only alternative is to focus the actual image of the crater, which is surrounded by a blue haze, at the aperture, and in order to do this it is necessary to utilize the whole length of the machine table, and also the shortest focal length condensers usually carried in stock, viz: two 6½ inch, in order that the white center be sufficiently magnified to fully cover the aperture. The spot produced by this arrangement will not look very picturesque on the cooling plate, but will give very superior results on the screen. If the amperage be very heavy it may be necessary to use one 6½ and one 7½ condenser, or if very light then one 5½ and one 6½ will be best. In this we assume the limit of the machine table to be such that approximately twenty-two inches can be had between the condensers and aperture.

NOTE:—You cannot have too great a distance between the condensers and aperture, provided you keep your arc near enough to the back condenser.

The tables given in this article merely provide the minimum, and the condensers therein named are for working with the spot at the plane of least confusion only. I would suggest that any condition calling for greater focal length condensers than 6½ and 7½ will be better taken care of by using the spot with the blue haze and shorter condensers and the limit of distance between the condenser and film.

R. R., Norwood, Ohio, inquires:

> Wishing to take advantage of the kind offer made by yourself and the Moving Picture World in offering advice on Motion Picture Photography, I ask if you will advise me if there is such a thing as a practical reversal, that is, any process by which a negative can be made positive and how it is accomplished? Will you also advise me what books, if any, you would advise a beginner to get in order to gain knowledge along the lines of motion picture photography and by whom they are published.

Lists of books on cinematography were published in the last two issues of the World in this department.

The problem of successfully producing positives direct in the camera is one the solution of which would prove of incalculable value to the many photographers who require only one print of what they take and advance the showing of local events from an almost prohibitive thing on account of cost and time and equipment necessary to a comparatively simple operation which would render it feasible for all except the most humble theaters to take and exhibit their own local events of interest.

Not long ago a letter from Abraham Nelson, who handles the motion picture news items from the North Western States for the Moving Picture World, was referred to me on account of some samples of film and a paragraph in regard to a positive process used by the Northwest Weekly. The samples were lost somewhere in the opening of the mail, and I did not get to see them, so I wrote to Mr. Nelson for further particulars and more samples. The following letter is just received from him:

> Responding to your letter of the 24th inst. relative to the reverse negative process used by the Northwest Weekly:
> I requested Mr. A. L. Smith, who is the owner of the process to come into my office. He called this morning bringing with him the samples which are inclosed and explained the practicability of his process at length. He has attempted to have the process patented but inasmuch as he refuses to divulge the ingredients of the solutions to the Patent Office he has been unable to do so.
> In Mr. Smith's process there are three solutions used: 1st, developing; 2d, reversing; 3d, control solution, which are applied to the film in the order named. The film stock upon which the process works most successfully is the Austin Edwards Ensign brand, Mr. Smith claiming it has finer grain than either the Eastman or Lumiere. He has not been able to obtain this stock on the Pacific Coast lately, however, and the inclosed samples are not of that brand. The pink is a Lumiere, non-halation, the other of Eastman stock which has been toned. You will note from the samples that a film which has been reversed can be detected by the dark border.
> Mr. Smith contends that his process is entirely reliable; that he has perfect control over it under all conditions whether a film is under or over exposed; that the film can be toned, intensified or reduced in the ordinary manner and that the film when subjected to the heat of the projecting machine stands up as well as if it had not been treated. In photographing the subject Mr. Smith uses one stop number higher than usually required for the purpose of preventing excessive contrasts, a matter which must be given attention when the reverse negative process is to be used.
> The value of Mr. Smith's process to people desiring only one copy of a film was discussed in my article in the World. Mr. Smith advises that he took 6,000 feet of the Stockton, California, Rodeo, for Will Davis, of the editorial staff of the "Thinkograph," Lick Building, San Francisco, which was very successful. He desired that I call your attention particularly to the fact that the high lights in the film are perfectly clear and that the emulsion is not in any way clouded by the reversing solution. This is all the data I have been able to gather from Mr. Smith.

The two samples received compare very favorably with prints made from negatives in the ordinary way.

There have been many previous attempts to produce positives direct in the camera both with the ordinary camera and the motion picture camera, but with very little success. I lately saw some samples made by a firm in Cleveland, Ohio, who have been working on this problem for several years. The samples were made on a special film coated by them which, I understand, is to be placed on the market as soon as the machinery for making it in commercial quantities can be installed. These samples were very good indeed and except for the black edges along the perforations—which in no way harms the picture for projection purposes—could not be told from an ordinary positive print from a negative.

Partial reversals of negatives have been obtained by the addition of thiocarbimide and similar reagents to the developer but completely successful results are seldom, if ever, obtained. The writer has tried a reversal process similar to that used in the development of the Lumiere Autochrome plates but has never succeeded in getting good clear high lights.

For the benefit of those who care to experiment with this interesting subject, the following details are given:

Give about twice the normal exposure required for a full timed negative and develop in the developer ordinarily used until the high lights show through plainly on the back; after washing well for one minute the film may be brought out into the ordinary light of the room and the remaining operations carried on in this light. Immerse in either of the following solutions until the black negative image has completely disappeared:

|---|---|
| Potassium Permanganate, 10% solution | 1 dram |
| Sulphuric Acid, 10% solution by volume of 1.98 acid | 5 drams |
| Water | 5 ounces |

or, use this solution:

|---|---|
| Potassium Bichromate | 100 grains |
| Sulphuric Acid | 7 fluid drams |
| Water | 10 ounces |

The latter solution is probably preferable, as it works faster and is not so liable to stain as the permanganate. Immerse again in the developer when the positive image will develop up. Wash and dry. It is not necessary to fix in hypo as the silver which is ordinarily dissolved out by the hypo is what forms the positive image.

Instead of the second development in developer, a sepia brown positive may be obtained by using:

|---|---|
| Sodium Sulphide, 20% solution | 3 ounces |
| Water | 20 ounces |

Formulas are given for small quantities as experiments are most economical conducted with short lengths of film of from one to four feet.

It would be of interest to the department if such of its readers who have tried any of these experiments would send an account of their results for comparison.

Glycin Developer.

A. S. G., Long Island, writes:

> In my work as photo-chemist for a motion picture concern I am using metol-hydro developer for negatives, sometimes substituting paramedophenol for metol. I have been advised that glycin developer for negatives gives less grain. If this is so will you please give me a good glycin formula which I can try out.

Glycin is a slow acting developer which keeps for a long time and yields negatives perfectly free from stain. It also makes an excellent positive developer giving a rich blue black print and when redeveloped gives very pleasing sepia tones. Its keeping qualities and close grained deposit recommend it especially for those whose work is in small quantities and infrequent. When exhausted it becomes strongly fluorescent showing a bluish cast like kerosene and should then be thrown away.

Try the following formula and if you find it satisfactory you can easily calculate for larger quantities.

|---|---|
| Glycin | 2 ozs. |
| Sodium sulphite | 5 " |
| Potassium carbonate | 10 " |
| Water | 1 gallon. |

Comments on the Films

General Film Company

AT THE ROAD'S END (Biograph), Sept. 11.—Isabel Rea, Jack Mulhall and Hector V. Sarno are the principal players in this appealing little story in which a collie dog figures. A pretty and at times a quite exciting romance, is enacted in a country town.

INTO THE DARK (Selig), Sept. 11.—The climax of this drama is unexpected in that it places in a new light the city man who abducts a country girl. Instead of remaining a heartless cad he literally sacrifices his life in order to save hers. Altogether the picture is rather above the average in interest.

THE MAN THAT WAS NEVER CAUGHT (Biograph), Sept. 13.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1493 issue of August 28.

ADVERTISING DID IT (Lubin), Sept. 13.—A clever and original idea is at the bottom of this one-reel comedy. It was written by F. L. Richmond and Romaine Fielding, and is played by Jack Lawton, Vinnie Burns, Horace Morgan, Kenneth Davenport and Henry Russell. The reel should please all audiences.

SONNY JIM AND THE AMUSEMENT CO., LTD. (Vitagraph), Sept. 13.—Little Bobby Connelly is, of course, the central figure in this picture. Bobby brings a toad to Sunday school, and because of this is told that he must not attend the forthcoming picnic. Bobby is not to be beaten, however, and cleverly arranges a "show" in his father's barn, when he and some of his companions present a series of finished vaudeville acts. The finale of the picture shows the picnic crowd, as well as father and mother, joining the audience.

ROMANCE A LA CARTE (Kalem), Sept. 14.—A burlesque comedy in one reel, the cue for action is speed and plenty of it. The fun is of the "slapstick" order and is handled with skill by Bud Duncan, Dave Morris, Ethel Teare, Martin Kinney and Margaret Keyes.

BABE'S SCHOOL DAYS (Lubin), Sept. 14.—A short-reel farce, written and produced by Will Louis, in which Babe Hardy and James Levering do most of the acting. A light but fairly amusing number. "Wandering Billy," a cartoon comedy along original lines, is on the same reel.

WEARY GOES A-WOOING (Selig), Sept. 14.—This is a western comedy with plenty of atmosphere. It is a very acceptable number for the average program. Weary falls in love with the new school mistress, and becomes the object of a joke planned among his associates. The result is that the joke reverts to them.

THE SOUL OF PIERRE (Biograph), Sept. 15.—This Biograph is the fourth of the series of Pierre. The basic theme is the power of mental suggestion. In the making of the subject there is a strong cast headed by Franklin Ritchie and Louise Vale. There are lavish backgrounds, both exteriors and interiors. It is a good picture. An extended review will be found in the issue of September 18, on page 2008.

THE SILENT TONGUE (Edison), Sept. 15.—A neat one-reel comedy, written by Louise Sydmith, the leading roles are taken by Jean Dumar, Raymond McKee, Robert Brower, Guido Colucci and Maxine Brown. The play is compactly built, and has been given a careful production by Will Louis.

DREAMY DUD'S COWBOY (Essanay), Sept. 15.—This cartoon-comedy, a series of animated drawings relating the adventures of Dreamy Dud, who rescues a maiden threatened by an Indian warrior, is moderately entertaining. The last half of the reel is devoted to a finely photgraphed travel subject, "Through the Canadian Rockies."

A LASTING LESSON (Biograph), Sept. 16.—In this picture is found a lesson in temperance. Claire McDowell plays the feminine lead as the daughter of a drunken sot. A reform is brought about in the father by leading him to believe that he has killed his future son-in-law.

MOUSTACHES AND BOMBS (Essanay), Sept. 16.—Rather an amusing farce comedy in which a man becomes terror-stricken over a blackhand sign accidentally left at his door by a moving picture concern. Consequently he runs from every black-moustached man and every round shaped object that happens to cross his path.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL NO. 74 (Sept. 16).—Interesting items of this issue are Japanese day at the San Francisco Exposition, Commodore James Pugh in his hydroplane "Disturber IV," Dumba on his way to the State Dept. at Washington, the Serbian Crown Prince visiting the British Naval Battery, Metropolitan Rowing Club wins quadruple sculls race at Philadelphia, scenes on the Mexican border, canoe regatta on the Potomac, and Arizona Indians viewing the Pacific Ocean for the first time.

THE SHADOW OF FEAR (Vitagraph), Sept. 16.—The fear of insanity is what is referred to in the title. This fear is well portraited by Gladden James. He is supported by other capable members of the Vitagraph Stock Company. It is happily discovered before the close of the picture that he is only the adopted son of parents that might have tainted him with the dread disease, and the lovers of the story are then united.

THE GIRL AND HER TRUST (Biograph), Sept. 17.—A western railroad melodrama, produced by D. W. Griffith and released as one of the Biograph reissues. The picture has tense situations vividly presented by an excellent cast, including a number of players who have become famous in pictures. A review of this subject may be found on page 1175 issue of August 14.

BRONCHO BILLY AND THE CARD SHARP (Essanay), Sept. 17.—There is something of a surprise at the end of this Broncho Billy picture, acted by G. M. Anderson and his usual company. The action develops from Broncho's shooting of a dishonest gambler, who does not die from the wound, as at first appears. A creditable offering.

A HEART AWAKENED (Lubin), Sept. 17.—Ormi Hawley and Earle Metcalf are the principal players in a domestic drama showing how a selfish, pleasure-loving wife is awakened to a more human view of life. The mother instinct in the woman is aroused by a little child left in her care. A wholesome, if not especially novel, drama.

THE PROFESSIONAL DINER (Vitagraph), Sept. 17.—Sidney Drew has a fair opportunity for comedy acting in the role of a titled, but financially embarrassed, Englishman, who is engaged by the manager of a hotel to fill in at dinner parties where for some reason or another an additional guest is wanted. The idea, humorously exaggerated, is made the basis of an entertaining picture.

A GIRL'S GRIT (Episode No. 45 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), Sept. 18.—The title of this one-reel addition to the "hazard" series is not misleading. The audience is given its accustomed amount of thrill by the girl telegrapher, and the entire picture is cunningly devised to lead up to the big stunt. Helen Holmes is supported by Robyn Adair and E. Z. Roberts.

THE GOLDEN OYSTERS (Lubin), Sept. 18.—Billie Reeves is the center of a roughly animated burlesque, directed by Arthur D. Hotaling from a scenario by E. W. Sargent. A case of mistaken identity causes Bill's capture by a blackhand brotherhood. His life is threatened in many ways before Sal (Mae Hotely) effects his rescue.

HEART TROUBLE (Biograph), Sept. 18.—In this quite pleasing comedy-drama, Alan Hale plays the part of a young man who feigns heart disease in the hope of finding an excuse for being near the pretty daughter of a doctor who makes a specialty of heart trouble. The picture provides very acceptable entertainment.

COCKSURE JONES, DETECTIVE (Selig), Sept. 18.—A burlesque detective, who attempts to practice his theories among cowboys in the far west, is the central figure in this mildly amusing subject. A familiar plot has been treated along the usual lines.

General Film Company Specials.

MIND OVER MOTOR (Essanay), Sept. 11.—Despite a few amusing incidents in this two-part comedy, the story in its entirety is a bit thin for extended treatment. The automobile race in the second reel lacks spirit. Eugene Acker, June Keith, Edmund Cobb and other capable players are in a well directed company.

ONE PERFORMANCE ONLY (Vitagraph), Sept. 11.—The idea on which this three-part Broadway Star Feature is based is excellent and it has been carried out with considerable skill. It is not going too far to say that the picture is continuously interesting and steadily increases in dramatic force. An impersonator, famous on the vaudeville stage, is induced to impersonate a wealthy man who has a necklace of great value in his possession. There is an unusual robbery and a complex set of circumstances leading to the capture of the culprits. The picture is in all respects well done.

A MANSION OF TRAGEDY (Essanay), Sept. 13.—In this three-part melodrama Darwin Karr, Beverley Bayne, Lillian Drew and H. Lang play in excellent form, well-defined roles. The play itself is based on an interesting theme, not new, but presented in a somewhat different manner from the usual triangle love affair. Two young women living under the same roof, one the daughter of the house and the other an adopted child, both fall in love with the villain. The character of Hester, the adopted child, is not all that could be desired without a well-based foundation for her actions.

THE MAN SERVANT (Kalem), Sept. 13.—This production of three parts is an especially appealing one. Jack Henderson plays the role of a young novelist, who, in order to get the proper view point of the servant question, applies for the position of valet to a wealthy young man of uncertain disposition. The affair turns into a love triangle with the hero presented as an admirable type of man. The husband is shot by his mistress, which gives the story a highly melodramatic ending and leaves the other couple happy.

THE SOCIAL LAW (George Kleine), Sept. 13.—Grandin release on Kleine Program. This picture has the law governing the union of the sexes, a big subject, with Ethel Grandin in a particularly appealing role. There are some points of the play at which the technique of the picture has suffered, but not to a large extent. Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 2009.

MAN'S LAW (Selig), Sept. 13.—A two-part production, the scenes of which are set among the coast fishermen. The story is at times not quite lucid, and the theme is an old one. The story treats of how two girls loved the same man. One of these he wrongs, and marries the other. He is thrown into the sea by the brother of one of the girls, and left for dead. The wife of the supposedly dead man is about to marry a former lover when her husband looms up, and is finally shot for his pains.

THE REHEARSAL (Biograph), Sept. 14.—This is a well-made two-reel production. The story of the picture is a pleasing one, in spite of the fact that some of its situations are somewhat exaggerated. It treats of the love affair of a young playwright who had an artist sweetheart. Because a play which he has written is at first rejected by the producers, she throws him down. Later he falls in love with the daughter of an actress whom he has befriended, and placed in his mother's care. She discovers the flaws in his work, and helps him to win success.

TISH'S SPY (Essanay),, Sept. 14.—A two-reel comedy that is fairly amusing. The story is not an especially good one, but the business of the play helps it out considerably. The cast is a good one and the action of the play is therefore easy and natural. Lillian D. Drew plays the role of a willful young woman who becomes a "lady chauffeur" to a party of women who go on a trip to Canada, and is trailed by the man she has refused to marry, and by a red-haired detective. Richard C. Travers, E. F. Cobb, Camille D'Arcy, Marion Skinner, Louise Crolius, Eugene Acker, Grant Foreman and Kate Wenster are in the cast.

WEST WIND (Vitagraph), Sept. 14.—A three-part military drama with Eleanor Woodruff, Ned Finley, Darwin Karr and Harry Northrup in the leading roles. The production is a strong one, consistently developed and attractively staged. A white girl kidnapped by a half-breed, is aided in her escape by a squaw whom she has formerly befriended. The production is based on a story by Cyrus Townsend Brady. It has plenty of interesting detail, and is of the sort to please most audiences.

THE PURPLE NIGHT (Knickerbocker Star Features), Sept. 15.—Florence Rockwell has the lead in this three-part subject. The story interests at times, but at no point can be said measurably to stir. The theme is of a wealthy woman artist who tires of her society surroundings and of the considerate man to whom she is engaged. She takes up with a gangster and continues the association until he meets his death in a hold-up which has been engineered for her entertainment. The subject was reviewed in last week's issue.

WHERE THE ROAD DIVIDED (Lubin), Sept. 15.—This two-reel drama offers three different solutions of the plot, and leaves it to the audience to make their own choice. The fate of the little country girl is an interesting question, and the novel manner of the photplay's construction adds to its hold on the imagination. It was written by Emmett Campbell Hall and produced by Edgar Jones. Louise Huff, Edgar Jones, George Gowan and Earl Metcalfe comprise the cast.

THE RED VIRGIN (Lubin), Sept. 16.—The incidents of this three-reel drama are ultra-romantic. The scenes are laid in Moravia and the United States, and kings and other exalted persons tread the boards. A new leading woman, Helen Eddy, makes a marked impression in a dual role. L. C. Shumway, Robert Gray, Jay Morley, Melvin Mayo and George Routh are in the cast.

THE JUNGLE LOVERS (Selig), Sept. 16.—This is a three-part animal story which has been filmed in an itneresting way. The story itself is good and the production well-developed. The story is of a man who went into the jungle of India to get away from civilization in order to work out a scientific idea for a high explosive. In a cave he discovers gases that greatly aid him. A love story is brought into the general theme during the run of which his adopted daughter is stolen by a would-be lover. There are some thrilling moments in the picture, the cabin in the cave is blown to atoms and wild animals approach perilously near the victims, etc.

THE KEY TO POSSESSION (Kalem), Sept. 17.—In this two-part drama we have the story of a man who takes a woman by force, marries her and through kind treatment wins her love after she has consistently resisted his advances for several months. Scenes in a Broadway cabaret restaurant add to the life and spirit of the first reel and in the second the situation confronting the husband and wife is made interesting, although the reconciliation may be regarded as a foregone conclusion. The picture is well acted and carefully directed.

THE SCAPEGOAT (Essanay), Sept. 18.—Bryant Washburn and Edna Mayo are the featured players in this three-part drama that presents an interesting and well constructed story. Miss Mayo, playing an actress, is tried and found guilty of a murder she did not commit. Her acting in the court room scene is marked by sincerity and feeling. Passages of the photoplay dealing with life on the stage have an atmosphere of reality. Dramatic situations are sufficient to hold the interest through three reels.

HIS GOLDEN GRAIN (Vitagraph), Sept. 18.—Director Ulysses Davis has supplied a most effective production for this three-part story of a wealthy man who adopts a poor little girl and saves her from the influence of a thief. There is some capital characterization and the picture is commendably logical in its development. "His Golden Grain" is well up to the standard of the Vitagraph Company's three-reel offerings.

Metro Pictures Corporation

AN ENEMY TO SOCIETY (Metro), Sept. 27.—This five-part subject is an adaptation of the play by George Bronson Howard. Hamilton Revelle plays the leading character, that of a modern Robin Hood who robbed that he might thereby help the poor. The picture is not rich in entertainment quality, partly by reason of the lack of a character of dominating or controlling interest.

Mutual Film Corporation.

SEE AMERICA FIRST (Gaumont), Sept. 13.—The first part of this split reel gives a series of views in and around Asheville, North Carolina, giving a good scenic portrayal of the city and its splendid environs.

KEEPING UP WITH THE JONESES (Gaumont), Sept. 13.—On same reel with above, a "Pop" comedy, picturing the doing of the McGinis family in animated drawings. This is laughable.

INCOGNITO (Beauty), Sept. 14.—This is a good comedy with a touch of originality in its makeup. The story treats of how a millionaire and his daughter sojourned at a summer hotel without revealing their real identity. They are snubbed by the other boarders, but a penniless count learns by accident who they are, and tries to win the daughter, butting between her and her lover. At the finale the count is arrested for robbery. There is plenty of action in this picture which is well developed and interesting.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 37, 1915 (Mutual), Sept. 16.—Some especially interesting items appear in this issue, among which are a Greek volunter corps at Moudres, French doctors giving aid to wounded Turks, Pikes Peak highway lately opened to the public, a near view of Dr. Dumba, and Columbia, an Eskimo girl paddling a kiyak.

THE LITTLE LADY NEXT DOOR (American), Sept. 17.—This is rather a pleasing one-reel picture in which Vivian Rich plays the feminine lead, and Walter Spencer the male lead. The widower falls in love, with his little neighbor, shuns her when her brother, Dr. Sterling, appears on the scene, believing him to be her sweetheart, and is brought to a glad realization of his mistake when he is obliged to accept the services of Dr. Sterling on the occasion of his child's illness.

A FRIEND IN NEED (Beauty), Sept. 18.—This is rather an amusing comedy in which two soda fountain waiters have but one street suit between them. They both fall in love with the same girl, and the one with the most nerve proposes and wins the girl.

EVERYHEART (Beauty), Sept. 21.—In this picture rather a unique method of presenting a moral lesson has been used. The opening of the picture is allegorical in style, and shows a man entering the world and choosing of its precious gifts. He takes with him into the world kindness, and some of what the devil has to offer as well. The remainder of the picture shows how he forgot his kindliness, and caused suffering. The accidental use of the gift again restores to him a happy and normal condition.

CON THE CAR CONDUCTOR (Falstaff), Sept. 23.—Riley Chamberlain plays the role of the conductor who had trouble with the son of one of the directors of the company over the paying of a fare. He disguises himself at the instigation of the superintendent, and plays a trick on the young "insolent" which brings him a substantial raise in his salary. The comedy is very amusing.

IT WAS LIKE THIS (American), Sept. 24.—This is an excellent comedy with George Field, Winnifred Greenwood, Ed Coxen and others in the cast. The most of the comedy is gotten out of the telling of the story of a house robbing by a burglar (George Field) to his friend. The story of the robbing, which borders on farce comedy, is shown on the side and simultaneously with its recitation. The idea is a novel one.

CATS, CASH AND A COOK BOOK (Beauty), Sept. 25.—A nicely pictured comedy, in which Brown's aunt, a wealthy woman, turns her money over to a hospital for suffering cats. She comes to visit him and captures a porch climber, winning a $5,000 reward, which she shares with Brown and his wife. The plot is slight, but quite pleasing.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

THE GREAT QUESTION (American Star Feature-Clipper), Sept. i18.—This three-reel story of New York society is a very engrossing one and is portrayed by a fine cast, including Harold Lockwood, May Allison, Harry Von Meter, Eugenie Forde and William Stowell. The first two reels are given up to the retrospections of a young man about to be married; the last reel pictures the dramatic manner in which his old attachments come up in later life. The story is a strong one and much above the average in settings, photography and general presentation. After the smash comes the young couple find happiness by leaving the city and going back to the great West. A good offering.

THE DOLL-HOUSE MYSTERY (Reliance), Sept. 19.—Demonstrating how a litle childish mischief may lead to grave difficulties. The two children take some bonds with which to decorate their doll's house. As a result the boy's father is suspected of the theft. The plot could have been handled in one reel instead of two, but it is entertaining and there is good suspense during the pursuit in the second reel. Carmen DeRue, Marguerite Marsh, Jack Hull and George Stone are the principals. The subject is one of considerable interest.

THE BARREN GAIN (American), Sept. 20.—A two-reel production that is based on a story of rather doubtful moral tone, and in some ways inconsistent. A young novelist finds on achieving success with his new book that his wife no longer loves him. A young girl, the daughter of a friend, is sent to him to learn something about writing. Love springs up between them. The wife is about to elope with another man when the girl (Vivian Rich), with the help of a friend, contrives a plan whereby the elopement is avoided and the husband and wife are reunited.

THE DEAD MAN'S KEYS (Thanhouser), Sept. 21.—An excellent two-reel melodrama. Riley Chamberlain plays the role of the old locksmith, whose evidence in a murder trial saves his grandchild's sweetheart from being condemned. One of the clerks in the office of a business firm has a key made for a door of the manager's private office leading to the hall. He then shoots the old man and contrives to place the guilt on another of the office hands. At the trial the old locksmith recognizes the man for whom he made the key, thereby turning the tide of affairs.

THE WOMAN, THE LION, AND THE MAN (Centaur), Sept. 23.—This is an exceptionally good animal picture of two reels. The story has plenty of snap and is consistently developed. It treats of a young woman who, after the death of her father while committing a robbery in India, becomes an animal trainer. The man in whose power her father was at the time he was forced into the robbery, hounds the daughter in America, trying to get money from her. She promises to help him to rob her husband, but the conversation overheard by the husband who realizes his wife's position with the man, a lion is let loose in the room where the money is that is to be stolen. The man is killed, and the restitution is complete. Nero, the lion, and Capt. Bonavita are in the east.

BIZZY IZZY (Gaumont All Star), Sept. 24.—Geo. Sydney plays the comedy role in this picture. The comedy is of the eccentric sort, and the type of Jew portrayed by Sydney is somewhat different, and more pleasing than the ordinary picture type. Sydney' comedy is easy and refined, and the production which is in two reels will be amusing to most audiences.

THE HOUSE WITH NOBODY IN IT (Rialto), Sept. 25.—A three-reel number, featuring Ivy Troutman and a capable cast. She plays the part of a young girl who has been left as a foundling with a man and his wife. She is loved by two men, one a villain indeed, who endeavors to win the girl and the fortune left her by her foster father. The story is full of gruesome episodes, and while the cast does good work, it is practically impossible to overcome the unpleasant features of the story. The girl, thinking her mother was insane, fears a like fate. She becomes addicted to the morphine habit and has visions of snakes. In the end she finds happiness. The photography is dark in places.

A DISCIPLE OF NIETZSCHE (Than-O-Play), Sept. 25.—A three-reel production which practically refutes the teachings of Neitzsche. The story is not an especially strong one, nor is its development altogether easy, but there is considerable food for thought contained within it. Florence Labadie and other well-known players of the Thanhouser company appear in the picture.

North American Film Corp.

THE LION'S BRIDE (American), Sept 20.—This new chapter of "The Diamond from the Sky" introduces some very novel situations. The bill poster's pal carries the diamond with him to the Santley circus, where he turns it over to Santley. The latter, in love with the clown's wife, gives it to her. She wears it into the lion's cage. The lion kills her and the clown shoots Santley. All of the principals, including Powell, or Arthur, are present at the circus performance where these events take place. A good instalment.

Pathe Exchange Inc.

PATHE NEWS NO. 73, 1915, Sept. 11—The assortment of news events in this issue of the weekly is very good indeed, with the championship tennis tournament at Forest Hills, L. I.; a pageant in South Boston; an armored car being used in maneuvers at San Francisco and the burning of old battleships, among the most interesting of the subjects.

HOT STUFF (Starlight), Sept. 25.—Some odd mishaps were devised for Heinie and Louie in this rough-and-tumble comedy. Finding themselves in the den of a band of counterfeiters they have all sorts of trouble before effecting an escape. Good for a few laughs.

AN INTIMATE STUDY OF BIRDS (No. 8), Sept. 27.—Close-ups of forest owls and grey owls are found in this brief, but instructive subject, on a reel with "Exploring Ephriam's Exploit." A scene showing a fight between a forest owl and a rat is particularly fine.

EXPLORING EPHRIAM'S EXPLOIT (Cartoon), Sept. 27.—A typical Bray cartoon marked by the humor in idea and execution which always characterizes the work of this artist. On the reel with "An Intimate Study of Birds."

CONSIDERABLE MILK (Starlight), Oct. 2.—As in most of the comedies featuring Heinie and Louie, the humor in this reel is a bit coarse, but effective in its way. An audience is pretty certain to laugh when all of the characters are given a milk bath. There is plenty of action and a good plot for a slapstick production.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

SIMON THE JESTER (Gold Rooster), Sept. 24.—An interesting five-part adaptation of a novel by William J. Locke, directed by Edward Jose, with Edwin Arden in the title role. A review of this well-produced picture wll be found in the issue of Sept. 25, page 2198.

THE LOST SECRET (Balboa), Sept. 27.—Swift action and a fair number of scenes essentially dramatic in themselves, also a subject of contemporaneous interest, should make this two-reel melodrama a moderately popular offering. There is nothing, however, especially novel in the story of an aged inventor who perfects a high explosive for use in war, and of the spy who tries to secure the precious formula. A touch of irony is found in the climax, showing both of the men being killed by the explosive prepared for the destruction of others.

Universal Film Mfg., Company.

IT ALMOST HAPPENED (Nestor), Sept. 2.—A light comedy number, with Billie Rhodes, Lee Moran and Neal Burns in the cast. The humor hinges around a young husband's jealousy. Nicely pictured, with numerous beach scenes, but very slight in plot. An average number.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 184 (Universal), Sept. 15.—Sporting events, war scenes and a miscellaneous collection of interesting views are shown in this, concluding with Hy Mayer drawings.

AVENGED BY A FISH (L-KO), Sept. 26.—A typical knockabout beach comedy, featuring Harry and Mrs. Gibbon. A number of amusing incidents are pictured. The closing scenes show a man-eating shark doing comedy stunts.

SNATCHED FROM THE ALTAR (Nestor), Sept. 27.—A good comedy number, featuring Eddie Lyons as a young man about to be wed. He celebrates, acquires a jag and becomes the victim of a fake wedding. The real wedding next day is interrupted by the pseudo bride. This is very pleasing.

BILLY'S COLLEGE JOB (Imp), Sept. 28.—A comedy number with a familiar plot, in which the young man impersonates his sister in order to gain access to a girls' seminary. There is not much novelty in the development of this story and it makes an average offering.

LADY BAFFLES AND DETECTIVE DUCK IN "THE ORE MYSTERY" (Powers), Sept. 30.—Another of the "Lady Baffles and Detective Duck" series, written by Allen Curtis. Some valuable ore, consisting of a chunk of coal, is stolen from a shipment. Detective Duck rolls to the scene concealed in a barrel. The action is of a burlesque sort and some of the small business very funny.

AN INNOCENT VILLAIN (Joker), Oct. 2.—A comedy number, written and produced by Harry Wulze, with Bob Vernon and Edna Payne in the leads. The young husband is arrested and sentenced to jail for thirty days. He is released unexpectedly and returns to find his home rented to a number of girls. Some amusement follows. This is fairly pleasing.

Universal Film Mfg., Company Specials.

THE SUBURBAN (Imp), Sept. 17.—A four-reel number, written by C. T. Dazey, with King Baggot, Iva Shepard, Wm. Bailey, Frank Smith and Brinsley Shaw in the cast. The story runs along entertainingly, but is conventional and does not contain a sufficient number of dramatic scenes to make the interest intense. The tale is that of a young man who weds without his father's knowledge, is disowned and through the workings of fate does not effect a reconciliation for several years. The last reel contains a horse race, which is perhaps the strongest feature of the production.

ON THE BATTLEFIELD (Universal Special), Sept. 20.—No. 14 of "The Broken Coin" series. This number is remarkable for its spectacular battle scenes, which consume the entire two reels. Count Frederick surprises King Phillip on on the battlefield and the war rages until the principals are all imprisoned in the palace cellar of Gretzhoffen. The night battle scenes are very brilliant and well-pictured. The fighting scenes occupy the whole of this number and there is no particular advance plot.

HER PREY (Gold Seal), Sept. 28.—This two-reel number features Herbert Rawlinson, Barney Furey, Louise Hamilton, Louella Maxam and others. The hero is a pearl diver who strikes it rich. An adventuress induces his best friend to try to steal the big pearl. Later the hero saves her life and she falls in love with him, but he remains true to his own sweetheart. This has quite a pleasing plot, though there is not much feeling developed in the acting. The settings are attractive and the cast pleasing. It makes an average number.

THE SHERIFF OF RED ROCK GULCH (Big U), Sept. 30.—A two-reel Western number, stronger than the average. Murdock MacQuarrie and Edna Payne appear in the cast. The story relates how a gambler—father of the hero—comes back to a mining camp after years have passed and wins a valuable claim away from his own son. He is shot and dies after a confession, knowledge of the relationship being kept from the son. This is a strong story of the type, well presented.

THE GHOST WAGON (Bison), Oct. 2.—A three-reel number, written by Lois Merredyth, with Edyth Sterling, A. Edmundson, Rex de Roselli and Sherman Bainbridge in the cast. The story is of the conventional Western type, but contains many thrilling situations and is above the ordinary in presentation. Two Indian massacres are pictured. The scenic features, horseback riding and fighting scenes are good. The ghost wagon is an old prairie schooner which is shown moving across the plains by means of a double exposure photography. This lends a mystic touch to the story. It makes a good offering of the old style Western sort.

V-L-S-E, Inc.

THE MAN TRAIL (Essanay), Sept. 13.—Reviewed by James S. McQuade on page 2196 issue of September 25.

World Film Corporation.

THE IVORY SNUFF BOX (Brady), Sept. 13.—Holbrook Blinn is the star in this five-part detective melodrama. Finely produced by Maurice Tourneur, the picture is certain to hold the attention of an audience. A review may be found in the issue of Sept. 25, page 2197.

EVIDENCE (Shubert), Sept. 20.—An English melodrama of fair quality based on an old play. Edwin August directed the production and acted the leading role, assisted by a large cast. A review may be found in the issue of Sept. 25, page 2197.

Associated Service Special.

HER ATONEMENT (Associated Service), Sept. 27.—Convincing it its western atmosphere and accurate in its depiction of rough types as they once existed in frontier towns, this five-part picture makes a satisfactory offering for the first feature release of the Associated Service. The story is strongly melodramatic and reasonable enough in its development, as the action shifts from a gambling house in the east to a western saloon and back again to the original locations. There is a wholesome moral lesson at the close. Lillian Wiggins is the most prominent player in a capable cast.

KNICKERBOCKER THEATER OPENING.

Several remarkable features marked the opening of the historic Knickerbocker theater, New York, Thursday evening, September 23, with its new policy of Triangle plays. Red and green, the Triangle colors, prevailed. First to come to notice were the eight ushers and program girls in unique costumes. Alterations to the theater were none the less marked. There was the shadow box, as solid as concrete, throwing its soft shades of gray to the screen over the enlarged orchestra pit, with is symphony band of forty musicians. The balcony had been changed to permit the construction of eleven loges.

The Triangle Film Corporation's advertising campaign for the opening of the Knickerbocker theater has been the talk of the stage world, in both its legitimate and motion picture spheres. The easy conversational style of the ads, the big space, 14 point type and plenty of border of white have made them recognized in any location and eagerly read by newspaper subscribers. Already one prominent legitimate producing firm in New York has copied the Triangle style, which gives opportunity for speculation as to the future of theatrical advertising in the United States. Scare heads and blatant claims may yet give way to the Triangle pioneers in the field of quiet and honest but none the less forceful information regarding their offerings.

VITAGRAPH DANCE.

The dance which the Vitagraph Benevolent Association is to give on the evening of Wednesday, October 27, at McLoughlin's Bayside Casino, Sheepshead Bay, proceeds of which are to go to aid of the hospital and sick fund, is assuming proportions which the committee did not at first anticipate. So many offers have been received from the actors and actresses of the Vitagraph Players, that not only will the dance be held but a vaudeville show is being arranged also.

This show will give the picture thespians a chance to speak their lines for a change; and will afford the public opportunity to see whether the players are as beautiful and as clever as they appear on the screen. The famous Vitagraph Quartet may be the headliners.

With this added attraction, the committee, which is headed by A. Victor Smith, Vitagraph studio manager, is preparing for an immense crowd. Practically every person connected with the picture producing company will be on hand, competing in the dance contest for the championship of the company.

LARGE PICTURE CONTRACT.

One of the largest contracts let by any private corporation has been landed by the Buschman-Traub Company of Indianapolis, Ind., which has signed a contract for the making of not less than 21,000 feet of motion pictures for the National Patriotic League of Washington, D. C. This league proposes to accurately reproduce the history of the state of Indiana during the next few months and to follow the work in Indiana by entering every state in the Union. Tentative contracts have been closed in a number of states for the reproduction of each state's history from the time the state was admitted to the Union to the present time.

Rode 'em Cowboy, That's How

Art Acord Tells Where He Got His Outfit and Also Refers to the Time He "Sat and Looked."

WHEN Art Acord, cowboy-actor, moved to Santa Barbara he brought with him so many saddles, bridles, fancy blankets and other range paraphernalia that those who observed his arrival imagined a circus was coming to town. Art says he "is" a circus and that all his impedimenta prove it, for each represents a trophy won in wild west exhibitions, rodeos, stampedes and general dare-devil performances. He has won forty-two hand-carved saddles, thirty-six silver and jewel mounted bridles, as well as pearl-handled revolvers, "chaps" (twenty-six pair), silver hat bands, cuffs, twelve pair of hand-carved riding boots and ten pairs of silver spurs. Some of these he wears in "Man Afraid of His Wardrobe," the first release of the Charles E. Van Loan series of Saturday Evening Post stories.

Art Acord and a Saddle Won by Him for Riding Broncos.

"How'd I win 'em?" queried Art. "Why, doggone it, I rode 'em cowboy, that's how I did it. Never sat and looked except once in my life. That happened in 1913—my unlucky season. I'd torn the ligaments in my left shoulder riding the hurricane deck of a bronc at the Los Angeles rodeo. Not that I quit—I stuck and finished second, at that, but later while getting off my horse a wild steer gored me, scaring my mount, which naturally reared up and fell on top of me, breaking my leg. It ain't surprising I sat on the fence the rest of the week, is it?"

Art Acord in the Van Loan stories will show his great prowess with horse and rope, flying mounts, roping and tying and all the dangerous dare-devil deeds that make out of the range a place of romance and poetic mystery. Art has one trick that has never been attempted by anyone else—"living or dead," as he explains it. The chances are that no one ever will try to duplicate the feat, which is to ride at a gallop along a canyon or gulley, throw his rope across, catching it fair on the stump of a tree, the other end having been made fast to the horn of his saddle; the rider than dismounts from his horse and crosses the canyon on the rope hand over hand.

JOHN STEPPLING, JR., N. S. G. W.

Word comes from Santa Barbara of the arrival on Friday, August 13, of John Steppling, Jr. The day seems to have been a lucky one, for on the day this new Native Son of the Golden West was a month old he was reported to be "fine and dandy." So, too, was Mrs. Steppling. The many friends of Mr. Steppling will be glad to learn that he has been selected to head one of the American's new comedy companies, the product of which will be released under the Beauty brand. Mr. Steppling's fellow-firemen proffer congratulations.

MARIE WAYNE WITH PATHE.

Miss Marie Wayne, who is supporting Richard Carle in Pathe's Gold Rooster play, "Mary's Lamb," is new to pictures, but well known in vaudeville as one of the team of Deeley and Wayne. Donald Mackenzie, who is producing the picture, saw her in her act and liked her so well that he felt sure she would make good in pictures, and so gave her her chance. Miss Wayne has a charming personality which should appear to good advantage on the screen.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

A WELL-KNOWN theatrical manager from the West became engaged in friendly conversation with the writer at an up-town hotel last Sunday evening, during which the manager said he had often discounted the claims of success over the old line of amusements made by the motion picture people. "Of course the publications devoted to the picture business take advantage of every turn to uphold such claims," he said, "just as the publications on the other side do, but at times I have felt that the picture people were too enthusiastic and their writings could not be sustained by facts. For instance, before the close of the regular theatrical season last spring a number of the New York houses put in pictures and the motion picture interests made much capital of in in support of their contention that the picture houses were driving the old line houses to the wall. My trips to this city are not frequent and I depend upon the travelers to our city, my agents, the newspapers and other publications for information as to what is going on in the theatrical zone of your great city. As a distant observer I looked upon the claims made by your people as a lot of advertising 'bunk.' I was perhaps encouraged in this opinion by the fact that some people making the claims and many who read the reports seemed to harbor the idea that eventually the pictures would drive the old line people entirely out of business, which is an absurdity. I accounted for last spring's developments as a sensible move on the part of the old line managers to keep their houses open for the full season at reduced expense on account of the war and other contingencies having made business dull. Personal survey of the field on this visit has convinced me, however, that the claims made by the motion picture interests are not subject to the amount of discount I placed upon them. The advancement they have made during the past twelve months has been marvelous. I was willing to bet last fall that two-dollar prices for pictures, no matter what the attraction might be, could not be maintained."

The writer intimated that the picture people do not hope to maintain such prices at all times, but are convinced that they can get them with the right kind of productions. They know the people who have been paying such prices to the old line theaters became disgusted with the returns given them for their money and they know these people will pay the same prices for value received at the picture houses. The manager said personal observations had convinced him of this, but there was a doubt in his mind whether the picture people could maintain a standard to hold that patronage. He was reminded that only the fear that they would not be able to get suitable returns had deterred the producers in going as far as they have. It would seem that the days of infancy in the motion picture business have passed and the time for the survival of the fittest has arrived. The standard productions of the day are undoubtedly making a contrast in the picture field like that which existed between the really big productions with all star casts and the "ten, twenty and thirty" shows.

"Yes," said the manager, "I guess you are right. And these big producers must know what they are doing and what they can do or they would not be spending the amount of money they are in advertising. Heretofore they have been confining their advertising to the trade journals. Now they are commencing to fill the newspapers as well. By the way, did you read the theatrical advertising columns in today's newspaper? To kill time this afternoon I took up one of the leading papers and figured up the amount of advertising done by both the old line manager and the motion picture houses. I was surprised at the result and it has had much bearing on my observations."

The figures furnished by the manager are bona fide and based upon actual measurements of the respective advertisements. They do not include press notices. The advertisements of vaudeville and burlesque houses that use motion pictures are not included in the figures accorded to the motion picture houses, but are conceded to the old line managers. Giving the latter the best of it, as the sporting phrase goes, the result will be a surprise to those who only casually glanced over the theatrical advertising columns of last Sunday's World. Of the advertising space in those columns the straight motion picture houses had fifty-five per cent. All old line houses had forty-five per cent. To be exact in figures, the advertisements of the former filled 149 inches of single column space and the latter 121. If confidence of the producers and exhibitors count for anything the pictures are to become breakers of all records.

This advertising proposition may very properly be considered incidentally with the fight the motion picture people are making against official censorship. If it is true that the indifference displayed by the newspapers in connection with that fight was due to loss of advertising on account of the pace set by motion picture houses against the old line theaters, or because the former have not paid due respect to the newspapers, then the time has arrived for the newspapers to get themselves on record as to the censorship question. They are unalterably opposed to anything that may tend to direct censorship against themselves and have devoted columns during the present European war against censorship of war correspondence and mail matter. What about the motion pictures and the constitutional right denied them at Albany by the constitutional convention, whose work the same papers are so strongly condemning? There was a time when the motion pictures were the subject of almost daily merciless attacks by the papers. In some cases the action was justifiable, especially when the moral and sanitary condition and structural safety of picture houses were under consideration. We hear no more of such complaints from either the newspapers or the authorities. No adverse comments are made regarding the pictures exhibited. The pictures and their producers are now, like Caesar's wife, above suspicion, and they are entitled to all equity allows them on the question of official censorship. They only ask the newspapers for exercise of the same zeal for good that was displayed against evil.

The New York picture people do not selfishly ask expression of newspaper sentiment on the official censorship question. They have in view the moral effect it will have in many cities and towns throughout the country where producers and exhibitors are persecuted by narrow-minded and arbitrary petty officials and so-called reformers who hold political berths and personal views above all constitutional rights. The victimized exhibitors of Portland, Me., have just scored a decisive victory over the censorship cranks of that city. The oppression had become unbearable and the exhibitors made a final appeal to reason. The newspapers of the city took up the matter and to them is due much credit for the result. In the published interviews prominent citizens arrayed themselves against official censorship and the newspapers added their editorial comments along the same lines. If ever there was an occasion when the press of the country had an opportunity to answer an appeal to reason and justice it is afforded by the protest of the motion picture people against the mental contortionists who see nothing good in anything but themselves. They ask no repeal of just laws that apply alike to regular theatricals and motion pictures. They protest against discrimination. They protest against official censorship because it is un-American, because it is directly antagonistic to the principles laid down by the constitution of the Republic; because a great majority of the people are opposed to it and would defeat such a measure at the polls.

"NEPTUNE'S DAUGHTER" DOING A BIG BUSINESS IN OHIO.

Messrs. McMahan and Jackson, of Cincinnati, who own and manage the state rights of the photoplay featuring Annette Kellermann in "Neptune's Daughter," advise that they are looking forward to a big business this season if the number of return bookings they have received is any criterion to go by.

It has been played in the Keith houses, including the Hippodrome, Cleveland; also the Hartman, Columbus; the Valentine in Toledo and other big theaters in the state, and is now ready for the exhibitior at a rental price that is right.

McMahan & Jackson state that they have a special cooperative plan for the exhibitor that they will not divulge at this time, and the secret they have will be given upon application. The special lobby display furnished with the picture without cost to the exhibitor, they claim is one of the most elaborate of its kind ever gotten up for a moving picture production.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE.

V. R. Day, of Essanay, Girdles South America.

V. R. DAY, of the Essanay Company, returned from a tour of the West Indies, part of Central America, and the South American continent on Wednesday, September 15. He started on April 20, from Chicago, the trip having occupied nearly five months. During this time he traveled 22,000 miles by water, in round figures, a distance lacking only 3,000 miles of the earth's girdle.

The farthest points of his trip touched Punta Arenas, the most southern town in the world, and the Falkland Islands, in the South Atlantic ocean. He made every port in South America on both the Pacific and Atlantic oceans; and familiarized himself with the conditions of the moving picture theaters in every place visited. He visited all the leading moving picture theaters and got acquainted with the people in charge of the distributing offices.

Cuba, Jamaica, Barbados and Trinidad were touched at first. Every town and village of importance in these islands has its moving picture theaters, large and small. They are well patronized, for the moving picture is the only indoor amusement of the great majority of the population.

V. R. Day.

The National theater, Havana, with a seating capacity of 4,000, covers a whole block. It was built for grand opera, but most of the time it is devoted to the exhibition of pictures. It was erected by the National Club of Havana, which has a membership of 47,000. The membership dues of the club are $1.50 per month, and the surplus receipts soon amounted to a large sum, which, in due time, was used to build the magnificent structure mentioned. Feature pictures of European make form the programs.

In Central America only Costa Rica and the Panama zone were visited. In the town of Costa Rica the Municipal theater, which, like the National theater, Havana, was built for a temple of grand opera, is chiefly used for the exhibition of pictures. In Costa Rica and Panama, aged pictures of European make chiefly form the programs. In both these cities and, indeed, for that matter, throughout the entire South American continent, Max Linder is the crowned hero of the screen, under the sign of the Pathe rooster.

From Panama City the voyage down the entire Pacific coastline of South America to Punta Arenas, on the Straits of Magellan, was begun. The first stop was at Guayaquil, Ecquador, defined by travelers as "the most unhealthy city in the world." Here moving pictures were the only indoor amusement of the people, and the two theaters in the town were crowded during exhibitions.

The next point touched was Callao, the seaport of Lima, Peru. In these towns the eye always catches the word "Hoy," in large letters, on numerous billboards. The stranger unacquainted with Spanish is puzzled at first, but soon finds that "Hoy" means "today," and that each billboard is advertising the picture program at various theaters for that date. A stay of 10 days was made by Mr. Day in Lima, which can boast of a number of fine picture theaters.

The voyage was resumed from Callao to Valparaiso, all the intermediate ports of any importance being made. Everywhere, even in the smallest port touched at, moving picture theaters were in evidence. Valparaiso has quite a number of fine picture theaters. Here Mr. Day met my friend Baron von Tueber and his wife. The Baron is still in the picture business, being chiefly engaged in selling projecting machines and supplies. Santiago, 110 miles inland, was also visited. There also moving pictures formed the popular amusement.

In Valparaiso the old established exchanges exert a strong control over the territory tributary, and use their power to keep out all newcomers. Similar conditions prevail throughout South America, in distributing centers.

The voyage was continued southward, the vessel making short stops at the towns of Talcuna, Concepcion, Cornonell and Lota, all small towns of about 3,000 inhabitants, with the exception of Concepcion, which has 50,000. In all of these, moving pictures furnished the chief amusement.

At last Punta Arenas was reached, more than three months having elapsed since Panama City was left behind. With a population of 15,000, the city has two moving picture theaters, which seat, respectively, 225 and 310 people.

A voyage of 12 days from the farthest southern city of the world brought the good ship and her passengers to Port Stanley, Falkland Islands, in the South Atlantic. The course lay through the picturesque Magellan Straits and the great ocean eastward. One picture theater was found in Port Stanley, with a capacity of 200. It is patronized chiefly by the employes of the British government station. The house is built of brick, unlike similar small theaters, throughout the South American continent and Central America, which are constructed of adobe and straw material, smeared with cement. The latter are so built in order to withstand better the numerous earthquake shocks to which they are subjected, and to prevent the loss of lives in such cases.

And now the homeward voyage was begun, the course for Montevideo, capital of Uruguay, being laid. The trip took four days. Mr. Day was surprised to find that the American dollar was at a discount in Montevideo, the rate of exchange being $1.05 in American money for $1 in Uruguayan. The cities of Uruguay have several fine theaters, the largest being, of course, the Municipal theater in each, which seats about 3,000 people. Buenos Ayres, capital of Argentina, is the distributing point for films used in Uruguay. This city, known as the Paris of South America, has several beautiful picture theaters, all well patronized.

Santos, the port of Sao Paulo, a leading commercial city of Brazil, was reached after four days from Montevideo. Santos has a population of 25,000. It has a few small picture theaters and a large one. It is the great coffee port of the world. Two miles of concrete docks, with two rows of warehouses the entire distance, handle nothing but coffee. Five hundred Brazilian mule teams are engaged daily in unloading coffee that is conveyed to the ships waiting for it in the harbor.

Sao Paulo is near the largest rice plantation in South America, which has been colonized by 15,000 Japanese, an indication of what future years may bring from the "Flowery Kingdom."

One night's voyage from Santos brought the steamer to Rio de Janeiro, one of the finest harbors in the world, ranking with Sydney, Australia; Constantinople, and Trincomalee, Ceylon. In Rio there are many fine theaters devoted to pictures, and the feature programs, of European make, are of good quality.

Bahia, Brazil, was reached from Rio in three days. The population is 80 per cent. negro, originally imported from Africa. Pernambuco was next made in one and one-half days, and then the voyage to Barbados was begun. New York City was reached in eight days from Barbados, one day late, and the long trip was ended.

Mrs. Day accompanied Mr. Day on his travels and became quite familiar with the Spanish language. They had winter most of the time during the trip, and will have the advantage of stay-at-homes by having two winters to their credit for the year 1915.

Chicago Film Brevities.

H. H. Buckwalter, for many years manager of the General Film Company's exchange in Denver, was appointed manager of George Kleine's branch office in that city, Thursday, September 9. Mr. Buckwalter is an able man in various departments of the trade, and is widely known not only in his home territory, but throughout the country, in film circles. Under his energetic and efficient direction, George Kleine's Denver office is bound to show fine results.

Carl Ray, head of the Carl Ray Motion Picture Co. in Los Angeles, and owner of the La Salle theater in that city, and of the Amuse in Cheyenne, Wyo., passed through the city last week on the home trip after visiting Portland, Seattle, Minneapolis and Detroit. On his way to the coast he will stop over at Kansas City and Denver. During his tour, Mr. Ray has been looking over the cities visited, with the object of securing suitable theaters for his amusement enterprises. He reported fine business for exhibitors in all the cities visited, with the exception of Minneapolis, where business was a little slack.

Miss Hazel Daly, of Chicago, has been appointed leading woman of the Tom Mix Company at Las Vegas, N. M., for which city she departed last week. The appointment is in the nature of a try-out, but Miss Daly is no novice, as she was engaged in various roles in several Chicago studios before being selected to play opposite Mr. Mix. Miss Daly is a beautiful young lady, of the blonde type, and graduated from a Chicago high school about a year and a half ago.

Douglas H. Bergh, George Kleine's traveling personal representative, spent a few days in the city last week, after a flying trip which included Dallas, Kansas City, Denver and Minneapolis. Mr. Bergh left for New Orleans Tuesday, September 21, after which he will visit Atlanta and other southern and eastern cities. Toronto will be the closing point of his present tour.

M. C. Eberstein, secretary of the Commercial Investors' Company, which owns and operates the Odeon and Folly theaters in Savanah, Ga., called at this office last week. The Odeon seats 800 and the Folly 400, the former charging an admission of 10 cents for five or six reels of General Film and Mutual service, and the latter, five cents for three reels of the same service. Mr. Eberstein stated that business at the Odeon and Folly theaters is now showing fine improvement over that of the extreme hot weather months.

Arthur Lucas, general supervisor of exchanges for the Triangle Film Corporation, after a few days spent in Chicago, left for San Francisco, via St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha and Denver. While on the coast, Mr. Lucas will visit Portland, Ore., and Vancouver, B. C., returning to New York by way of Salt Lake City, Utah, Minneapolis and Chicago.

H. A. Bandy, manager of the Triangle Film Corporation's exchange office in Cleveland, was a visitor in Chicago last week and, while here, made a call at the offices of the Moving Picture World.

H. A. Spanuth, general manager of the Central Film Co., this city, returned to Chicago last week from a trip to New York. He was much enthused over the prospects for his company.

The Universal Camera Co., of Chicago, through its manager, Arthur B. Rice, has established a department, in connection with its regular business, for the benefit of camera men desirous of changing positions, or looking for positions For quite a nominal fee, Mr. Rice will accept the signature and address of any camera man in the country who produces proper credentials. Owing to his large acquaintance in the manufacturing end of the industry, Mr. Rice feels confident that his new employment bureau should meet with success from the outset.

Since last writing, F. O. Nielsen informs me that the state rights to "Guarding Old Glory" for Colorado, Wyoming and Utah have been sold to J. J. Moore, of San Francisco, and for Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin to the Filmdom Service Co., Milwaukee; also that before the next issue appears the rights of Texas, Louisiana and New Mexico and Arkansas, Oklahoma, Missouri and Kansas will be sold. He reports that the contracts for "Just Out of College" continue increasing. Many exhibitors are waiting to see how the presentation at the Fine Arts theater on Saturday, September 25, will take. He announces that Wm. L. Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, and several stockholders of that company, are coming on from New York to see the presentation.

M. E. Smith, supervisor of George Kleine's branch offices, arrived in Chicago Tuesday, September 14, and left for Kansas City Sunday, September 19. He will return to Chicago in about five days and will then proceed to New York City. Mr. Smith reports very satisfactory business for the Kleine-Edison service throughout the country.

George W. Sammis, manager of the Studebaker theater for the Triangle Film Corporation, has advised me that the opening program will not be given on September 26 as stated in my last letter, owing to the fact that the changes in the interior of the theater will not be quite ready for that date. He could only say that the first presentation will be given some time near the close of September.

* * *

F. J. Rembusch, president of the Mirror Screen Co., Shelbyville, Ind., was in in the city last week, introducing a new screen invented by him, which is called "White Glory." This screen, Mr. Rembusch stated, is particularly suitable for very large, wide, fine theaters, and gives a sharp, clear and beautiful picture at any angle. It is built with seamless fibre, and its cost is one-half that of the glass mirror screen.

The Selig Polyscope Company recently printed an advertisement in an issue of "Paste-Pot and Shears" urging exhibitors to advertise worthy photoplays in the columns of their home newspapers. The Selig Company asserted that by the liberal use of printer's ink, the exhibitors would enjoy increased patronage. This Selig statement was widely copied in newspapers throughout the country, and the Philadelphia Ledger gave nearly a quarter of a page of its editions of Saturday, September 4, to the advertisement.

W. H. Clune, of Los Angeles, one of the most prominent exhibitors on the Coast, stopped over in the city on his way to New York City. Mr. Clune was the first exhibitor on the Pacific Coast to present "The Birth of a Nation," and he took advantage of his brief stay in Chicago to see the big Griffith spectacle at the Colonial.

The initial release of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, "Trilby," was presented at the La Salle theater, at a private exhibition, on Thursday, September 16. The city press gave extensive reviews, which were all highly laudatory. Many exhibitors were present and were highly pleased with the exhibition.

Between two and three hundred people were watching "The Red Virgin" at the Alcazar theater, Thursday night, September 16, when a film in the operating room took fire and filled the theater with gases. A. Johnson, night manager of the theater, in a cool way shouted to the audience that was nearly in panic: "Don't crowd, there are plenty of exits. See the red lights in front of you. There's plenty of time. Don't hurry. Don't push." At the same time Miss Mattie Lamb, the pianist, continued playing, although almost overcome. As the result, the crowd walked quietly out and no one was injured. This shows what cool-headedness on the part of the employees of a theater can do under such conditions. George Garrick, the operator, was burned on the left hand. The theater was only slightly damaged.

The Regent theater, 6746 Sheridan road, was the scene of another malodorous bomb outrage Thursday night, September 16. Several of these bombs were hurled at the stage, seats and walls, and also on the floor. As the audience rushed out, a police detective seized a man and two of his companions started to run. Several policemen rushed to the scene and captured the fugitives. When taken to the police station, two of them gave their names as Edward Harris and Homer Thornton, and stated that they lived at 840 Orlean street, which is a vacant lot. It is understood that this is another case of the war between the rival unions of Chicago operators. It appears that the operator at the Regent is a member of the Chicago Moving Picture Operators, Local 134 (Electrical Union).

W. S. McLaren, manager of the Colonial theater, Jackson, Mich., called at the World office last week. Mr. McLaren was in the city looking up some features, and made arrangements with F. O. Nielsen for showing "The Spoilers" and "Guarding Old Glory" at the Colonial; also with the Central Film Co. for Salisbury's Wild Life Pictures. The Colonial seats 250. An admission of 10 cents is charged for five and six reel features of the makes of Kleine-Edison, Metro, Mutual, World and Fox. Mr. McLaren reported very good business for Michigan, especially in Jackson and Detroit, which are automobile towns. Mr. McLaren calls the World his "Bible."

A. G. Goldstein, assistant manager of the Bell theater, 1539-41 Milwaukee avenue, this city, called at our office last week and subscribed for the World. The Bell is owned by H. Applebaum, and has a seating capacity of about 700. An admission of 10 cents is charged for a program consisting of a big feature and a one-reel comedy. Features of the Paramount, V-L-S-E, World, etc., are shown, while the comedies are from the General Film Company's program. Mr. Goldstein reported very good business at the Bell.

My old friend Adolph Powell, formerly of Kokomo, Ind., and now manager of the Rex theater, 69th street and Racine avenue, this city, made extraordinary preparations for the showing of "The Rosary" on September 17. Nearly every man, woman and child in Englewood turned out to see the powerful emotional photo-drama, which was beautifully screened and accompanied by fine instrumental and vocal music. The "Rosary" was sung by a local duet, a tenor and soprano, with fine effect. The excellent advertising of this event by Manager Powell had much to do with the overflowing houses.

M. Polka, manager and part owner, with J. Hallman, of the Monarch theater, 2123 W. Division street, this city, called last week and renewed his subscription. The Monarch seats 300 and an admission of five cents is charged for four reels of General Film service, with the exception of Sundays, when six reels are shown for 10 cents. The Monarch is showing to very satisfactory business.

The International Motion Picture Association of Illinois has issued a notice to exhibitors that a big mass meeting will be held, under the auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, Friday, October 1, at 1 p. m., in room 210 Masonic Temple, Chicago. The immediate object of the meeting is to discuss five new ordinances, about to be introduced in the city council, which are detrimental to the interests of exhibitors. Other vital questions, closely affecting the welfare of exhibitors, will be brought before the meeting. An appetizing lunch will be served free. The opportunitv will be a rare one to join the Association, as a special offer will be made for the payment of six months' dues. Get together, exhibitors!

R. E. PRATT, IOWA EXHIBITOR.

Out in Winfield, Iowa, Ralph E. Pratt runs a little motion picture theater. Considering that Winfield has a population of not more than one thousand people it may be considered some achievement to run a picture theater there with success; but Mr. Pratt has succeeded and his house is said to be the best small town house in the state. It seats 435 persons and is doing a good business every day in the week. The Monday program is a World Film feature at 15 cents admission; during the rest of the week General Film releases are shown at five and ten cents. Thanks to the enterprise of the neighboring farmers who own automobiles Mr. Pratt has a large territory to draw from and frequently has to "turn 'em away." Mr. Pratt was in New York last week getting acquainted. He has contracted for third-run Equitable releases.

BILLY QUIRK GOES TO HARVARD.

Billy Quirk, long ago known as the "boy comedian," has been engaged by the Harvard Film Corporation, of 231 Tenth avenue, New York, to star in and direct that company's comedy pictures which will be released on one of the programs late in October. "Billy" is best remembered as a star with Solax, Universal, Vitagraph and with D. W. Griffith in old Biograph comedies. In the Harvard comedies he will appear in a new character of his own creation.

Frank P. Donovan is scenario editor and manager of productions. Such well known players as Tammany Young, late of "Bill, the Office Boy"; Marie Weirman, Marie Rohmere, Laurie Mackin and others will support Mr. Quirk.

Florence Crawford

IN "The Man Inside," shortly to be released as one of the Broadway Universal Features, with Edwin Stevens in the leading role, Miss Florence Crawford has an intensely dramatic part to portray. It is that of a spy, unsuspected by the household and unsuspected by the audience, for her work is almost entirely in dark scenes, where in the dim light she might be almost any member of the family.

Florence Crawford.

The hero tears a piece from the spy's kimona as he finds her searching in a drawer for documents, and then follows an exciting time. Like "The Seven Keys to Baldpate," every woman in the house seems to own the kimona with the three-cornered tear. At least it seems like the right one at the first glance, but always the garment is whole, without suggestion of patch or damage of any kind. It is some time before the real culprit is caught and then there is surprise that the dainty maid is really an international spy. There is excellent chance for some fine work on Miss Crawford's part, and she makes the most of every scene. But the hardest part is that those stunning kimonas are properties and must be returned to the Japanese store when the play is finished.

The men in the audience will watch Mr. Steven's wonderful acting, but the women will have eyes for nothing but those lovely kimonas and the uninitiated will envy Miss Crawford in the possession of one. Possession may be nine points of the law—but not in the picture game!

Ruth Blair in Comedy

MISS RUTH BLAIR, the leading lady who recently played opposite Edwin August in "Pyramid Pictures," is organizing a company to support her in legitimate comedy on the screen. The company will be a part of the Smallwood Film Corporation which has remained inactive since the United Film Service's insolvency, but which will again resume work with the production of these comedies.

Ruth Blair.

Miss Blair was seen in "Canned Curiosity," a comedy which proved to her that there was a big field for real humor on the screen.

"I do not care for slap stick," says the attractive actress, "but I do think that the dearth of clean, wholesome humor will assure the success of a comedy company, which aims at only high class production. I myself will write the scenarios." Miss Blair is looking for a leading man, and the remainder of the company will be chosen when he has been secured.

Ruth Blair has already attained some recognition as "the Mrs. Vernon Castle of the Movies." She is tall and slender, and dresses with a faultless taste which has caused her to be likened to the popular dancer.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS IN FINE ARTS PICTURES.

Noted Comedian Signs Three Years' Contract with D. W. Griffith.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS has signed a three years' contract with D. W. Griffith to appear in Fine Arts Films productions.

Mr. Fairbanks is well remembered as the recent star in "He Comes Up Smiling," "The New Henrietta," "Hawthorne of the U. S. A.," and other immensely popular successes of the speaking stage. Mr. Fairbanks' success in picture work was immediate and his initial picture performance in "The Lamb" was considered exceptionally good by the Fine Arts Films Studio.

Douglas Fairbanks.

Fairbanks has now completed his second photo-comedy, "Double Trouble," a film adaptation from Herbert Quick's popular novel. Over four thousand people were engaged for the mob scene in this picture. The whole town of Santa Ana, Cal., was turned over to Director William Christy Cabanne, who used the Mayor, the Municipal Band, polling booth, fire and police departments for some of his scenes. This is probably the first time in the history of motion pictures that a complete town was turned over to a film company. "Double Trouble" is a picture in which Fairbanks portrays a dual personality. In the same cast appear Olga Grey, Gladys Brockwell, Margie Wilson, Carl Forms, Kate Toncray and Tom Kennedy.

Mr. Fairbanks will leave this week for the Fine Arts Films studios in New York, to begin his third picture play, the working title of which is "His Picture in the Papers." This comedy is to be produced by John Emerson, the Frohman star and producer. Mr. Emerson states that he will leave for New York in company with Mr. Fairbanks and the members of his supporting cast. Douglas Fairbanks will remain with the New York studios for three or four pictures and then return to California. He will spend half of his time in New York and the other half at the Fine Arts Films Studios in Los Angeles.

The order in which the Fine Arts films will be released on the Triangle program has now been decided as follows: "The Lamb," starring Douglas Fairbanks; "The Hartyrs of Alamo," featuring Sam de Grasse and all star cast; "Old Heidelberg," featuring Dorothy Gish, assisted by Wallace Reid; "The Sable Lorcha," featuring Tully Marshall and Thomas Jefferson; "The Lily and the Rose," featuring Lillian Gish, Rozsika Dolly and Wilfred Lucas, and "Jordan Is a Hard Road," featuring Dorothy Gish and Frank Campeau.

WRIGHT THINKS CENSOR WRONG.

Los Angeles Councilman to Start Campaign to Abolish Local Censor Board.

THE local board of censors may be totally and everlastingly thrown out of the Lost Angeles city government. Councilman Foster C. Wright has announced definitely that he is preparing a vigorous campaign to obtain the abolition of the board as it now exists.

Councilman Wright has received regulation ordinances from forty different cities throughout the United States and he proposes to study these closely before making any recommendation to the council to effect a change in the present system here. The councilman says that the city already has too many bureaus in the city government.

The censorship question here has been threshed and threshed, with no very great result. New ordinances have been suggested, and different ideas proposed, but in the end the old draft has remained, with perhaps a few touches here and there. The board has opposed certain pictures, and the theaters have gone into court and gained judgments. It is hoped that this new suggestion will stick hard enough to abolish the board and give the exhibitors one chance to show that they can use enough judgment in placing before the people a picture that is worth witnessing.

LASKY STUDIO TO BE ENLARGED.

Jesse L. Lasky and Cecil B. DeMille announce that the Lasky studio will be enlarged immediately, the largest addition to be a great laboratory with capacity for 600,000 feet of film a week. All prints will be made here, instead of at the Lubin plant as has been done in the past. Mr. DeMille, while in the east, visited the plant of the Eastman Co., inspecting the new daylight system of developing, which will be inaugurated at the Lasky studio.

Closely following these big men has come Victor Moore, who will remain here for three years to work in Paramount Pictures. He will be seen as Chimmie Fadden, in the story of his coming out west.

Another famous star to arrive was Edna Goodrich, who first upon her arrival in town, took in one long exhilarating breath of air, sat down, took off her hat and said she was at last out of danger, and she was going to stay for some time. She is here to fill a year's contract. She said that crossing the ocean was the worst experience she ever had. They were afraid of being destroyed by some fiend of the sea with a torpedo.

Others to arrive in the next few days at this studio are Fanny Ward and Jack Dean, who will work in "The Marriage of Kitty;" Charlotte Walker and Mae Murray.

J. A. Quinn Regains Control of Superba Theater.

One of the big deals of the week was the re-transfer of the large Superba theater on Broadway near Fifth, in which J. A. Quinn regained control of the popular playhouse. Quinn is one of the best known of the pioneer exhibitors of this coast. Four months ago he sold the house to a local syndicate, but lately he has been inoculated with the professional bug and the deal shows that he will be in the traces once more. He opened Monday with "The Blindness of Virtue" as a headliner.

Lubin Coming for Opening of San Diego Studio.

Captain Wilbert Melville, general managing director of the western branch of the Lubin Manufacturing Company, has sent out invitations to many film people to attend the formal opening of the new studios at Coronado. The event will take place on the evening of September 24. The guests are invited to meet Mr. Siegmund Lubin, who is on the way west to inspect the new plant in the south.

Sees First Moving Picture with Self as Star.

John Borchard, one of the county's wealthiest pioneer ranchers, had a double thrilling experience the other night at a theater in Oxnard, near here. He attended the showhouse to see his first picture, which had been made in and around his city. His ranch and home has been featured in the industrial pictures, and when his home flashed upon the screen, showing himself surrounded by a laughing group of grandchildren, he became excited and stood up yelling over and over again: "That's me! That's me! That's me!"

The old gentleman was so pleased with the pictures that he has ordered a print to be made of St. John's hospital in Oxnard, so he can send it over to Germany for relatives to look at. He contributed many thousands of dollars to the building of the edifice. A print of his farm and himself will also be sent to the old country.

Film Brevities.

The automobile dealers of Los Angeles have opened their eighth annual show of latest model cars in the big Shrine auditorium. The drawing power of the cars is to be augmented by the presence of four well-known comedy stars of filmdom, who will sing at the shows. They are Charles Murray, Roscoe Arbuckle, Fred Mace and Bob Albright. They are known together as the Keystone Quartette. De Wolf Hopper has consented to appear on the opening night. Others to smile upon the thousands of California motorists who will attend the big show are Weber and Fields, Eddie Foy, Blanche Ring, Charles Winninger, and Constantino, the great operatic tenor.

The police department at Universal City has been demoralized by the loss of Lauro Oakley, who for several seasons has been chief of the copper department. Miss Oakley was married in San Francisco a few days ago to Milton Moor, one of the leading cameramen of the colony, who has been with the Kerrigan players at Lake Tahoe for several months. After a honeymoon at the exposition and San Francisco, the couple will live in a bungalow in Hollywood.

For "He Got Himself a Wife," in which charming Mary Anderson is featured, the Vitagraph certainly put some life. Director George Stanley engaged a bevy of real live California swimming girls, who dove from the pier into the ocean for the big scenes in the picture.

Rollin S. Sturgeon and his feature company of Blue Ribbonites may sail north to Alaska soon if a story now under consideration is accepted for early production. Mr. Sturgeon says that if the story is taken it will be only on condition that he be allowed to travel to the far north to put it on, as that would be the way to do it correctly. The title is "God's Country and the Woman," by James Oliver Curwood. The actors are anticipating the trip.

One of the largest stamp orders ever made by one concern is that which the Horkheimers, makers of Balboa-Pathe features, gave to Postmaster General Burleson this week. They want one million one cent stamps, made in special issue for the exposition, bearing the likenesss of Vasco Nunez Balboa, discoverer of the Pacific ocean. The Balboa has been using them for some time as an advertisement for their Balboa brand films. That is only ten thousand dollars worth of stamps, and it ought to last for some time.

Three hours after they had left the location and returned to their camp, a wild-eyed native rushed in and announced that he had found some grewsome remains. There was excitement for a few moments—until Mr. Sturgeon in his quiet way ascertained the location of the "find"—when it was discovered that "the silent pardner" was the cause of all the trouble, and all had the laugh on the native son.

BERT BOHANNON.

IN a preceding issue of the Moving Picture World announcement was made of the death, at Stamford, N. Y., on September 9, of Bert Bohannon, for several years traveling representative of the Nicholas Power Company. Mr. Bohannon had been ill for several months. The funeral services were held at Evergreen Cemetery on Monday, September 13, and were attended by many of his former associates.

The company has been in receipt of many telegrams and messages of condolence from the many friends Mr. Bohannon had made in the course of his wide travels on behalf of the company. The former traveling representative had been an indefatigable worker. He was a man of lovable personality and sterling qualities of character — and these endeared him to competitors as well as to those of his own house.

Mr. Bohannon, before his connection with the Nicholas Power Company, was for a long time identified with the theatrical business. He was one of the first to recognize in the motion picture the large quality of entertainment possessed for persons of all grades of society and also one of the first to employ motion pictures in vaudeville, in which he was very successful.

KLEINE ISSUES ATTRACTIVE PRESS BOOK.

One of the most attractive pieces of advertising matter issued for the benefit of exhibitors is the new press book published by George Kleine with each of his features. It contains a number of innovations, among which is a complete display of the various sizes and patterns of electrotypes issued, press stories of varying lengths from three-line "sticks" to column feature stories, special matter for exhibitors' publishing house organs, with complete cast of characters, synopses, etc.

One of the most valuable additions is a series of prepared advertisements containing electrotypes. The latter are carefully numbered and obtainable through the Kleine Branch Offices for use either in advertisements or the dramatic columns of newspapers. Their use both ways is suggested in the press book.

The little volume is neatly bound with an illustrated cover, carefully printed on enamel stock in duotone inks.

"The Fisher Girl" will be the fourth picture for Miss Whipple, the Equitable's little leading lady, who has just signed a five years' contract with them, and the third for Roy Applegate, the "heavy," who was chosen for his excellent adaptability for this type of role.

"Peer Gynt"

Cyril Maude Appears in Interesting Version of Ibsen's Dramatic Poem—Produced by Morosco Company.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE motion picture version of Ibsen's "Peer Gynt," produced by Oscar C. Apfel for the Oliver Morosco Photoplay company, with Cyril Maude in the role played by Richard Mansfield on the stage, may be considered from two viewpoints, one natural to the follower of Ibsen, the other merely popular. Either "Peer Gynt" is a poem rich in symbolism and human meaning, or it is, to quote the Morosco company's herald, "a series of dramatic love episodes with five different types of the world's most beautiful women."

Recently the Broadway theater was packed for the first showing of the picture, accompanied by a superb music score, and judging from the comments, from the scenes that obviously scored and those that did not, Cyril Maude's Peer Gynt will be enjoyed with little regard for the poet's message. No doubt it is there for those familiar with the play; but unaided by previous knowledge, one may grope for its elusive significance.

Scene from "Peer Gynt" (Morosco).

Considering the photoplay strictly as an interpretation of Ibsen, we should say that it falls short in not emphasizing what the career of Peer Gynt surely is intended to convey, namely, that wanting and getting nearly everything in life, Peer misses the whole. He misses that which is worth while. We see on the screen a wild dreamer, who, in the effort to gratify his desires, becomes dangerously evil. As crime is added to crime, we receive the impression of an irredeemably perverse nature, whereas authorities are pretty well in accord in believing that Ibsen conceived Peer as a weak, shiftless creature, never a rally bad man.

In enforcing the main motive of the poem, that "love can save to the uttermost," the producer is sufficiently explicit—a subtitle states the contention—but the conclusion would be more convincing if backed by a fuller understanding of Peer's relationship with Solveig. So far as the audience had seen, she was one of many women to whom he was attracted. In each instance he was faithless: but Solveig, unlike the others, remained true and waited through the years for the return of the real Peer.

The weakness here is in the lack of differentiation between Solveig and the others. Peer's meeting with the peasant girl marked the one time in his life that he came in contact with reality and through all his subsequent wanderings it is reasonable to suppose that her image was not effaced, however wild his indiscretions. By a few scenes showing something of the thoughts of the man as well as his physical actions, the depth of the relationship might have been established and Solveig's concluding assertion, "In my faith, in my hope, in my love wast thou saved" would have come with added force.

But it must not be gathered from these comments that the picture is without the spirit of "Peer Gynt." There are many fine touches in the character of the Button Moulder, symbolic of Christ; in the scenes in the mountains, depicting Peer's wild youth and how he came to be banished from the village; in the visualization of his dreams and of the episodes following his journey to America. With lapses of years between each incident, we find him murdering an Indian warrior as the outcome of an affair with a half-breed girl; then smuggling slaves into Carolina; next killing a man in a duel, fought because of a southern beauty; then tricked by a dancing girl in the Far East, and so on, until, an old and broken man, he returns to give an account of his life to the Button Moulder and to Solveig.

Each of the episodes is distinct, almost a complete dramatic sketch in itself, and there is no dearth of swift, gripping photoplay action if a spectator is content to be entertained by the individual episodes without bothering to fathom the meaning of the poet's dramatic scheme. As a study in screen acting and make-up, Mr. Maude's characterization of Peer is a marvelous piece of work. From a wild youth in the fastnesses of Norway, we see him advance along the pathway of his romantic life, adapting himself to each new environment and ageing in accordance with the passing years. He plays a difficult role with feeling and authority. Fanny Y. Stockbridge is an excellent type for Ase, Myrtle Stedman is a sympathetic Solveig, Charles Ruggles suggests something of the spirituality of the Button Moulder and lesser parts are competently presented.

The music prepared by George W. Beynon to accompany this ambitious picture is beautiful in the extreme and always appropriate in reinforcing the feeling in the action on the screen. Mr. Beynon made a free adaptation of Greigg's score, occasionally introducing popular melodies. "Peer Gynt" is released in five reels.

"The Bigger Man"

B. A. Rolfe Releases Through Metro a Five-Part Subject Containing Many Good Moments.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THERE are in "The Bigger Man" many good moments, of strength. In fact, the fifth and last part is replete with situations that stir. The subject is produced by B. A. Rolfe for the Metro program. Jack Noble directs. The story is an adaptation from "The Bridge," Rupert Hughes' play. The theme is of capital and labor, of strife over the construction of a great bridge, with interwoven a love story and side lights on an underpaid immigrant with a family on the other side.

There is at times a tendency to sermonize, but it is not accentuated. A bit of symbolism at the end, in which appear burly labor, fat capital and blindfolded justice, might be eliminated with benefit to the illusion, which leading up to this point is splendidly maintained. The story points its own moral and requires no outside aid.

Scene from "The Bigger Man" (Metro).

In the beginning we are shown conditions as they existed in the days of the caveman, in Bible times and again under feudal lords. Another effective bit is the controversy between the constructing superintendent and the head of the company employing him, in which the former denies they are of different "sets," illustrating his point by reverting to the day when their great-grandfathers landed equals in America, and showing the changing conditions of the two families in the intervening years.

Henry Kolker has the role of John Stoddard, the engineer in love with the daughter of his employer. Mr. Kolker gives an interpretation marked strength. Renee Kelly is Janet Van Nest, the daughter, who when her affection for the engineer is crossed by her father leaves home and goes into the world to work for herself. Miss Kelly plays her part with feeling and sympathy and always has her house with her. Others who stand out are Elsie Barbour as Stoddard's sister and Edwin Boring as Lavinsky, the agitator. So, too, does Maym Kelso in her favorite role of the aunt.

Many of the scenes have for a background the great bridge under construction between Long Island and the mainland. The atmosphere is present. So, too, is this true in the case of the homes of the workers. The story will interest on the labor union side, although it is likely in life the worker behind in his dues would not have been permitted to go to work—if his employer had been anxious to put him back on the job it would have been up to him to pay the dues. The big fact is, however, "The Bigger Man" is a story of human interest.

"Serge Panine"

Biograph Company Produces an Emotional Three-Part Drama from Novel by George Ohnet.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IN PICTURIZING novels of French life, the Biograph company is fortunate in catching a convincing tone. There is a richness, a certain dignity and air of refinement about the settings, and the actors selected to interpret the author's characters seem to fit into the foreign surroundings quite naturally. "Serge Panine," a three-part drama directed by Wray Physioc, certainly bears out this impression, for it is harmonious from first to last—harmonious in its physical background and so wisely cast that it is difficult to see where any of the characterizations might have been bettered. This is unmistakably a feature of artistic quality and more important still to the story-loving public; it is a feature of emotional force.

The first reel is largely preparatory, introducing the many characters—close attention is needed if the relationships are to be grasped—and showing how Michelin and Jeanne are led into unfortunate marriages. Serge Panine is a penniless member of the French nobility and it is necessary that his fortunes be replenished by a wealthy marriage. There is a double wedding—a somewhat tearful affair for both of the brides—and it is after this that the trouble and the real drama in the picture commences.

Serge Panine, having made certain of a comfortable fortune, does not allow a puritanical sense of honor to stand in the way of his amatory desires. The fact that Jeanne is the wife of an elderly banker is unfortunate, but it does not preclude nocturnal visits to the lady's home and it is on one of these visitations that the husband returns, as husbands always will—in pictures. The dramatic meeting has been so thoroughly prepared for in preceding scenes and it is so powerfully acted by Ivan Christy and Edward Cecil that it takes on a tragic intensity seldom realized in a situation of the kind. And the picture keeps advancing with consistent strength to the death of Serge. Apparently the police do not question the assertion that he committed suicide. Admirably directed and exceedingly well acted by the players already named, Mary Maletesta, Erma Dawkins and others, "Serge Panine" deserves a cordial reception.

"Damaged Goods"

A Mutual Film Version of the Well-Known Story of Brieux, Featuring Richard Bennett.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

IN JUDGING this story it is well to remember that it is French in origin, French in conception and French in its naked candor. To a greater extent than most of us realize morality is a matter of geography. In Constantinople polygamy is acceptable to the prophet and favored by the law, in New York it is a felony. In Paris duelling is condoned and even encouraged, in Boston the police would interfere.

Scene from "Damaged Goods" (American).

In English-speaking countries an open discussion (in whatever form) of sexual questions has always been frowned upon. The French, and indeed all the Latin races, cannot understand our viewpoint. They think we are prudish, perhaps pharisaical.

If you view "Damaged Goods" from the Anglo-Saxon conventional standpoint you cannot consider it other than a tremendous "shocker," if you look at it from the French point of view you cannot help giving it your approval. The Mutual version is free from the taint which inheres in most of the "sex problem plays." It does not parade evil in order that good may come of it, it does not linger over the horrid and morbid to titillate perverted tastes under the pretence of preaching a great moral lesson.

There is a distinct and powerful dramatic element in the story, a variation of the tragic idea that consequences are unpitying, that the will and the virtue of man or woman are assailable on a thousand points and that few of us will emerge scathless from the conflict with temptation.

A young man of excellent home training and of honest ambitions has a jolly evening with the boys. He is engaged to be married and this is a final fling and a farewell to the days of bachelorhood. He drinks too much and with a boon companion he visits two women of the kind whom G. B. Shaw tried to chaperon on the stage in "Mrs. Warren's Profession." It is not long before he discovers that his "indiscretion" has brought a horrible punishment upon him. Driven to despair by the thought that his very flesh is corrupted and his very blood is tainted he seeks a cure. His situation is rendered all the more pitiable by the fact that he is engaged to be married to a decent young woman. A long delay in the wedding is bound to set tongues wagging, and like the rest of us the poor fellow is in mortal dread of what "people" will say about him. He buries his secret from all, but he cannot hide it from himself. He is on the point of doing away with himself when he is rescued by the girl who had contaminated him. The girl tells of her own salvation from mental and bodily ruin through the ministrations of a highly skilled and noble-hearted physician. She urges her victim to consult this same doctor. The doctor examines the young man and tells him that it will take at least two years to regain his health. He adds the significant warning: "If you marry before that time you will be a criminal." In the meantime his mother, his bride and all his relatives and friends ply him with questions as to the delay of the marriage. He evades as good as he can and follows the advice of his doctor until he reads the "ad" of a quack who promises to cure all victims of blood poisoning in three months' time. He visits the quack, whose suave manner assures him, and despite his better knowledge and the promptings of his conscience he marries. The rest can indeed be told much better in pictures than in words.

In this production the original cast of the play appears, including Richard Bennett, the actor who impersonates the victim. The actors, including Richard Bennett, handle their parts with extraordinary skill and delicacy. Equal praise is due to the director, who has treated a most dangreous theme in a manner which I think will be wholly free from offence after some of the minor scenes are cut out and the scenes in the clinic are reduced to a flash. "Damaged Goods" as treated by the Mutual is not a problem play catering to the morbid but a genuine tragedy. As such it surely is entitled to take its place in the film literature of the day.

"The Money Master"

A Powerful Visualization of Cleveland Moffett's Play, "The Battle," in Five Parts by George Kleine, with Frank Sheridan in the Titular Role.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

NO TIME is lost in winning the interest of the spectator in the story of "The Money Master." At the very outset interest is awakened, and it grows more tense until the denouement relieves it by shedding the happy glow of joyful and rengenerated hearts on the dark places in our social structure. The thought that the evils in modern life, which are shown on the screen with such appalling realism, are still existent in most of our largest cities may tend to lessen our pleasure in witnessing the happiness of the characters appearing in the final scene; but such a thought will tend to make every spectator a co-worker in the effort to lessen those evils, and to banish squalor and want from the homes of the poor and especially from the lives of the young.

This sounds like sermonizing, but the reader is reminded that "The Money Master" in moving pictures is not only a gripping photoplay, but a most powerful sermon as well. Take the home of the Dvorak family, for example. What a picture of squalid misery and poverty it reveals! Look at the bed on which the two little motherless tots lie, with its rags and its rottenness. And what a sty is the living room of the Dvoraks. Veritably Augean in its hardened, accumulated filth. Or turn your eyes to the East Side bakery, where Dvorak, the head of the family, works. Hens and chickens and roosters scratch among the flour sacks, and the men who knead the dough and handle the baked product look not quite so cleanly. And, as if to prove that human beings amid such squalid surroundings become bereft of human sympathy, see how a big savage baker strikes a helping water boy prone to the floor with his pail of water, and afterwards smites an aged beggar, who toils painfully downstairs to this cellar bakery to beg a morsel of bread. Surely the grinding of the poor by poverty grinds all that there is of him—soul, heart, mind and body.

These incidents all serve to show the painstaking devoted to details in this Kleine feature. One seems to breathe the foul atmosphere, so realistic are these scenes. Equal pains have been taken with other settings.

Reverting to the bakery for a moment, when the Money Master takes charge of it and makes the boastful pledge, "I'll show you what a real man can do with his two hands for capital." After a single month the spectator finds that an electric dough-making machine, bought on time, has been installed, and a modern bakery started. That space of time would scarcely have given an unknown brainy man, without means, time to show what his ability as a baker was. Why not have the lapse of a year, or six months at least? Such a subtitle would have been more reasonable and convincing.

Scene from "The Money Master" (Kleine-Edison).

Frank Sheridan impersonates the leading role with commanding force and strong personality. In the midst of all his wealth and unyielding spirit, the multi-millionaire is shown shocked and unnerved for a moment by the suicide of his victim, Lawrence, and by the news of the death of his wife. The devilish nature of the man in his fight for great wealth is glimpsed when we see him watching in fiendish glee the burning of his competitor's factory. His redemption from a heart of savagery to that of benefactor is strikingly shown when he humbly awaits the decision of Margaret Lawrence to become the wife of his recovered son, and presents them with a check for a munificent amount to be used in bettering the condition of the poor who live in his tenements.

Paul McAllister gives a typical characterization of the anarchist, Dvorak, and Calvin Thomas, as Philip Ames, the recovered son of the money master, is always acceptable. Sam Reid gives a finished and picturesque impersonation of the deep sea diver, Gentle. Miss Anne Meredith and Miss Fania Marinoff carry the roles of Margaret Lawrence and Jenny Dvorak with appealing art.

"A Child in Judgment"

Three-Reel Edison, Offering a New and Startling Solution of the Eternal Triangle Problem.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE Eternal Triangle is never equilateral, at least not in the moving pictures. Husband usually has to devote his time to his profession that wife and child may have the necessaries of life together with such occasional luxuries as his depleted purse can afford. When the villain comes along, as he usually does, he has no rent to pay for wife and child, no butcher's bills, grocery bills, dairy bills, doctor bill's, hence he has it on the husband from the outset. When, as in "A Child in Judgment," he is the employer of the husband and can send the latter away so that the wife may be unprotected, the problem is far from being equilateral, presuming that wifey is one of those inanities who easily renounce love, honor, faith and all that makes life really beautiful, for the sake of going to the theater and to supper in some new clothes with her husband's employer.

Scene from "A Child in Judgment" (Edison).

Wifey does this in "A Child in Judgment." If she ever had any character worth mentioning, it vanishes during the brief absence of her trusting husband. She permits his employer to provide her with clothes and passes the greater part of the night in his company. Mother sends for hubby and there are some unpleasant revelations. The employer hastens to his employee's home to secure a compromising letter. The child, a little boy, has a habit of playing with his father's loaded revolver, a habit deserving encouragement, as we shall see. When the villainous employer tries to enter a window to get the "papes," the child shoots him dead. Husband thereupon takes his wife into a warm embrace and the moral is obvious.

"The Dancing Doll"

Three-Reel Kalem "Broadway Favorite" Offering with Pauline Curley in a Pretty Dancing Role—Story a Sort of Idyllic Fairy Tale, But Well Acted.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

A SPECTATOR does not fail of finding entertainment in this offering, "The Dancing Doll," one of the Kalem "Broadway Favorite" pictures; but the good things in it are almost, not quite, due solely to the playing of the cast. The story furnishes the situations and at once falls into the background. And the situations are effective, not because they are a part of a strong, convincing setting-forth of human fates and passions, but because the players make them real. Especially is this true in those closing scenes in which Wayne Nunn has to play a half-mad man improbably cured of a not convincing waywardness of mind. Yet one, in pictures like this, doesn't mind their lack of realism. We never heard a critic say that—well! Tennyson's "Princess" was an impossible story judged by the standards of life. Everybody knows that it is; but not in essence. That poem is a sort of dream and this picture is not a dream, but merely a setting. It gives a pretty chance for Vivian Wessell to dance and act. She is charming as a dancer and also a good actress. It makes an offering of entertainment that is very fair, because of her and the players who support her.

The picture opens with a few scenes whose only purpose is to explain happenings to come later and to give a kind of setting to the lives of the two principals, a mountain boy and girl. He is an artistic carver of dolls and she full of rythms and anxious to win laurels as a dancer. That this ambition is not wholly probable in a mountain girl who has seen only the dancers at the summer hotel, we can pass over as not even likely to occur to a spectator who comes to it to be freshly entertained. That she gets a chance to dance as an attraction at the hotel, all uninstructed as she is, and wears a costly gown from her little log cabin in which she lives with her old father, will probably be more noticeable. But even so, the scene Miss Wessell makes is as pretty as can be and has excellent entertainment in it.

Scene from "The Dancing Doll" (Kalem).

From this point, we are carried pretty fast through her leaving home with a city dancer; her stage life in New York; her marriage to the dancer; the showing-up of his character, and her running away from him back to the mountain cabin where her old time sweetheart still lives. The ending is a fantasy; but the ability of Wayne Nunn to act convincingly regardless of his basis lifts the end up markedly.

"A Desert Honeymoon"

Romaine Fielding Produces a Three-Part Drama of Marked Power—Released by Lubin Through General Film.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IN DRAMATIC intensity, character portrayal and power in the development of the story, this three-part drama, produced by Romaine Fielding, so far excells the average western subject that there are few points of comparison. The plot is not novel in its essentials, but the treatment is so ingenious that the production, in its entirety, is decidedly unconventional. It is a vitally human picture; one that grips and leaves a vivid impression. It indicates that all the life has not been squeezed out of western drama if a director knows where to find it and how to present his story on the screen.

Scene from "A Desert Honeymoon" (Lubin).

The basis of the plot may be explained in a few words. A young man goes west in search of a fortune, promising to send for his sweetheart when he is established. His chum Bob introduces him to Chiquita, a Mexican dancing girl, with whom he promptly starts an affair. He is brutalized by drink and when unsophisticated Mary appears in the western town he is hopelessly ensnared by the fascinating Chiquita. He shoots Bob, is condemned to death and finds that the dancing girl will not leave him. Determined to die together, they enter the trackless desert and the screen darkens on the two lovers half buried by the wind-swept sand. It is a suitable and artistic ending for a strong picture.

If this sktechy synopsis gives the impression of an ordinary story, the spectator will be agreeably surprised. He will be quite carried away by the intensity of the performances given by Mr. Fielding as Jack and Vinnie Burns as Chiquita. A more impressive portrayal of a temperamental dancer than that supplied by Miss Burns could not well be asked. She is a bewitching wild-cat that makes the behavior of Jack entirely understandable. Mr. Fielding is no less effective in his presentation of the drink-crazed man and Violet Malone is just the type for the character of Mary. The judicious use of close-ups is one of the features of an excellently produced picture.

"The Spender"

George Probert Featured in Forceful Production of a Creation by George Brackett Seitz—Pathe Gold Rooster Play.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

WITH George Probert heading the cast, and such excellent support as James McCabe, Sam Ryan, Alma Martin and Paul Panzer, "The Spender," in its filmed version make a distinct impression. Donald MacKenzie has directed the picture, and has seen to it that everyone of its five reels teems with action.

The play is a good one, and well adapted to the screen, presenting as it does life from various angles. The production is a big one, full of realism, some comedy, and plenty of melodrama. Its situations are tense and have been handled with skill.

When Peter Lobert played his last card in his extravagant era and forced his father to the unhappy alternative of dismissing him from his household, he found himself face to face with the conditions that confront any man without a cent in his pocket. Peter, however, was amply equal to the occasion, and befriended by the old family servant, he starts for America on the trail of a rich heiress, posing as a prince.

Scene from "The Spender" (Pathe).

Again he strikes an obstacle in the fulfilment of plans that would make him independent for life, for his newly rich father-in-law has decided that his daughter's husband shall provide for her support.

Then comes the last alternative when Peter and Bagley go to work in the McCabe factory. Following this a strike is declared by the factory hands, incited by Jim Walsh a walking delegate.

Here occur some of the big scenes of the picture, when the factory is set afire and Peter, through the rescue of McCabe, brings his own affairs to a happy climax. The plot of the story is well developed in the production. The labor question is not dwelt upon too largely, and the human interest contained in the stirring details of the play will undoubtedly win for it success.

Tom Terriss, who has been making feature pictures for the film company which bears his name at Yonkers, N. Y., has purchased a large plot of ground in Mount Vernon, N. Y., and will begin the building of a large motion picture manufacturing plant in the near future.

Henry Otto, one of the latest additions to the producing staff at Universal City, is at work preparing sets for the immediate production of a three reel drama by Harvey Gates, "The Measure of Leon Dubray." No cast has thus far been assigned.

"The House of a Thousand Scandals"

Four-Reel American Feature of Modern Theme and Picturesque Treatment.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THERE is melodrama of the old-fashioned sort in "The House of a Thousand Scandals" greatly relieved by a touch of that new spirit which is in revolt against wearisome conventions. The story, therefore, is a mixture of what is passing away in sensational drama with what is coming to the front in aesthetic drama. The fault lies in this admixture—the whole production is not "woven into a single fabric, conceived and executed in unity and harmony." It is nevertheless interesting, at times beautiful, and it is entirely modern in subject matter. It is the story of a young millionaire who tries to make ennobling use of his inheritance and meets with a vast deal of envy and malice on his way to human betterment. That he and the villain are creatures of the melodrama which emptied theaters of intelligent people, is to be regretted, but there is abundant compensation in the way of beautiful sylvan scenes derived from those of the Greek theater and in a wondrously pleasing interpretation by shapely May Allison.

Scene from "House of a Thousand Scandals" (American).

Miss Allison's figure holds the eye every moment she is in evidence because she perpetuates the ideal of womanly perfection, as does the Venus de Milo. She is graceful in movement without a particle of the suggestive in her attitudes—she is Psyche reincarnated. She and the others in Greek costume are trying an experiment which may come to be a national philosophy, that of brightening dull work with artistic play. The young millionaire pricks the bubble of the social uplift—it is a dull business. He takes his poor people away from the squalid and the sordid into an uplift that is joyous, of spiritual significance, a renaissance of simple and wholsome happiness.

"The Song of the Wage-Slave"

A Five-Reel Metro Production Based on the Poem of Robert W. Service and Featuring Edmund Breese.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush

THERE are some strong moments in this play, there is much good acting, an abundance of splendid exterior settings and a deep theme. So much for the credit side. The play could be made still stronger by judicious pruning, which I understand will be done before the feature is released to the exhibitor.

The idea of a man who has tasted misfortune to the very lees of the cup reciting his experiences to the Indian in whose tent he found refuge is a very happy one and as one scene after another unfolds itself on the screen our interest grows. All runs smoothly in the circle that begins in life among the white men and closes in the Indian's tent. What follows after that partakes of some of the weakness of an anti-climax. The experience of Ned Lane (Edmund Breeze), ended logically and convincingly with his apparent death. There are strong points after the resurrection if we manage to recover quickly enough from the shock of the anti-climax.

The realism in the play is fine; the scene showing the fatal fall and the drowning of the proud father being well worthy of special mention. The work in the mine is splendidly done, the blasting of the "jam" of the logs was another clever piece of realism. All through the play there runs a subtle strain of profound philosophic thought, which no spectator can miss and which all will enjoy. There were two timid attempts at allegory, both obviously unfortunate. They are so short and have so little connection with the essence of the story that I am sure they might be omitted with profit to the play as a whole.

"The Golden Oyster"

A Lubin Caricature of Melodrama by Epes Winthrop Sargent, Visualized by A. D. Hotaling.

IT IS entirely too easy for a born story teller like Sargent, who can whisper split-reel comedies by the hour, this representation of the ridiculous in old-fashioned melodrama. It needs no exaggeration to be funny, hence it may become less ridiculous when its general likeness is not retained. Epes has also included that romantic drama which is, as a rule, indefinitely placed somewhere in the Balkan Mountains, which largely concerns the fortunes of Prince Rudolpho, though in this case the Prince is brought to America to recover the crown jewels of Rootootania. He is promptly relegated to the background in order to permit a comedy cab driver to have his inning, then Prince Rudolpho, Comedy Cabby and all the members of the Black Brotherhood, bomb throwers who have obtained possession of the crown jewels, are ignominiously cast into the background by "Sal," the cabby's best girl, impersonated by Mae Hotely—she is the whole play from the time she gets busy.

The cabby merely stumbles upon things. He finds the badge of the Golden Oyster, usually worn by Prince Rudolpho when the latter leaves it in a cab plain marked "Pennsylvania." Cabby is captured by the Black Brotherhood under the supposition that he is Prince Rudolpho and generally maltreated. Now "Sal" gets to work and does not trust to luck—she does things. Single handed, single hearted, she goes to the rescue of her lover. She prevents his being slowly drowned in a bathtub by turning off the water in the street, then, disguised as a plumber, she obtains admission to the house. Step by step, through native ingenuity, Sal discomfits the Brotherhood, and rescues her lover, a glorious character, one worth repeating in future comedies—the girl who does.

"The Little Mademoiselle"

Vivian Martin Gives Pleasing Performance in Shubert-World Film Five-Part Production.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE appeal of this Shubert-World Film picture, in which Vivian Martin gives a winning display of her ingenue mannerisms, is unmistakable. Director Oscar Eagle supplied a production in all respects satisfactory, and had a competent company at his disposal, but with due regard for the combined virtues of the picture the fact remains that the winsome innocence of Miss Martin is its biggest asset.

Mark Swan's story might have been written to order for the World Film star, so well does it suit her personality. She is Lili Breval, a little French girl just arrived in America, and her knowledge of English is nil. It is decreed that Lili shall marry a cousin; but neither one is enthusiastic about the union and inadvertently, or rather fortunately, as it turns out, she strays away from the train while on a journey to Buffalo. Nobody understands her French and she is wandering about, pretty badly frightened, when chance brings Jim Pemberton, the ne'er-do-well hero of the tale, to her aid.

Scene from "The Little Mademoiselle" (World Film).

Jim was a failure at college, but as a squire of dames he qualifies exceedingly well. They are both penniless and somewhat at a loss to find shelter for the night; but Jim rises to the emergency with fine spirit, locates a deserted cabin in which they take refuge, and in due time restores the girl to her guardians. Needless to say, he is about to become one of the family when the story closes.

In presenting the plight of the two young people, wandering wearily about the country, there is opportunity for many attractive rural locations. Also there are numerous deft touches in the scenes acted by Miss Martin and Arthur Ashley, as James Pemberton, immediately following their unconventional meeting. By way of excitement, an audience is treated to an automobile race, won, of course, by the hero, who is ready to do anything to earn a few dollars. And to bring the romance to a satisfactory conclusion there is a final reel of explanations and reconciliations that appear to leave every one quite content. "The Little Mademoiselle" is altogether a pleasing offering, tastefully presented.

"THE REGENERATION."

Owen Kildare's Dramatic Story Is Visualized in Spectacular Picture Produced by William Fox.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

A MORE sympathetic and stirring picture of slum life than that found in Raoul A. Walsh's production of Owen Kildare's "The Regeneration" need not be desired. As a human interest story, strong and true in its characterizations, and as a spectacle introducing a wonderfully realistic depiction of a fire aboard a crowded excursion boat, the photoplay scores an emphatic success. The production is most artistic in detail and accurate in presenting the depressing squalor of tenement life on the East Side of New York. Moreover, the two principal characters, those of Owen and the pretty settlement worker who brings about his regeneration, are notably well handled by Rockcliffe Fellows and Anna Q. Nillson.

In its original form, the story used in this picture was an actual human document rather than a work of fiction. A product of the East Side slums, Kildare did not learn to read or write until after his thirtieth year, and his first book, "My Mamie Rose," was based on the facts of his own youthful life. Parts of it were a beautiful tribute to the young school teacher who inspired a desire for knowledge and saved him from the career of a gangster. Dramatized for the stage, the story was called "The Regeneration."

The photoplay is thorough in presenting the life of Owen from childhood and showing how he is the natural product of an unfavorable environment. Director Walsh was fortunate in his selection of types that are in no way an exaggeration of those to be found on the streets of the East Side and in the dives frequented by Owen. There is a grim sort of humor in many of the scenes; there is an abundance of excitement in others, and throughout, the picture carries a genuine heart interest that cannot fail to move an audience.

"A DISCIPLE OF NIETZSCHE."

Subject Is the Initial Release of the Than-o-Play, the Three-Reeler Every Third Week.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE Thanhouser Company will release on September 25 "A Disciple of Nietzsche," a three-reel subject. It marks the introduction to picture-goers of another brand, the Than-o-play, which in three-reel length will be issued every third week. The script of "A Disciple of Nietzsche" was written by Phil Lonergan. The story is of a follower of the German writer who is so impressed with the idea of the survival of the fittest, of the rights of the strong against the weak, that he attempts to put these principles into effect in his own household.

Marshal Welsh has the role of the disciple who prevents his daughter from befriending a weaker sister. Mr. Welsh at times betrays a tendency to act. Florence La Badie is the weaker sister. To her go the honors of the picture. Lorraine Huling is the daughter who befriends the girl weakened by the strain of poverty, in turn to be the recipient of the benefactions of the daughter of the disciple. Harris Gordon is the ex-convict and crook who so nearly succeeds in winning the hand of the rich girl and whose character is exposed by the weaker sister waxed strong. Mr. Gordon's work is well done, but he has not the physiognomy that goes with the portrayal of a convincing crook.

Scene from "A Disciple of Nietzsche" (Thanhouser).

The strength of "A Disciple of Nietzsche" lies chiefly in its denouement. It is there the story reaches a point of real interest. As revelatory of the beliefs of a widely quoted German, the picture may be said to be educational; in sub-titles are extracts from Nietzsche's work, which set forth in brutal candor matters that well may serve as the basis for later discussion, heated and otherwise.

"THE DUST OF EGYPT."

A Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature Which Features Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS production refuses to fit any of the general classification being neither drama nor comedy. There is a little—very little—of the former but a whole big lot of the latter. An Indian Princess in the heyday of her youth is put into a mysterious sleep by a wise man of the desert. She is duly mummified as royal princesses were in Egypt some thousand years ago. As a mummy she is shipped to London or New York. Here the plot begins to follow the adventures of the well-known play "Niobe." The mummy is left in the home of a bachelor who is engaged to be married. He is still somewhat dizzy after his experiences at a "farewell dinner" and it does not take him long to fall into a heavy sleep. Thereupon the "mummy" comes to life and what follows is the troubled dream of the newly engaged bachelor.

THE DUST OF EGYPT
VITAGRAPH
BLUE RIBBON FEATURE

Scene from "The Dust of Egypt" (Vitagraph).

Edith Storey plays the part of the mysterious Princess and she does it exceedingly well. Naturally a lot of most amusing incidents and episodes arise, the young Princess not being familiar with modern life wonders in turn at all the strange inventions of the centuries. The seltzer bottle particularly takes her fancy and there are a good many exhibitions of seltzer bottle comedy. The transitions from Egypt to the Western world and back again are all done with great cleverness. Miss Storey imparts a vein of genuine humor into her part which will please every audience. She takes somewhat of a dislike to the fat family servant and pursues him with her jewelled dagger which must get many a hearty laugh.

Antonio Moreno does his share toward the fun-making. Some of the situations are very amusing especially that where Miss Edith Storey is instructed in the use of pajamas by her modern friend. There are weird and mysterious moments in the play, the juxtaposition of the very ancient and the very modern often resulting in laughable contretemps.

Anna Little is now a member of the American-Mutual studios, having been engaged to play opposite Arthur Acord in the "Buck Parvin" series of three-reel Western comedy-dramas being prepared for the screen by Charles E. Van Loan.

"THE EXPLORER."

A Lasky Production Based on the Well-Known Book and Featuring Lou Tellegen.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THE theme of this feature has many novel aspects which afford the producer special and ample opportunities to emphasize the superiority of the screen over the speaking stage. The plot of the story takes the spectator from the crowded thoroughfares, and the famous sights of London and Paris into the wilds of Africa. The contrasts are startling, and, of course, pleasing. They impart an air of vivid realism to the feature which constitutes its greatest charm.

Scene from "The Explorer" (Lasky).

The story itself is quite out of the ordinary; it is full of "action" and like most lively narratives with a dramatic germ, it lends itself easily to adaptation for the screen. The African scenes, I think, are worthy of special mention, the realism in some of the battle scenes notably the attack at the ford is striking and impressive. The love story has some very pretty developments. The acting was quite good, Lou-Tellegen scoring strongly as Alec McKenzie the explorer. Tom Forman had a comparatively thankless part and strove hard to realize all its possibilities. Dorothy Davenport was charming and convincing as Lucy Allerton. Settings and photography were good without exception. A little less handshaking and lingering in the parting scene between the explorer and George Allerton would have strengthened rather than weakened that part of the play. The tragic "Goodbye" registered well on the first attempt and the rest was, to judge by the comments of the audience, "de trop."

V-L-S-E OPENS NEW BRANCH OFFICE.

Constantly expanding business of the Big Four, has necessitated a change in the Denver headquarters of this organization, from a sub to a branch office, and the establishment of a new sub-office in Salt Lake City. Denver, heretofore, had been a division office of the Kansas City Branch, of which E. R. Pearson is manager.

Frank R. Harris, who has charge of the Denver sub-office, has been promoted to branch manager of the new division—a step which is in line with the general policy of the V-L-S-E, to promote men from the ranks, rather than going outside to obtain executives for important positions.

The new branch office will be located at the present address of the sub-office, 1031 17th Street, until November 1st, when it will occupy large space in the Wight Building, 1433-37 Champa Street, Denver, Colo. The Denver office will cover New Mexico, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and sections of Montana, Idaho ,Nevada, South Dakota and Nebraska. The Salt Lake City sub-office will serve the latter sections, and also Utah.

With the organization of the Denver branch office, the V-L-S-E now has fourteen main branches throughout the country, and five sub-offices—an interesting commentary upon the remarkable growth of this company in the six months of its existence.

"BILLY'S STRATAGEM" (Biograph).

Included in the cast of this one reel Biograph reissue beside Claire McDowell, Wilfred Lucas, Robert Harron and W. J. Butler, are Edna Foster and Inez Seabury, two child actresses of exceptional merit, upon whom the bulk of the action in this picture envolves. It is a spectacular film depicting the life on the frontier of civilization, and has for a climax, a remarkably realistic scene showing the explosion of the entire stockade.

While their mother is taking lunch to their father who is in the woods felling trees, little Billy and his sister wander away from the stockade to play. They have not gone very far, however, when they hear the war whoop of the Indians nearby. Dragging his sister along, he reaches the stockade and with the aid of his grandfather manages to bar the gate. The Indians soon force the barrier and the old man is slain. Billy and his sister make their way to the cabin with the Indians following. Having blocked the door, Billy makes his way to the inner room and makes a fuse of shavings to his father's store of powder. Dragging his sister through the window, Billy runs around the cabin, slams the door on the Indians and makes his way outside of the stockade before the explosion takes place. The terrific crash that followed attracted Billy's parents and other settlers, and averted an Indian raid which would have otherwise proved fatal.

The acting and photography are up to the usual standard found in the Biograph reissues. D. W. Griffith directed. It is released Friday, October 8, on the General program.

"TIDES THAT MEET" (Essanay).

This three-act photoplay by Clinton Dangerfield, the well known author, is a strong story of heart appeal and adventure. It deals with the unsettled conditions in Mexico and brings out all the lawlessness and the dangers to which citizens are exposed. A wealthy girl who goes to Mexico as a Red Cross nurse is kidnapped by a bandit. Her brother, who is an engineer in the country, engages another outlaw to assist him in releasing her. The price of the bandit's aid is that the brother kill a man he hates but who is a friend of the brother. Seeing no other hope of freeing his sister, he shoots his friend. He leaves him for dead, and after his sister is released joins the rebels, hoping to be shot, caring no more for life. The friend proves to have been only wounded, however, and the Red Cross nurse cares for him until he recovers, when they are married. Later the brother is captured by the friend he shot, who, not knowing he is his wife's brother, turns him over to another faction of rebels, who tie him to a stake and leave him to die. But another girl who loves the brother discovers the relationship and tells Carrington, who rushes to save his friend, reaching him just in time. Bryant Washburn, in the leading role of the brother, does exceptional acting in bringing out this emotional role.

Scene from "Tides That Meet" (Essanay).

"AS IN DAYS OF OLD" (Reliance).

The Reliance feature "As In Days of Old" is from the pen of Francis Powers, who also directed it. Mr. Powers will be remembered as a stage director for David Belasco. The costuming and the filming of "As In Days of Old" presented unusual requirements, since the photoplay is in two periods separated by twelve years. There was also a considerable difficulty in casting this feature since child players took the part of the small hero and heroine and adults created the roles of the same characters as young people. The difficulty was to secure a likeness sufficient to impress the photoplay audience with a sense of illusion.

Scene from "As in Days of Old" (Reliance).

The cast includes the juvenile players, Harold Goodwin and little Betty Marsh, niece of Mae Marsh; Maxfield Stanley, Francis MacDonald, Julia Fay, Mary Higby, Wilbur Higby, William De Vaull, Eleanor Stone, Edwin Harley and William Moody.

Director Powers states his theme in a bit of verse which is to be flashed upon the screen:

"The days of old,
The days of gold,
And the days of forty-nine,
Placed the knighthood age
Of our country's page,
With the chivalry of all time."

DONALD BRIAN IN "THE VOICE IN THE FOG."

Donald Brian, one of the most popular young stars of the American stage. will make his debut as a photodramatic player on September 27, in the Paramount Picture, "The Voice in the Fog," produced by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play company and adapted for the screen from the novel of the same name by Harold MacGrath.

Mr. Brian for four years has had the unusual distinction of being the leading masculine musical comedy star of the country. He stepped into fame over night, as it were, when he originated the role of Prince Danilo, in "The Merry Widow," and for the past few seasons he has been the star in "The Siren," "The Marriage Market" and "The Girl from Utah."

Scene from "The Voice in the Fog" (Lasky).

"The Voice in the Fog," is by the author of "The Goose Girl" and "The Puppet Crown," both picturizations of which by the Lasky Feature Film Play Company have met with universal success wherever shown. Harold MacGrath is an imaginative writer of fiction whose work never fails to meet the popular demand.

In "The Voice in the Fog," Mr. Brian will appear as Thomas Webb, a young Englishman who inherits a title but who transfers its use to a professional crook for three months, in payment of a gambling debt. Webb becomes a steward on a liner and meets a young American girl from whom the professional crook previously had stolen a valuable necklace. The theft occurred in a London fog and the girl recognizes Webb's voice as having heard it the night the necklace was stolen. Webb did not know of the theft, however. In order to keep watch on the young man the girl employs him as a private secretary. As the climax of the melodramatic situation Webb is able to explain himself and claim the love of the girl when he reveals his true identity at the expiration of the three months' period. Among the famous Lasky artists with Mr. Brian are Ernest Joy, Florence Smith, George Gebhardt and others.

"THE PROTEST" (Horsley).

For the first three reel feature release on the Mutual program David Horsley offers "The Protest," a drama of every day life enacted by Crane Wilbur, the popular photoplay star, supported by a big cast which includes Leona Hutton, Margaret Gibson, Robert Newcombe and Joseph Von Meter.

"The Protest" is a very pretentious effort as in its making more money was expended than in perhaps any other picture of a similar length. This does not mean that attention was directed principally to mounting the play but to every phase of construction—namely story, cast, director, photography and other technicalities as well as the settings. The result, as may be expected from such means, is most gratifying to Mr. Horsley who feels that exhibitors and public will share in his gratification when the picture is released through the Mutual program on September 29.

Scene from "The Protest" (Horsley).

In the matter of story "The Protest" is a most happy selection. Its theme is sociological in nature, treating a profound problem suggested by a situation in every day life—that of women, especially in the lower strata of life, being compelled to trade upon their virtue for every favor in life they receive. In its treatment it reaches fine dramatic heights capped with a climax that is startling in its effectiveness.

Crane Wilbur plays a district attorney who lends a helping hand to the girl who protested, a part interpreted by Leona Hutton.

"The Protest" is a splendid drama and an excellent subject for the first release of the new brand. Jay Hunt directed.

FITZMAURICE STAGES "AT BAY" FOR SCREEN.

"At Bay," the sensational drama by George Scarborough, which was a Broadway hit two seasons ago, will soon be seen on the motion picture screen. George Fitzmaurice, whose latest production, "Via Wireless," was released last week, is handling the production of "At Bay." Like its predecessor, the Scarborough play will be released as a "Gold Rooster" feature. Gail Kane, whose frequent appearances on the screen are making her as well known in that art as she is on Broadway, will be presented in the lead of "At Bay."

Through such productions as "Stop Thief" and "The Commuters" Director Fitzmaurice was becoming known as a "surefire" comedy producer while in the George Kleine camp. But, rare as sure-fire laugh producers are, George Fitzmaurice's ambitions leaned to more pretentious dramas, and from the reception accorded "Via Wireless" he has proven that he can hit the "bull's eye" just as regularly in that field. In "At Bay," which offers an unusually strong story, replete with action, he expects to surpass his previous enviable performances.

BOSWORTH, INC., RELEASES FOURTH ELSIE JANIS SUBJECT.

As its latest release, Bosworth, Inc., announces Elsie Janis, the international favorite of the stage and screen, in her fourth film subject, "'Twas Ever Thus," a novel photoplay presenting a triple love story from the prehistoric age up to the present.

The play opens with the stone age when a lithe, bare limbed girl in a panther skin is wooed in the fashion of those days. The film shows how the early lover gained his ends and then carries the audience up to 1865, when in graceful ringlets and fetching poke bonnet, silk shawl and flounced crinoline, pretty Prudence Allen of Boston ventures down into battletorn Dixie to nurse her wounded brother. A pretty romance follows and the sedate lovers of the Civil War period finally win out over all obstacles in an interesting series of events bringing the story to a fitting close and introducing the third episode presenting a startling love story of present day life.

Scene from "'Twas Ever Thus" (Bosworth).

In this production the star appears at her best and in the different episodes of the story her varied talents are given a wide field. Supporting Miss Janis, Bosworth, Inc., have selected an exceptional cast including such able players as Owen Moore, Myrtle Stedman, Hobart Bosworth, Harry Ham, Helen Wolcott and Joe Ray.

The producers, in staging this play which was also written by Elsie Janis, were called upon to secure an unusual variety of scenes and in this respect have gone to particular pains to give the subject the desired backgrounds. A striking contrast is offered when the film turns from the cave-man period, when animal skins were used both for furnishings and clothing, to the over-dressed Civil War age with its imposing southern homes and quaint interiors and thence up to present metropolitan settings with their developments of city life. It is readily expected that this release will even win greater favor than any of the previous Janis film-plays.

THANHOUSER TALKS OF BIG THINGS TO COME.

In a recent statement Edwin Thanhouser, president of the Thanhouser Film Corporation, announced plans for many big Thanhouser productions. "We will produce for the New Mutual program a three-reel Than-O-Play every three weeks and I plan to have each of these productions represent the utmost in motion picture work. I have engaged the Baroness DeWitt, a member of Swedish royalty, for a special production to be released soon. This play I believe will indicate my aim to furnish exhibitors with the highest standard of motion pictures regardless of cost.

"I have in preparation at the present time a series of feature productions that I believe will prove of vital interest to exhibitors. They include subjects of great educational importance which have been woven out of real human experiences. Many novelties will appear in these forthcoming releases which I believe will be found exceptionally interesting."

EDISON FINISHES "THE MAGIC SKIN."

"The Magic Skin," the second Edison release on the Kleine-Edison program scheduled for October 13th, was given its finishing touches last week at the Edison Studios in Bronx Park. Everett Butterfield, a newcomer in the ranks of picture players, will be seen in the familiar role of the idealist and dreamer. Butterfield is now playing the juvenile lead in "The Last Laugh" at the Thirty-Ninth Street Theatre. He is an actor of unusually wide experience, having handled more than seven hundred different parts during his stage career. He is well remembered for his work in "Ready Money," "The Misleading Lady" and "The Man Of The Hour." The leading feminine role in "The Magic Skin" has been placed in the competent hands of Mabel Trunnelle.

NO CHANGE IN ESSANAY RELEASES.

George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, announces that Essanay will continue its present system of releasing photoplays and that no change whatever in this line is contemplated.

"Essanay, as heretofore, is releasing all photoplays on its regular program, including the Chaplin comedies, through the General Film Company, and will continue to do so," said Mr. Spoor. "The only photoplays otherwise released are its special features of four and more reels, which are released through the V-L-S-E-, Inc. Exhibitors therefore, will continue to book Essanay productions through the General Film Exchanges, and its special features through the branch offices of the V-L-S-E, Inc.

"Confusion seems to have arisen in the minds of some exhibitors in regard to Essanay's releases in the United States, through the announcement made in trade papers that Essanay's London office had decided to inaugurate the plan of releasing photoplays direct to the exhibitors.

"The system was determined upon by the London office because of special conditions of the trade in Great Britain and will be confined to that territory alone. It in no way affects the releases of the Essanay Company in this country."

"THE BRIDGE OF TIME" (Selig).

"The Bridge of Time," a Selig Diamond Special in three reels, written by Roy L. McCardell will be released in regular service by the Selig Polyscope Company on Thursday, October 7. Harry Mestayer is featured and is supported by such artists as Guy Oliver, Virginia Kirtley and Eugenie Besserer.

The story of "The Bridge of Time" is a most unusual one. Ralph Kennard, the last of a noble English family, falls in love with a girl in humble station. Kennard with his best friend plans her downfall. The girl's brother seriously wounds Kennard who, in his delirium, is carried back across the bridge of time into the Elizabethan period. There he becomes Sir Ralph Kennard, a roisterer and is wounded by a yeoman. How the yeoman and his sister save Sir Ralph from disgrace, how the girl finally marries him, and how a plot against the Queen's life is circumvented are details in a most exciting story.

Kennard finally regains consciousness, physicians tell him he will live and he rights the wrong he has done to the girl. Correct atmosphere of old English days, beautiful photography, and some talented acting make "The Bridge of Time" a most unusual picture.

This is the first appearance of Mr. Harry Mestayer in a three reel Diamond Special.

"STANLEY'S SEARCH FOR THE HIDDEN CITY" (Horsley).

Considerable interest is attached to "Stanley's Search for the Hidden City," the title of the Centaur Feature release for September 30th on the Mutual program, as it marks the picturization of Francis Worcester Doughty's first scenario under the arrangement recently made with David Horsley by which the famous fiction author is to write all the stories for the Centaur Features.

Anyone who has read any of Mr. Doughty's works is aware that the creator of "The James Boys," "King Brady," "The Young Sleuth," and over twelve hundred stories of a like nature is possessed of a most vivid imagination and a fertile brain to concoct scenaries that embody suspense and thrills. A spectacular theme with these phases he has used in "Stanley's Search for the Hidden City."

Scene from "Stanley's Search for the Hidden City" (Centaur).

The story deals with H. M. Stanley's mission to Africa on behalf of the New York Herald to locate a hidden city. He is accompanied by two young reporters, Jack Wilson and Tom Dixon.

Stanley succeeds in his quest and occupies the Hidden City at the end of a stirring fight with the king and his followers.

In the cast are the famous Bostock animals and Captain Jack Bonavita supported by a strong cast of plays.

"BREEZY BILL—OUTCAST" (Mustang).

This two-reel Mustang picture produced by the American Film Company delighted its audience at a private showing a few days ago. It is a Western, as the name implies, rife with stirring action and punctuated with thrilling deeds.

Jack Richardson, playing the title role of "Breezy Bill," gives a convincing demonstration of his reckless daring as a rider and his true dramatic ability. He is chief of a band of "rustlers." Under his roof lives a girl who believes herself to be his daughter. She is known to the country as "The Masked Rider," never appearing in the open without a black mask over her face. She is presumed to be a man by all except "Breezy Bill" and his men. Helene Rosson, youngest of leading women, plays this part with dash and daring splendidly contrasted with her deft dramatic touch.

Scene from "Breezy Bill, Outcast" (American).

This is a strong story, depicting the trials of a young girl—the innocent victim of another's grudge. It teaches a sound lesson, and is an offering of unusual merit. However, there is a cheery ending when William Stowell, playing Jack, the hero, "discovers" her after wounding her with a shot, and she is nursed back to health and successfully wooed by him.

This picture, which has some unusual scenic locations, is released Friday, Oct. 8, on the Mutual program.

"THOU ART THE MAN" (Vitagraph).

In the Vitagraph production of "Thou Art the Man," a picturization of George Cameron's original drama founded on the biblical story of "Uriah," the scenes are all laid in India. In order to register in detail the habits and customs of the natives and to invest the completed picture with the correct atmosphere, Director S. Rankin Drew scoured the docks of New York and Brooklyn, where vessels arrived from Calcutta and Bombay, for native Hindus. After two weeks' search, with the aid of an interpreter, he succeeded in engaging twenty Indian natives. He placed them in charge of the interpreter, whom he held responsible for their daily appearance. The first day at lunch Mr. Drew came within an ace of having a riot on his hands when ham sandwiches were given them. They could not eat salt meats on account of their caste, and it was only when chicken was substituted for ham they agreed to continue in the picture.

Scene from "Thou Art the Man" (Vitagraph).

While Mr. Drew is spending considerable time in the production of this feature, the attention he is giving to the smallest detail will add to the interest of the story, which is one of dramatic action of self-denial, of a love that endures and adventure. In selecting his cast Mr. Drew chose players whose characteristics applied to the author's conception of the principals in the story, and when "Thou Art the Man" is released S. Rankin Drew, Virginia Pearson, Joseph Kilgour and George Cooper will be seen in the portrayal of characters that will add to their reputations in no small degree.

CREATING A CIRCUS OVER NIGHT.

A full fledged circus, animals, performers, clowns and all the seemingly muddled activities enlivening its entourage is shown in Chapter 22 of "The Diamond from the Sky," the North American's $800,000 photoplay. It is a regular circus right on the screen, and as a matter of fact the filmed performance is the only one it ever gave, although the performers are some of the best known in the "big top" business. It happened this way:

When Director W. D. Taylor tried to obtain a traveling show in and around which to take his scenes there was but one circus available and it was only after vast difficulty an arrangement was made to move it to Santa Barbara. Then came bad news: local officials of the town in which it was showing placed the entire aggregation in quarantine.

It looked as though the production of the picture would be delayed. That is, it looked that way to everyone except Director Taylor. He immediately got busy on the long-distance telephone, and early the following day he received assurances from various sources that forty-eight hours would see a strange assortment of men, women, horses, animals, wagons, musicians and all the human medley that makes up the entourage of a "big top" show arriving in Santa Barbara. They came.

An announcement in the local newspaper invited everyone to come down to the base ball park the following Sunday and see "Taylor's Titanic Tentshow." And the residents of the town eagerly accepted. They saw a regular show, for Director Taylor had rehearsed his show at night, ably assisted by the ringmaster of the quarantined show, who somehow managed to escape the vigilance of the local authorities.

Scene from "The Diamond from the Sky."

As a result Chapter 22 has all the atmosphere of the sawdust arena, making an unusual and a unique setting for the actual drama of the story.

EDISON'S "VANITY FAIR" POPULAR.

The Edison masterpiece starring Mrs. Fiske in "Vanity Fair" for release through the Kleine-Edison Feature Service October 6th, is attracting considerable comment among film men privileged to witness advance showings because of an extraordinary scene depicting Lady Richardson's Ball at Brussels. Immense preparations were made for the staging of the scene, innumerable furniture "props" and costumes of the period were rented and the entire Edison Studio was given over to the "Vanity Fair" producers. The description of Lady Richardson's Ball in Thackeray's novel is frequently referred to as one of the greatest bits of prose in the English language. To visualize this as Thackeray would have wished to see it was the ambition of everyone interested in its staging from director to "props."

PANTAGES THEATRES BOOK "NEAL OF NAVY."

Through the Seattle Pathe office "Neal of the Navy" has been booked to run in the Coast Pantages Vaudeville houses, to open in Pantages' new million dollar house Sept. 20, where each episode will run for a solid week; from Seattle each serial will go over the Pantages circuit, Tacoma, Spokane, etc. At a private exhibition of the first three episodes of "Neal of the Navy" Mr. Pantages pronounced these pictures to be the best he had seen yet and that they were very timely subjects.

"MY LADY'S SLIPPER" (Vitagraph).

The Vitagraph Company has produced a number of Cyrus Townsend Brady's stories for the screen, every one of which has been a decided success, but in "My Lady's Slipper," now in course of production under the direction of Ralph W. Ince, have what in all probability will be the most interesting of this author's stories yet released. When completed, it will be a feature picture in every sense of the word—a feature cast being employed in its enactment, including Anita Stewart and Earle Williams, Julia Swayne Gordon, Joseph Kilgour, Harry Northrup, William Shea, George Stevens and George O'Donnell, the well known operatic star, a scenic production that will rival in beauty and accuracy of detail anything yet attempted by the Vitagraph Company and a richness in costuming that will appeal to lovers of sartorial adornment.

Scene from "My Lady's Slipper" (Vitagraph).

The scenes in "My Lady's Slipper" are laid in the 18th century and the action takes place in and near Paris during the time of Louis XVI. The story tells of Francis Burnham, an American naval officer, who escapes from a British convict ship and is on his way to Paris to see his country's minister.

"My Lady's Slipper" will be the first costume play in which Anita Stewart has ever appeared, and is a screen play that will give her opportunity to display her versatility to exceptional advantage.

"THE DRAGON'S CLAW" (Knickerbocker).

In "The Dragon's Claw," the Knickerbocker release of September 29, a rather unusual story is presented. This photoplay, written and produced by Stanner E. V. Taylor, is rich in tense situations and dramatic moments. Its theme circles around an Indian curio representing a dragon's claw which is the good luck omen of a certain Indian tribe. Possessed by a little girl's father at the time of his murder by a bandit gang, this claw was stolen by their leader. Years later the girl, now a woman, finds out that her husband possesses a dragon's claw and, believing it to be the only one in existence, believes that she has married the murderer of her father. Not able to bring herself to kill this man in cold blood, she leaves him alone on the desert to die. He sees that she is being molested by some highwaymen and saves her at the cost of his own life. She again deserts him and comes upon an Indian trader who has a score or so of these dragon's claws. It develops that they are very common in the neighborhood. Realizing her awful mistake, she goes back to the dead body of her husband to mourn over it.

Getting away from both the cut-and-dried western picture on the one hand and the conventional society drama on the other, this feature promises to be a big drawing card. This is even truer in light of the fact that the cast is headed by two most popular stars.

Walter Hampden, who created the role of Manson in "The Servant in the House" and played the lead in Clyde Fitch's "The City," takes the part of the husband. Playing opposite him is Marion Leonard, who is a big screen favorite.

"THE BRIDGE OF TIME" (Selig).

"The Bridge of Time" is a Selig Diamond Special in three reels, produced by Frank Beal, from the story written by Roy L. McCardell. This Selig Diamond Special is further noteworthy from the fact that it is the first appearance of Mr. Harry Mestayer, the well known star, in a Selig three-reel production. It is a story of reincarnation, of the 20th century, and then back to the atmosphere of the Elizabethan days.

Ralph Kennard, the last of a distinguished family, engages Marie Waters, a girl of humble station, to catalogue his ancestors. Dick Darcy, one of Kennard's reprobate friends, aids him in his wrong doing. Marie's brother encounters Kennard and wounds him.

Kennard in his delirium crosses the "Bridge of Time," and his soul returns to the body of a wicked ancestor, Sir Ralph Kennard. He imagines himself on the point of death, but is finally saved. He orders his servants to bring the maid he wronged that he may wed her, and to fetch her brother who wounded him that he may forgive him. The marriage ceremony is performed.

In the meantime, Sir Richard D'Arcy plots against Sir Ralph Kennard and Queen Elizabeth. Bob, Marie's brother, overhears the plot, kills two of the villains, and is also instrumental in saving the life of Queen Elizabeth. Sir Ralph loses his own life in the melee. Then it is that Ralph Kennard regains consciousness and comes back across the "Bridge of Time." Surrounding his bedside are the nurse, the doctor, Marie and Bob. The doctor assures Marie that Ralph will recover, and at the bedside a real marriage ceremony is performed.

Harry Mestayer is supported by an all-star cast, including Guy Oliver, Virginia Kirtley, Eugenie Besserer and others. There are many exciting combats and there is not a dull moment in this Selig Diamond Special, released in regular service on Thursday, Oct. 7.

"ALL FOR A GIRL."

H. J. Streyckmans, who produced "All for a Girl" from the play by Rupert Hughes, featuring Renee Kelly, the star from "Daddy Long Legs" and the "Garden of Paradise," reports that he is disposing of state right territory very rapidly.

The New England rights have been acquired by the Phoenix Feature Film Corporation, of Boston; New York City by the Pioneer Feature Film Company; Eastern Pennsylvania by the Electric Theater and Supply Company; Western Pennsylvania by the Liberty Film Renting Company; Michigan and Wisconsin by the Casino Film Exchange. Negotiations are being closed for other territory.

NEW PATHE OFFICE IN SPOKANE.

Pursuant to heavy inquiries and demand for Pathe subjects in the Spokane territory this company has found it advisable to open a new office here for the convenience of the exhibitors. The Spokane office will be equipped with a new print of all Pathe releases and a full line of advertising matter will be carried on all subjects. P. L. Carroll, who has been connected with the General and Fox Film Companies in this territory for the past two years, will have charge of the office. The location of the new office is right in the heart of the business district, which will make it very easy for the out-of-town exhibitors as well as the city exhibitors to reach.

"A BLACK SHEEP" (Selig).

After a distinguished career in the spoken drama extending from 1888, Otis Harlan has announced his permanent retirement from the stage. Hereafter, Mr. Harlan expects to devote his talents exclusively to motion picture work. He will shortly make his initial bow to movie fans in the Selig Red Seal Play "A Black Sheep."

Harlan has had a notable career on the legitimate stage. He has starred in most of the Hoyt comedies both at home and abroad and has acted as principal fun maker for such stars as Anna Held, Ethel Levy, Elsie Janis, Thomas Q. Seabrook and others. He also staged the original production of "Baby Mine." He aided in the organization and was prominently identified with the Bijou Circuit for years and is reputed to be among the wealthiest of American actors. His initial work in motion pictures, according to Selig directors, will prove a revelation in fun making qualities.

Scene from "A Black Sheep" (Selig).

"I hesitated to enter motion picture work not knowing whether or not I would make a success," said Mr. Harlan the other day. "I feel that I have arrived in Movieland and I shall continue definitely in the work. I hope in time to be directing motion picture productions."

"The CLOSING NET" (Pathe Gold Rooster).

"The Closing Net," a Gold Rooster play adapted from Henry C. Rowland's novel of the same name, has been finished by Edward Jose and shown privately for the first time this week. In point of breathless suspense and tense situations it is an advance even upon those fine productions by the same producer, "The Beloved Vagabond" and "Simon the Jester." A fine cast, consisting of Howard Estabrook, Kathryn Browne-Decker, Bliss Milford, Madeline Traverse and Arthur Albro interprets the story in a way that leaves nothing to be desired.

Scene from "The Closing Net" (Pathe).

The story is that of one Clamart, who is the illegitimate son of a wealthy man and has been brought up in an orphan aslylum. Because of the lack of a proper bringing up, he becomes a burglar whose extraordinary ability is feared by the police. He becomes associated with a band of international crooks, with one of whom, a beautiful woman, Leontine, he falls in love and in turn is loved by her.

"The Closing Net" is the kind of a production that will hold any audience. Mr. Estabrook does some very finished work as "Clamart" and the rest of the cast is so really excellent that it is making invidious comparisons to single out any one player for particular praise.

AMERICAN'S FIRST "VAN LOAN" A HIT.

Buck Parvin is "in" the pictures at last. The first release, "Man Afraid of His Wardrobe" of the Charles E. Van Loan series of Saturday Evening Post subjects was given a private showing last week.

The stories embrace a combination of wit and thrills, and Director William Bertram has successfully transferred to the screen the author's delightful fun making. The very capable cast—Miss Anna Little, Art Accord, E. Forrest Taylor and Lawrence Payton—has accomplished wonders in the way of physical daring and intense dramatic situations.

In the accompanying picture Author Van Loan is shown writing the sub titles for Director Bertram. These are phrased in the peculiarly ingenuous manner of the author, with his whiplash humor, and will prove an important feature of these pictures.

Charles E. Van Loan and Director William Bertram.

In Mr. Van Loan and Director Bertram President Samuel S. Hutchinson of the American Film Company, Inc., has a combination of "knowing" westerners, so that every detail of the stories, which made such a tremendous hit in the Saturday Evening Post, will be brought out with telling effectiveness. Miss Little—"the daintily daring"—is afforded unusual opportunities to display that subtle dramatic talent and unafraid spirit which have established her in a niche all her own.

EDISON TO MAKE "A MESSAGE TO GARCIA."

The Edison Company announces that it has obtained the film rights to Elbert Hubbard's "A Message To Garcia," that extraordinary essay which in pamphlet form alone obtained a circulation of more than forty million copies.

"A Message To Garcia," according to Hubbard, "was written one evening after supper in a single hour. The thing leaped hot from my heart, written after a trying day when I had been endeavoring to train some rather delinquent villagers to adjure the comatose state and get radio-active."

Immediately after issue of the March "Philistine," orders for extra copies began to come in for a dozen, fifty, a hundred and a thousand. George H. Daniels of the New York Central Railroad ordered two million. Prince Hilakoff, director of Russian Railways, had the matter translated into Russian and supplied every railroad employe in Russia with a copy. This example was emulated by Germany, France, Spain, Turkey, Hindustan and China. Soldiers in both the Russian and Japanese armies were provided with copies. No other literary venture in the life of this author ever attained such wide circulation.

"A Message to Garcia" will be released by the Edison Company through the Kleine-Edison Feature Service.

"THE FASHION SHOP" (Kleine).

"The Fashion Shop," the Kleine two-reel release through the General Film Company October 4th, featuring Ethel Grandin, contains a story of much heart interest. Also it will prove conspicuous for some very clever work on the part of Miss Grandin, who in this offering is given a vehicle well suited for her out-of-the-ordinary talent.

Scene from "The Fashion Shop" (Kleine).

Arnold and his wife struggle valiantly against poverty, the former cherishing the ambition to become a playwright. His brave, little wife obtains employment in a fashion shop where the astute proprietor to better parade his gowns ,introduces her into society as a countess. She maintains this deception, sending home to Arnold the wages of a seamstress, reserving the bigger part of her income to surprise him when he should come to New York. In the meantime one of his plays is accepted and he visits New York where he finds his wife receiving the attentions of a notorious man about town. The network of incriminating circumstances is very cleverly wound around the innocent girl. How the skeins of the story are finally unraveled and the couple reunited makes a splendid subject.

The scenes of the fashion shop were made in Ferle Heller's famous Fifth Avenue modiste establishment.

GLOBE BUYS RIGHTS FOR "MACISTE."

The six-reel Itala film, "Maciste," featuring Edward Pagano, who will be remembered as the wonderful strong man and slave in "Cabiria," will be handled in the United States and Canada by the Globe Feature Booking Office in the Palace Theater Building, of which A. J. Duffy is Manager. Its modern, melodramatic and comedy elements will have an apeal to all classes of houses. It is understood that part of the territory will be sold in State rights, and the remainder will be handled through the offices of the Globe Feature Picture Booking Company. Samuel Grant and Charles "Cap" Kimball will supervise the publicity and distribution of the picture, which will be released about November 1.

FAMOUS PLAYERS TO HAVE SIX RELEASES IN NOVEMBER.

As a result of the disastrous fire which destroyed the studios of the Famous Players Film Co. and which necessitated the revision of the Paramount program for the next three months, due to unavoidable changes in the Famous Players release dates, that concern will have six releases on the Paramount program in November in order to regain the dates it lost in September and Octover through the necessity of having to retake scenes in subjects scheduled for earlier release, which were partly destroyed in the fire. This is the first time since the organization of the Paramount Pictures Corporation that one producer has had six releases in one month.

The November program of the Famous Players includes Marguerite Clark in "Still Waters," by Edith Barnard Delano, scheduled for Nov. 4; Mary Pickford in the much-discussed screen version of John Luther Long's great classic, "Madame Butterfly," Nov. 8; John Barrymore in "The Red Widow," Nov. 11; Marguerite Clark in an elaborate picturization of Mark Twain's master-work, "The Prince and the Pauper," the first work of the great American humorist to be filmed, Nov. 15; Charles Cherry, in the international dramatic triumph, "The Mummy and the Humming Bird," Nov. 18; and Pauline Frederick in an impressive photo-production of Robert Hichens' famous novel and play, "Bella Donna," Nov. 29.

PIONEER CORPORATION EXPANDS.

Since making its initial bow in the feature film business six months ago, the Pioneer Feature Film Corporation, with offices at 126-130 West Forty-sixth street, has met with such rapid success that the offices were no longer adequate to their increasing business. Therefore, Nathan Hirsh, the president and executive head of the corporation, found it imperative to enlarge the offices and make extensive alterations, which enables him to do business on a larger scale.

Mr. Hirsh, known as "Honest Hirsh," has displayed unusual judgment in the selection of feature productions. Besides having the exclusive rights for Greater New York and Northern New Jersey to the product of the Great Northern Film Company, he has recently acquired the rights to "All For a Girl" featuring Renee Kelly, the noted Broadway star who appeared in "Daddy Long Legs" and "The Garden of Paradise." Mr. Hirsh is constantly adding to his already considerable number of features, and last week acquired the rights to "A Trade Secret," featuring Betty Marshall and Frederick DeBelleville.

USES AEROPLANE IN PICTURE.

The P. E. Williams Aeroplane Co., of Fenton, are operating in conjunction with the Atlas Motion Picture Co., of Detroit. Mr. Williams operated the machine last Wednesday at the State Fair, where the film that is to be called "The War of Not Yet" was being made. The machine was slow in raising and the camera man almost lost the top of his head, but he "ducked" and remained with his camera; the result is a wonderful picture. A submarine is used in connection with the aeroplane in the production of the above picture. All productions of the Atlas Motion Picture Co. will be released on the Associated Program.

A TIP ON SCREENS.

Mirror Screens Cheaper in Price, But Better in Quality—Rembusch Invents a New Screen.

F. J. Rembusch, who makes the famous glass "mirror screen" and seven other kinds of cloth and fiber screens, is reducing the cost of "mirror screens" so that any exhibitor can purchase.

Rembusch Patented Glass Mirror Screen in a Special Slot Car.

His new factory in Shelbyville, Ind., is so equipped that where it formerly took twenty men to handle a large mirror, two men can do the work in less time by the aid of electric cranes, trolleys, and chain blocks.

Mr. Rembusch is making seven kinds of projection screens including the well known Goldfiber; a Silverfiber of low cost; a glass and a cloth screen for rear projection; and is putting out a new White Screen that he claims will be the last word in perfect pictures in a wide house. The factory is running to full capacity and has a large stock of screens on hand at all times.

More Biograph Re-Issues Coming

Famous "Pippa Passes" Included in the Next Six Releases—All Prominent Players Included in the Cast.

CONTINUING its policy of reissuing the best of the old Biograph subjects, the Biograph Company have announced the next six releases in this series, making a total of twenty-four subjects that have been reissued thus far.

The first is a one-reel interpretation of Robert Browning's poem, "Pippa Passes," released Oct. 15. Exhibitors who were in business back in 1909 will recall the enthusiasm with which the newspapers gave space in their editorial columns to this production, in fact it was this Biograph picture that made the opening wedge for the recognition of motion pictures by the newspapers. It is hardly necessary to comment on the quality of this production, its past achievements and the fact that the producers were deluged with requests for its reissue are ample endorsement as to its worth on programs. The cast of this production includes Gertrude Robinson, George Nicholls, Mack Sennett, James Kirkwood, Billy Quirk, Arthur Johnson, Marion Leonard and Owen Moore.

"Brute Force," a two-reel picture of pre-historic life, is the second reissue. It is a big spectacle quite on a par with "The Battle at Elderbush Gulch" and "Oil and Water," the previous two-reel Biograph reissues, and will undoubtedly meet with the same big success as is being recorded by these two productions. The cast includes Mae Marsh, Robert Harron, Charles H. Mailes, Jenny Lee, W. C. Robinson and Alfred Paget. It is released Oct. 22.

"The Coming of Angelo" with Blanche Sweet, Charles H. Mailes, Walter Miller, Jenny Lee and Robert Harron is the third release and is scheduled for Oct. 29.

The fourth reissue is a story of the gangsters on the East Side of New York City. "The Musketeers of Pig Alley" is the title and has for a cast Lillian Gish, Robert Harron, Walter Miller, Elmer Booth, Harry Carey, Lionel Barrymore, Alfred Paget, Jack Dillon, W. C. Robinson and Jack Pickford. It is released Nov. 5.

"The God Within" is the fifth release and is an excellent example of what can be accomplished in a thousand feet of film. It is the typical Biograph reissue and has a cast including Henry Walthall, Blanche Sweet, Lionel Barrymore, Claire McDowell and Charles H. Mailes. It is released Nov. 12.

"The Lonedale Operator" is the sixth release and is scheduled for Nov. 19. This is a railroad story with a cast including Blanche Sweet, Francis Grandin, Wilfred Lucas, Joseph Graybell and George Nicholls.

Like all previous reissues, they were directed by D. W. Griffith and will be released every Friday on the General Film program.

New Idea in Comedy Production

President Hutchinson of the American Using Three Directors for Two Companies with Good Results.

A NOVEL plan for the production of comedy films has been inaugurated at the Santa Barbara studios of the American Film Company according to a statement made by Samuel S. Hutchinson, president. The idea involves the use of three directors for two producing companies, rotating the direction of each of the two companies among the three directors.

"In order to work out this plan smoothly I have arranged two companies to produce Beauty comedies," said Mr. Hutchinson. "The leads in company No. 1 are Frank Borzage, Miss Neva Garber, Mrs. Lucille Ward and William Carroll. The leads in company No. 2 are John Sheehan, John Steppling and Miss Holloway.

"These two companies are directed by James Douglas, Archer MacMackin and John Dillon. There will be an interchange of direction on all Beauty comedies hereafter, Mr. Douglas directing company No. 1 this week, Mr. MacMackin directing company No. 1 next week, and Mr. Dillon directing company No. 1 the third week, and rotating similarly with company No. 2. You will observe that this gives the directors sufficient leisure to create comedy situations. It gives them ample time to read and reread the scenario and to seek locations and to create situations. This consequently must result in a higher quality production, and I am looking forward to a new high standard of production in Beauty comedies.

"The above plan undoubtedly will stimulate great interest among our directors and will make it possible for each of them to use their inventive genius to create a wide variety of comic situations.

"I have recently reviewed the first ten Beauty comedies made under this new play and I am confident that the plan is already a remarkable success. 'Cash Cats and a Cook Book,' a Beauty comedy directed by Mr. Dillon, is exceptionally good. Clever use of Carroll's comedy character will be found in 'Love, Bumps and Mumps,' a Beauty comedy directed by Mr. MacMackin. 'Mixed Males' is another Beauty comedy which displays the stage technique of Mr. Douglas. 'Curing Father' is full of comic situations and was directed by Mr

Dillon. 'Mother's Busy Week' is another Beauty laugh provoker which was directed by Mr. MacMackin. 'Alias James—Chauffeur' demonstrates Mr. Douglas' ability.

"I am confident that exhibitors everywhere will see in the quality of these Beauty comedies the success of the new plan of direction."

Sunday Managers Cited

Chattanooga Exhibitors Must Appear to Answer Sunday Opening Charges—Opened Theaters a Few Sundays Ago for Test Case of Sabbath Law—Seven Managers Will Fight the Charge Together—Date of Hearing, September 24.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Chattanooga Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

IN THE recent assignment of cases on the trial docket of the Criminal Court at Chattanooga, Tenn., seven of the moving picture theater managers were cited to appear on September 24 to answer charges of maintaining nuisances as a result of operating their moving picture theaters on Sunday. They were ordered to appear before Squire Lawrence on the Monday following the second Sunday that they remained open. The following day they waved examination before the magistrate and made bond for their appearance in Criminal Court.

The seven picture men are: Howell Graham, F. H. Dowler, Jr., W. F. Howell, C. T. Bobo, H. M. Lusk, M. H. Silverman and Peter Block. The moving picture men have stated that they are going to see the matter through, and will thoroughly test the constitutionality of the old laws under which the Chattanooga theaters have been closed on Sunday in the past.

HOSPITABLE HOWELL GRAHAM MAKES HIT.

The "Quality Way" theaters of Chattanooga, which are under the management of Howell Graham, recently extended invitations to all of the out-of-town buyers who were in the city, as guests of the Chattanooga Wholesalers' and Jobbers' association, to attend all of the theaters along the "Quality Way." Each merchant from the country towns, who was visiting the city, was presented with a badge which passed him through the doors of any of the theaters. This cordiality on the part of the theater managements was neither lost on the local merchants nor the visiting buyers, who were greatly pleased with the invitation.

COURTESY AT THE ELITE.

The Elite theater of Clarksville, Tenn., in its advertising, has been playing up the fact that the Elite believes in courtesy to its patrons. The theater management recently stated that one of their mottoes was "Courtesy is not an expense in business or any other part of life, but a necessity. Our employes will be found courteous at all times."

MANAGER CONFORMED AT ONCE.

James H. Yeaman, city supervisor of buildings at Nashville, Tenn., recently issued a stiff order to the Vendome theater, ordering the management to further safeguard the building against fire. In compliance with this order the entire stage has been fireproofed, as were the floors. One of the greatest changes was in the rearrangement of the exits and the installation of an elaborate system of fire escapes running along the main floor and the two galleries. These escapes run the entire length of all floors served. The exits are so placed that each section of the theater can be emptied in a fraction of the former time required. Mr. Yeaman afterward stated that he was very much gratified with the manner in which the management had responded to the order. The theater was used all summer for moving picture feature productions, but will show legitimate productions during the winter months.

AND THEN THEY WERE BURNED.

A rather amusing story was told by one of the exhibitors from one of the mountain towns near the Kentucky-Virginia border, who happened into one of the larger cities recently. In describing the class of "junk films" which a competitor was showing, he said that he understood that from his home town the films were sent to a mining camp, and after being shown at that place they were burned. The story got back to the film concern supplying the service, and a general laugh ensued.

SPRINGFIELD "BELL" OPENS.

At Springfield, Tenn., the Bell theater, the latest addition to the moving picture shows, was opened for business on September 4. The new playhouse is being operated by M. Sherry and Steve Holland, of Nashville. Although the new theater will cater chiefly to moving picture fans, it will also show some vaudeville, and has been equipped to handle road shows if desired. The theater started nicely, and the management is very well pleased.

FILMS WITH VAUDEVILLE AT PRINCESS, NASHVILLE.

During the entire winter season two complete Keith bills will be shown weekly at the Princess theater at Nashville, Tenn., which has operated during the summer as a moving picture theater. Moving pictures are run at the end of each performance. It is probable that the house will continue moving pictures at the end of the vaudeville season.

MEMPHIS LOYAL TO ITS OWN.

A good many Memphis, Tenn., people turned out at the recent showing of Sam Bernard in the Famous Players' production of "Poor Schmaltz," which appeared at Old Majestic theater, No. 1. One of the reasons for the good crowds which attended the showing of this picture was that a former well-known Memphis girl, in the person of Miss Leonore Thompson, took a part in the picture, lending local color to the attraction. Miss Thompson is a cousin of Marilynn Miller, who made a big hit at the Winter Gardens of New York.

The Majestic theater, No. 2, of Memphis, Tenn., recently projected the last episode of "The Goddess." A great many people had become very interested in the climax of the story.

ATLANTANS BOOST "GEORGIA" FILM.

By A. M. Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

TWENTY-FIVE members of the Atlanta Y. W. C. A. sold tickets for the five-reel Georgia motion picture which was run at the Auditorium-Armory. The ticket selling was conducted after the fashion of tag day. This was backed up by a battery of telephone girls who called every business man in the city and extended him an invitation to attend. The tickets were 10 cents.

Twelve to fifteen thousand people saw this Georgia picture before it started on its tour over the entire country.

A. C. BROMBERG, HUSTLING WITH TRIANGLE OFFICE.

CANDY SLOT MACHINES AT THE SAVOY.

Manager Sharpe of the Savoy theater has installed on the backs of its seats confection slot machines. Whether this new innovation is to draw the ladies or keep the small boy busy while the advertisements are being shown has not yet developed.

FILMS SEEN BEFORE.

Much grumbling is heard among the Atlanta patrons, especially the regulars, who are tired of seeing the same picture so many times in Atlanta. Some say it's unsafe to go to certain picture theaters because of having to sit and gaze on a motion picture seen at some other theater just a while back. New releases are apparently getting scarce or else the southern branches are not being furnished them. It is hurting the theaters, if they but knew it.

C. E. KESSNICH ANNOUNCES NEW MUTUAL PROGRAM.

The reorganized Mutual Company announces through its local manager, Chas. E. Kessnich, it will release for some of the most famous films. Some of the brands which will make up the new Mutual program are the American film, Bostock Jungle & Film Company, Gaumont Company, Horsley's productions, Mustang Film Company, Reliance and Thanhouser.

SCENIC FILM REORGANIZES.

The Scenic Film Company of Atlanta has undergone a reorganization recently, and is now one of the most formidable of the film advertising companies in the south. # Lexington's Harsh Law

In Kentucky, City Board Adopts New Censorship Regulation—Reflects Irritation of Mayor at Not Being Able to Bar "Hypocrites"—Either of Two Officials Can Now Decide on Moral Tone of Any Offering.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DEFIANCE of the Board of City Commissioners at Lexington, Ky., in showing the photoplay, "Hypocrites," after the commission had declined to allow the picture to be exhibited in the city, has brought Lexington exhibitors to grief, due to the passage of an ordinance virtually imposing censorship in that city. The Board of City Commissioners failed to stop the recent show, as the Mayor and other officials were out of town. Under the ordinances then in force the police authorities were doubtful whether or not they had a right to prevent the show and besides an injunction was threatened. The Board of Commissioners also has under consideration the revocation of the Colonial theater's license.

The ordinance which was later adopted by the City Commissioners provides that it "Shall be unlawful to exhibit or place on exhibition before the public lewd, obscene or immoral pictures of the kind known as moving or motion pictures. Any person violating this section shall be punished by a fine of not less than $5 nor more than $50 and, in addition thereto, the license of such person to operate a picture show shall be subject to revocation or suspension by the Board of Commissioners; that whenever the Commissioner of Public Safety shall deem it necessary and proper he may require that a motion or moving picture, intended to be exhibited before the public, be first placed on exhibition for inspection by himself or the Chief of Police and any other city officials whom he may designate to observe and inspect the picture, and if he shall determine that such picture is lewd, obscene or immoral he shall have the right to forbid and prohibit its exhibition before the public by his written order delivered to the person intending to exhibit the picture."

"HYPOCRITES" COMES BACK TO LOUISVILLE.

"Hypocrites," the much discussed moving picture production, which has been one of the most interesting subjects in Kentucky during the past few weeks, proved so popular during its engagement at the Alamo theater, Louisville, that the management of the Walnut theater recently arranged to show the picture for three days at that popular house controlled by practically the same interests which control the Alamo theater. The fact that the picture has been brought back to Louisville for a second showing dissolves any doubt as to just what Louisvillians think of the production.

NOVELTY AGAIN CHANGES.

Announcement has just been made in Louisville of another change in the management of the Novelty theater, owned and operated by the Kentucky Amusement company, whereby the theater has been taken over by the Fourth Avenue Amusement company, which operates the Alamo in the same block. It was rumored a few weeks ago that there was a deal on between the Keith interests and M. Switow for the Novelty property, but this deal failed to materialize. The Novelty theater has changed hands a number of times during the past few months, it being the smallest of the four leading ten-cent houses in the down town district.

Following the death of Grover Blanton, of Quicksand, Ky., who was shot a few weeks ago, his widow took over the management of the Gem theater, and is proving herself highly capable of maintaining the former standard set by her husband. Tommy Hall, formerly operator at the Lyric theater of Jackson, Ky., is taking care of the projection end of the business.

FILMS SHOWN AT THE ADA MEADE.

The Ada Meade theater, of Lexington, Ky., which has been closed for a summer recess, has reopened after being thoroughly overhauled. The theater will show vaudeville and moving pictures. Special photoplays will be shown on Sunday. N. Van Houten Gurnee, manager of the popular playhouse, has signed contracts with the Metro company for a number of high class photoplays to be shown each Sunday. Arrangements have been made to complete the two serials, "The Exploits of Elaine," and the "Diamond from the Sky." The latter will be shown on Tuesdays, while the former will be shown on Fridays. A six-piece orchestra will be one of the attractions this season, and the management is the same as that of last year. Three daily shows will be given this season, starting at 2:30, 7:30 and 9:15 o'clock.

AIRDOMES REOPEN.

Although the Louisville airdomes closed during the early part of September, because of bad weather, and it was generally though the open-air season had come to a close, the weather became so warm about the tenth of the month that the Westonian, Liberty and some other airdomes opened up again to take advantage of the excessively warm weather.

GEORGE HACKETT TO MANAGE SUN THEATER.

George Hackett, who is connected with the Central Film Service company and also with the Strube interests, which control the Empire theater on East Market street, and the Sun theater at Eighteenth and Gallagher streets, has left the Empire theater to take the management of the Sun theater, succeeding Prof. W. S. Blankenbaker, who, with the operator, Henry Miller, have gone on the road in vaudeville. Mr. Hackett will also continue with the Central.

The Phoenix Amusement company of Lexington, Ky., will open its handsome new moving picture theater on October 1. The theater is one of the largest in the state and cost in the neighborhood of $50,000.

Negro's Side in Film

In Philadelphia Colored Folks Dissatisfied with Portrayal of Forefathers in the Griffith Spectacle Want a Picture Giving Their Side of History — Booker Washington's Secretary Talks Matter Over with Eastern Representative of Ince.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

NEGRO citizens who are not satisfied with the way in which their forefathers are portrayed in Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," now on exhibition at the Forrest theater, have decided to answer the production with a film play of their own, in which the development of the race will be worked out in a dramatic scenario. The better class of colored folk have decided to spend no more time protesting the Griffith production, and it has been agreed upon that a far better answer can be obtained by devoting its attention to making its own success.

In accordance with this plan, James Scott, private secretary to Booker T. Washington, has been in conference with Henry I. MacMason, the Eastern representative of Thomas H. Ince, the celebrated motion picture director. An elaborate scenario has been developed showing the early sufferings of the negro slaves, the trials they encountered in their first years of freedom and the wonderful progress which enlightened negro citizens have made in the past half century.

GLOBE NEWLY DECORATED.

The Globe theater, 59th and Market streets, has been opened for the coming season under the management of Mr. Cunningham. The theater presents an entirely different appearance from that of last year. The exterior of the building has been artistically finished in brown brick and the brilliant lighting attracts immediate attention. Although the furnishings are not yet complete, the interior presents a beautiful appearance, painted in tan and brown, with the indirect system of lighting adding to the good effect. The stage is a trellised garden, with flowers arranged with a mirrored screen, allowing for the use of sunrise and sunset effects. The orchestra, made up of six instruments, adds to the presentation as well as furnishing selections during the intermissions. The rearrangement of the seats affords an unobstructed view of the screen from all parts of the house.

HEARD IN PHILADELPHIA.

The Metropolitan opera house in Philadelphia will open on Sept. 27 with a continuation of the policy adopted late last season of showing nothing but motion picture plays. Improvements have been made to the theater and much new equipment has been added to the already efficient supply. One of the features of this policy of providing a strictly first-class moving picture theater was the installation of a Minusa gold fibre screen.

There was a notable assemblage of prominent people of the motion picture industry present at the private exhibition of the first of the Equitable Pictures Corporation production, "Trilby," featuring Clara Kimball Young and Wilton Lackaye, at the Stanley theater, on Thursday, Sept. 16. The production was highly commended, opinions being expressed by many out-of-town exhibitors who were present.

It was recently announced at the Swaab Film Service, 1327 Vine street, that Mark L. Swaab, son of the proprietor of the establishment, will leave soon on an extended business trip throughout the entire state of Pennsylvania.

W. S. Casterlin, proprietor of a moving picture theater in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., was numbered among the recent visitors to this city and paid his respects to various friends in the industry here. Friedman, the local manager of the World Film Corporation, is making an extended trip through Virginia and North Carolina acquainting the exhibitors in that territory with the new Equitable program. ## ALBERT REINLIEB PROMOTED.

Pathe Exchange Man Will Manage Its Newark Office.

ON Saturday, Sept. 18, Leo Singer severed his connections with the Pathe Exchange. The Pathe have opened new headquarters in this city at 6-8 Mechanic street, at which location elaborate offices have been secured. The site is that of the building formerly occupied by the National State Bank, and is especially fitted for the purpose of utilization as a film office. Albert Reinlieb, who for two years was at Pathe's New York office, has been appointed local manager. Mr. Westcott will act as cashier temporarily. Beck, general manager of the Mutual, represented that firm in the negotiations. The premises were leased by Louis Schlesinger, Inc., for Arthur C. Hensler. The local manager will be Lynn S. Card, who will be assisted by Henry L. Easton. According to Mr. Easton, the Mutual service is running very satisfactory in Newark. A special delivery truck has been secured by the Newark exchange to bring the films here early in the morning.

KILLS SMALL THEATERS.

Oscar A. Morgan, resident manager of the Paramount theater, Newark, in a communication to the Newark Evening News, protests against the ruling of the Interstate Commerce Commission in regards to the transportation of motion picture reels on railroads. Mr. Morgan contends that the price, twenty-five cents for each fifty pounds, is going to drive the small theater out of business. Mr. Morgan believes the biggest joke of the new law is the placing of a value upon each reel. Although the maximum value allowed is $100, Mr. Morgan states that the loss of a feature film would amount to about $1,000. He ends his communication with the following statement, "I understand there is a movement by the exhibitors in Newark to form a Newark Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. I am heartily in favor of such a move."

ODEON NOW UNION.

SINGER ON VACATION.

For the first time since 1909, when Leo Singer entered the film exchange business, he will "knock off" two weeks and sojourn at Asbury Park. Last Saturday Singer left the Pathe, and since then he has had several offers, which he will consider. He stated, however, to the World correspondent, that he would not give out any plans until after his return from the shore resort.

"THE ETERNAL CITY" RETURNS.

NEWARK ELKS SCREENED.

On the first four days of last week, moving pictures showing the departure of the Newark Elks for Atlantic City and scenes at the shore resort, including the parade in which 8,000 Elks participated, were shown at Keeney's theater, Newark. The picture drew many interested spectators to the house.

PROCTOR'S UNIQUE CONSTRUCTION.

The new playhouse, now in course of construction on Market street, Newark, is unique among Proctor theaters, containing, as it does, two distinct theaters. The playhouses are of about equal seating capacity and built one on the top of the other. The upper theater is not a roof garden. ## STANLEY HAND GETS EXPRESS RULE MODIFIED.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, Boston Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE recent discovery by the express companies that advertising matter could not be sent collect caused considerable inconvenience to the New England exchange men. However, after Oct. 1, this ruling will be ineffective through the endeavors of Manager Stanley Hand of the World Film Corporation.

When Mr. Hand learned that express charges must be prepaid on all advertising matter shipped to exhibitors, he communicated with Mr. H. D. W. Morris of the American Express Company and explained to him that theatrical paper was in reality merchandise and could not be properly classified as advertising matter. Mr. Morris and several of the officials of the express company held a conference. As a result all paper may go collect, provided that the charges are guaranteed.

SAMUEL MOSCOW IN CHARGE OF UNITED OFFICE.

Proprietor Fred B. Murphy of the New England United Film Service has appointed Samuel Moscow as manager of his Boston branch. The business at this office had been recently under the direct supervision of Mr. Murphy, but the opening of branch offices in Bangor and Springfield, and the contemplated opening of branches in other territory, makes it necessary for Mr. Murphy to have a general supervision of the entire business. Mr. Murphy is one of the few independent film dealers in New England, and in the future most of his time will be spent in New York seeking film to supply his patrons.

The appointment of Mr. Moscow has met with the approval of exhibitors in this district. He has been connected with the United for the past six months as a roadman, during which time his efficiency has been displayed. He has been in the film business for seven years, having been the proprietor of the Central and Orpheum theaters, Cambridge, Mass., a roadman for the Warner features and still later connected with the Gray and McDonough enterprises in Maine.

FILMS SHOWN IN ELLSWORTH CHURCHES.

One of, if not the most radical, departures from all that is common in the Pine Tree state is the announcement that in Ellsworth the Methodist Episcopal church is using pictures in conjunction with their Sunday evening service. Rev. T. S. Ross, pastor, finds it difficult to procure suitable subjects and would appreciate hearing from concerns having such. Pictures with a moral such as, and of the type of, "The Spirit of the Conqueror," which he recently used, are wanted. Evangeline from the same company was also used to good advantage, as was "Thou Shalt Not Steal."

By Billy Bison, Buffalo (229 Oxford Avenue) Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

The programs have already been given at the Victoria, Ellen Terry, Frontier and other houses and have proved a success. Through the courtesy of the local film distributors the Federation has been invited to private exhibitions of the newest films suitable for these matinees.

SALOONS HIT HARD.

In Troy, N. Y., it is expected that thirty-five saloons will go out of business on October 1. The moving picture shows are blamed by the brewers and given credit by the foes of liquor for this slump in the saloon business. These theaters are scattered through every section of the city and the business in every saloon within six blocks of a show has fallen off 40 per cent. One saloonkeeper of Troy declares that where young men formerly came into his place early in the evening to play pool or cards for drinks, they now go to the moving picture shows. Some visit his place after the show, have one or two drinks and go home. This, he said, has made a big deficit in his year's receipts. The same condition is reported in every section of the city.

ELECTRIC THEATER OF TOPEKA OPENS.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

THE Grubel brothers, Frank and George, of Kansas City, Kan., opened the Electric theater in Topeka Sept. 13 with George Beban in "An Alien." The first and second weeks had moving pictures only; "Trilby" was the bill for the second week.

The Electric, formerly the Orpheum, has had an irregular career, sometimes vaudeville, sometimes pictures, for several years. The Grubel Brothers, highly successful with picture houses in Kansas City, Kan., St. Joseph and Joplin, Mo., bought the playhouse last summer and closed it for two months for alterations. The most important change was the removal of several posts which occupied space fully three feet square, obstructing the view from more than 50 seats. An extension of the office into the auditorium was also eliminated.

W. P. Cuff has been engaged as manager. He started in the business at Topeka with the Crawfords, later had the World office at St. Louis, and has been in several districts for various exchanges.

The Electric will pursue the same policy as is followed at the other houses of the Grubel Brothers, high-class feature pictures, with two acts of vaudeville. The Topeka house is located 150 feet from one of the busiest corners in Topeka, on West Eighth street, near practically all of the street car lines, and has a capacity of 1,700.

The Grubel Brothers began business with the opening of their house in Kansas City, Kan., and were among the first to play up to the best taste of the growing public, so have been eminently successful. They have also carefully selected locations, the Kansas City house being at the vital point in the city, Sixth street and Minnesota avenue.

Another Electric Theater.

The new Electric theater of the firm, at St. Joseph, Mo., was also opened Sept. 13. This show house is likewise beautifully equipped, and aims at the best class of trade. It has a seating capacity of 1,800.

Sam Bullock Arrested

Cleveland Exhibitor Brought into Court by Ohio Censors—Had Quoted President Herrington on Screen to the Effect That "Censorship Was Conceived in Iniquity and Is Dying in Disgrace"—Must Answer for This Crime.

By J. D. Raridan, Ohio Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SAM BULLOCK, well known Cleveland exhibitor, finally has been accommodated. He wanted to be arrested by the state board of censors for showing a film in which Fred J. Herrington, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, was quoted, and at last—after a long wait—had his desire appeased. And in consequence, Mr. Bullock maintains, he will be able to take his little affair into court and show the censors the real ethics and the actual meaning of a constitution.

Bullock ran the Herrington film in both of his Cleveland theaters. In it, as leaders, were excerpts from the speech made by Herrington to a Cleveland holiday crowd recently, in which he declared, "Censorship was conceived in iniquity and is dying in disgrace." The board ordered Bullock not to show the film and in defiance, Bullock declared no man can curb free speech in view of the fact that free speech is the first principle of the constitution of country and state. In this stand he was supported by Mayor Baker who refused to take action which the board desired—namely, to cause Bullock's arrest.

Charles G. Williams, chairman of the board, came to Cleveland last week and had warrants issued by Justice of the Peace Swartz. Bullock gave bond for $600 and was released, jubilantly expecting his case to be tried and taken into the courts.

NEW PRODUCING COMPANY HERE.

The Fderal Photoplays company, which is to produce and distribute moving picture plays with Cleveland as its headquarters, was incorporated a week ago for $150,000. It is promoted principally by Robert H. McLaughlin, former manager of the Colonial theater, Cleveland, and author of "The Eternal Magdalene," a new drama which is being prepared for Broadway production; Paul C. Mooney, manager of the Fox Film corporation's Cleveland branch, and Edward P. Strong, attorney. The company has leased offices in the Marion building and will soon install a studio equipped to produce six scenes simultaneously. # Shaft at Sunday Closers

Rockford, Illinois, "Star" Invites Eight Aldermen Who Voted Against Sabbath Shows to Investigate and Consider--Live Sunday Evening Facts That Will Bear Repetition—Some Lawmakers Stand in the Light of the Community.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

EIGHT aldermen in Rockford voted to close the moving picture shows on Sunday nights. The move was not popular. The Rockford Star champions the cause of the exhibitor. It invites the eight councilmen to attend one of these places of amusement any Sunday night. "The Star is quite sure that they will withdraw their opposition to this popular form of entertainment. They will find that two-thirds of the audience is composed of toilers and their children and wives.

"Before the advent of picture houses, the working people had no wholesome form of recreation. They seldom if ever attended the theaters, as the price of admission made it impossible. They were therefore shut out from seeing the works of the world's great authors and great actors of today. Picture houses present travel scenes, historical and biblical plays. They therefore have a tendency to improve and repair. Would the aldermen debar the toiler from this influence?

"Suppose the picture houses are not allowed to open on Sunday nights. What amusement is left to the men and women who toil in the shops and stores all the week? Where will they go? Will the aldermen provide a wholesome place for them? There are hundreds of young men in the city who came here to find employment. They have no homes. They board with private families. Close the picture houses and where will these homeless young men spend their Sunday evenings?

"The Star is surprised that there are aldermen who favor this narrow policy. Instead of doing good, they are doing harm. They are setting up a wall that may tumble about their heads. They are teaching the working people to believe that they are entitled to no privileges and that the voice of the voters as expressed at the polls on this question will not be heeded by eight aldermen."

CHARLOTTE, MICHIGAN, HAS SUNDAY SHOW PROBLEM.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

OPPONENTS of Sunday shows are striving to keep the issue alive in Charlotte. A petition was presented to the City Council sometime ago by the W. C. T. U., asking that the shows in operation be closed, but it was tabled. The latest move by the "antis" was to have similar petitions presented for the signatures of voters at the Sunday church services.

LOCAL FILMS AND FACES IN GRAND RAPIDS.

Competition between two Grand Rapids houses was centered on the home-made photoplay business. The Powers theater had a week's booking of the "Blissveldt Romance," made for the Association of Commerce by the Paragon Feature Film Company of Omaha, when A. J. Gillingham, of the Gillingham & Smith enterprises, brought in a Detroit company to produce one of the typical wedding films in which as many local crowds as possible are used. The interest in the exhibition of "A Michigan Elopement" at the Majestic Gardens was intensified by an offer of $100 in gold to the persons submitting the largest lists of persons they identified in the picture.

NEW KUHL OPENS AT JACKSON.

C. A. Kuhlman opened at Jackson, Mich., his new Kuhl theater, with Dorothy Donnelly in "Sealed Valley." He followed this with "Hypocrites," "The Melting Pot" and Olga Petrova in "The Vampire." The new theater is next door to Kuhlman's Rex, and in many respects the houses are similar, although the new theater naturally has the advantage of many later ideas. One of these is the mezzanine floor with its boxes which will be reserved for parties. The walls are decorated in an antique ivory finish, blending into a cream in the ceiling, and ivory is also used in the lobby, the balcony, on the flower vases and lamp stands.

MILWAUKEE'S CHINESE EXHIBITOR.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

CHARLIE TOY, Chinese merchant and owner of the New Toy theater on Second street in Milwaukee is not superstitious. He opened the house on the 13th of the month with a thirteen reel program. "The Blindness of Virtue" and "China," a set of the travel pictures taken by Dr. George A. Dorsey, curator of Anthropology for the Field Museum, were on the opening bill. "The Melting Pot" was the second week's attraction. The house seats only 160, but every chair is comfortable and each is covered with rich tapestry. Only two shows at 2:30 and 8:15 will be given. # Showman and Citizen

Clifford Picture Theater of Urbana, Ohio, Illustrates a House That Is Giving More to Its Community Than It Gets, Prosperity of the House Notwithstanding—What Manager Clifford Is Doing for the Neighborhood's Children.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MANAGER CLIFFORD, of the house of that name in Urbana, O., has probably been more successful in getting the sincere and unqualified approval of the youngsters of his city than any manager in the State. Among the innovations which he has introduced for the purpose of winning the regards of the children are special matinees for school children, at which the admission is only two cents; a singing school in connection with all children's matinees, at which he himself, a talented singer, teaches them new songs and leads them until the audience knows the words and music; special prize matinees, and the like, until the "kiddies" of Urbana have come to regard the Clifford as their own special house.

Exhibitors like Manager Clifford are public benefactors. The community in which they live is healthier, happier and more prosperous, just because there's a man living there with a heart in his breast and a brain in his head and the two working together not at odds. He has made his theater one of the most valuable institutions in the town. There must be something special in Mr. Clifford and something special in Urbana, O., for a loaf of good, wholesome bread depends on yeast as well as flour. We judge that if the people of Urbana wanted a censor they would choose Manager Clifford as the only man in that city truly fitted for the job. They'd choose well. The Moving Picture World is glad to put this account into print, not so much to flatter Manager Clifford as to please and encourage its readers.

NO SIDEWALK SIGNS IN URBANA.

The police force of Urbana, O., has declared war on all sorts of sidewalk signs, including those usually used to advertise the attractions at moving picture houses, and the exhibitors are compelled in consequence to keep their signs in their lobbies. It is declared by the police, in fact, that an exhibitor started it by leaning his framed display against a lamp-post at the curb, following which the police were reminded of an ordinance against such obstructions on the sidewalk, and have since been on the warpath against them.

WATCHING THE FIGHT OVER "HYPOCRITES."

Cincinnati exhibitors are awaiting with interest the outcome of the fight on the State Board of Censors which has been inaugurated at Cleveland in the declared intention of an exhibitor there to show "Hypocrites" regardless of the veto of the censors. If the Clevelander wins out the victory, an important one, will encourage similar independence here on occasions calling for it. So far, what with the State Board and the several threats of local censorship, Cincinnati exhibitors have not had much encouragement on the subject of bucking the censors in the courts or elsewhere.

JULIUS HURTIG AMBITIOUS FOR HIS COLONIAL.

Jules Hurtig, senior member of the firm of Hurtig & Seamon, which controls the Lyric and Colonial theaters in Dayton, announces several important innovations for improvement of the houses, notably the engagement of Heidelberg's philharmonic orchestra of 12 pieces for the Colonial. Among the first-run productions for Dayton which the Colonial will show, according to Mr. Hurtig, are those of the William Fox organization, the V-L-S-E releases and the Pathe features, under the new Gold Rooster brand. "I want to make the Colonial theater the most talked-of feature house in the Middle West," declared Mr. Hurtig, in outlining his ambitious plans for the house, which seem well calculated to deliver the goods for him in this respect.

"THE GALLOPER" AND "TRILBY" GOING WELL.

In spite of a week of unexpectedly hot weather, such as has hardly been known heretofore this summer, some of the best drawing cards of the season were in evidence in Cincinnati, notably, perhaps, the Equitable production of "Trilby" at the Grand. Prices were raised for the occasion from the ten-cent level, being fixed at 15 cents all over the house. The film showed for the entire week, the popularity of the two leading players, Wilton Lackeye and Clara Kimball Young, being such that the picture drew well during all of that period. Music Hall also reports good business, the film version of Richard Harding Davis' successful play, "The Galloper," drawing well the latter part of the week, with a first-class soloist and the big orchestra which is a feature at the big house. The venture in moving pictures there seems so far to be a decided success, and the promoters are only regretting the coming at an early date of the automobile show, which will make it impossible to show pictures for a week.

ROYAL TO HAVE A MARQUISE.

The management of the Royal theater, on Vine street between Seventh and Eighth, has decided to improve the front of the house, and provide protections for its patrons and passing pedestrians, by the construction of a handsome marquise extending over the sidewalk. The tile paving in front of the theater becomes very slippery, to the point of being dangerous, in wet weather, and it is hoped that the marquise will eliminate this trouble. The Royal has been doing an excellent business during the warm months, partly as a consequence of offering bargain attractions, in the shape of a double program, for five cents. The Universal and Mutual programs are combined and given together for a single admission, and the long show for a "jitney" has proved popular.

OFFICE OF "BULLETIN" HAS NEW HEAD.

The Cincinnati office of the Ohio Motion Picture Bulletin, which is published as a purely Ohio exhibitors' and producers' organ, with headquarters at Columbus, has been taken in charge by Miss Catherine Fieldhaus, of Louisville, Ky., succeeding F. P. Bloomfield, who has gone to Detroit to engage in business. Miss Fieldhaus is well known to exhibitors in Ohio and Kentucky, and expects to make a success of her work here, especially in view of the increasing activities among companies organized to produce pictures in and around Cincinnati.

MAKING OVER THE WALNUT.

Manager I. Libson, whose burdens as manager of the Strand and the Family have been added to by at least half by his control of the Walnut, reports that the changes being made are so extensive that the house will be virtually new when the work is over. Not only complete redecorating is in progress, but other work is being done, incident to the change from dramatic to moving picture productions, which will make the Walnut quite the finest and one of the largest moving picture houses in the city, according to Mr. Libson. Only features will be shown at the Walnut.

Cloth Signs in Michigan

Michigan Exhibitors' Association Gets a Modification of Fire Marshal's Rule on Cloth Signs—Paper Mounted on Cloth Permitted Up to Three Sheets in Frames—Six-Sheet Posters Can Be Pasted Tight Against Buildings.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

FOLLOWING a conference between a special committee from the Michigan Exhibitors' Association and Fire Marshal John T. Winship, the latter announced a modification of his recent ruling on cloth signs in front of moving picture theaters. Under the revised ruling, Michigan exhibitors will be permitted to use mounted paper on cloth up to and including three sheets, provided they are fastened in a frame and are solid up against the building, so that they will not blow around. Exhibitors will not be permitted to use six-sheets on mounts; the only way exhibitors can use them is to have them pasted right against the building. This ruling becomes effective about Dec. 1.

In the latest News Bulletin issued by the commissioner is contained this paragraph: "At a recent conference held in the city of Detroit and attended by representatives of all the film exchanges with headquarters in that city and a member of the staff of the state fire marshal's office, an agreement was entered into whereby in the near future only the smaller lithographs will be sent out to the various theaters in the state and where larger paper is used it will be placed on outside billboards or sides of buildings where same do not obstruct any entrances or exits. It was further agreed that signs will not be used as banners, but will be placed on boards or in frames."

SMALL HOUSES AND CONTRACT CANCELLING.

A number of exhibitors are finding fault with exchanges because of their contracts being cancelled when a larger theater comes into the neighborhood. For instance, one theater has a contract for certain films and is to have the exclusive first-showing in the territory, but his house only seats about 600. Some one comes along with a 1,500 seating theater and offers the exchange two days a week on that particular film. In many cases, the exchange will cancel the original contract and favor the latter.

GEORGE W. WEEKS TO MANAGE DETROIT METRO.

George W. Weeks has been appointed manager of the Detroit office of the Metro Film Corporation, which recently moved to new quarters at 159 West Jefferson avenue, where it occupies the second floor. Mr. Weeks is one of the best known men today in the moving picture industry in Michigan. He has been manager of the Universal exchange since it first opened and also has operated theaters. When the Michigan Metro Company was organized, he was one of the original stockholders, although he was not active in the management of the company. A few months ago A. Arthur Caille bought the bulk of the stock in the Michigan Metro Company and asked Mr. Weeks to act as its manager. Mr. Weeks accepted. He is still acting as advistory manager for the Universal Exchange. The numerous friends of "George" certainly wish him all the good luck in the world.

C. H. MILES BELIEVES IN PICTURES.

C. H. Miles, who operates a chain of theaters in Detroit, Cleveland and Pittsburgh, is getting more interested in pictures every day. He gives patrons of the Orpheum theater, Detroit, two hours of moving pictures without charge every day preceding the matinee. He says it is a great "puller" for the matinees. Every day at 12:30 there is a line-up in front of the box office. In Cleveland he runs pictures on Sundays and abandons vaudeville, while in his Pittsburgh theater he has given up vaudeville entirely and is now running nothing but pictures. "I am keeping my eye on the picture business," he said to the World representative. "I can see where it has unlimited possibilities."

THE GLOBE A NEW HOUSE.

Practically a new theater has been constructed in remodeling and enlarging the Globe theater on the north side of Grand River avenue, east of Trumbull avenue. The decorations are in ivory, gold and old rose shades. The theater contains a large balcony and is equipped with large mirror screen. There are a number of auto boxes in the rear of the auditorium, supplied with handsome wicker chairs upholstered in tapestry. The theater is carpeted throughout. Attractively designed retiring rooms are provided for women and men. Seating capacity of the house is increased from 600 to more than 1,000. The house is owned by the Globe Amusement Company. Leroy Bishop is president and general manager and Alvan D. Hersch, vice-president.

BETTER LOOK CLOSE.

A concern recently filed incorporation papers with a capital stock for $10,000 to make motion pictures. A prospective purchaser of stock in the company wrote to one of the Detroit newspapers asking: "Is it an honorable company? Has it enough capital to produce films? How long has it been in operation and what are the names of some of the films produced by said company?"

The newspaper sent this answer: "The film corporation in question was organized a week ago capitalized at $10,000, of which $5,000 is said to be paid-up stock. No men of business standing in Detroit are in the company. The president says the company is in need of funds. No film has been produced and the company does not as yet own a moving picture camera. Large posters, advertising a film production, were printed, but the president now says he has decided not to produce that film. Some changes in the plans of the company would be necessary, he said, before they could go ahead."

V-L-S-E APPOINTS DUNCAN ITS DEROIT MANAGER.

Sidney Abel, of the Cleveland office of the V-L-S-E was in Detroit on Sept. 14 and announced J. M. Duncan as manager of the Detroit office, succeeding R. R. Hutton, who has been transferred to Cleveland, where he will be connected with the sales department. Mr. Duncan has been in Cleveland with the local exchange for some time.

METRO OPENS AN ESCANABA BRANCH.

The Metro Film Corporation has opened a branch in Escanaba which will take care of the upper peninsula business. H. W. Smith has been appointed manager for the Northern Michigan business and has already taken up his new duties. Mr. Smith was for a long while manager of the New Empire theater on Woodward avenue, coming originally to Detroit from Albany, N. Y.

RAY BRANCH CHOSEN SALES DIRECTOR OF KRITERION.

An announcement of great surprise is the appointment of Ray Branch as director of sales for the Kriterion Film Co., which operates offices in Detroit, Toledo, Columbus and Grand Rapids. The appointment was made by Ralph Peckham, general manager of the company. Mr. Branch has been assistant manager of the Universal Exchange in Detroit since it opened a few years ago. Ray is popular, young and well liked. It looks as if Ralph Peckham made a very wise choice in selecting Mr. Branch for this new position.

C. W. Masterman has been transferred from the New Empire, Detroit, to the Majestic, Grand Rapids, where he will act as assistant to Bert St. Johns, the manager. Both houses are owned by A. J. Gillingham. A. W. Heuser will continue as assistant manager of the Empire.

The Kriterion offices are handling the Associated Program, which is meeting with big success. "I never realized before there was such a demand for one and two reel pictures," said Mr. Peckham. "We are doing far better than we had anticipated."

INDIANAPOLIS FILMS NEARLY READY.

AM THAT ROOSTER ALIVE?

A Mr. Runyan, who is showing slides of the Johnson-Willard fight in picture houses in Indiana, has a red buff rooster which he says was the mascot in the Johnson camp in Cuba. Just what does he mean, mascot?

Louis Hayes, it is understood, will take charge of the Princess, which he has arranged to buy from Mr. Spoehr.

The Sutherland Presbyterian church, Indianapolis, has installed a moving picture machine and equipped the basement of the church for shows every night in the week, except Thursday and Sunday, at the price of one jitney. The money will go into the fund for building the church.

ST. LOUIS' BELATED SUMMER.

After waiting all summer St. Louis exhibitors have just begun to have airdome weather, and the domes have been playing to capacity houses. The weather has come too late, however, for exhibitors, who had to depend on an outside theater alone, to make up the losses they sustained early in the season.

St. Louis' Expectations

Big Business Revival Among St. Louis Theaters Is Expected for This Season—Art and Business to Be Satisfactory—Theaters Turning to Films—Houses That Have Been Enlarged—Best Features Coming.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ST. LOUIS, always one of the best film towns in the country, is on the eve of a big business revival and preparations for the coming fall and winter season are assuming proportions which, if taken as a measure, assure a prosperous season for the exchanges and good programs for the patrons of the art.

Five new houses and two rebuilt places, all of them in the big class, will be open to the public for the coming season. The new theaters represent the very latest in construction and equipment. The Shaw, at Shaw avenue and 39th street, is already open. The Cinderella, at Cherokee and Iowa, which will replace the Cinderella dancing palace, and house three thousand patrons, opens September 26th. The beautiful Pageant, at 5851 Delmar, the largest one floor theater west of New York. The King's, at Kingshighway and Delmar avenue, which has had only periodical runs of mixed vaudeville and pictures, and a try at dramatic stock, which did not pay, and has been practically out of commission for a long time, will reopen under the management of Harry Koplar, on a scale that will no doubt make a successful place of it in the future. The Garrick, a Shubert dramatic theater which has been dark for two years, will soon open as an exclusive moving picture house. The new Triangle Corporation theater, where their policy of two dollar pictures will be put into practice, has not yet been announced, but it will almost be sure to be one of the few remaining downtown straight dramatic houses.

Of rebuilt theaters are the Marquette, at Eighteenth and Franklin avenue, which has had its seating capacity doubled, a beautiful new front and lobby, and all the late improvements added; the Chippewa, at Broadway and Chippewa, which has been made practically new, and the Monroe, 2800 Chippewa, which has been enlarged so as to double its former capacity.

The Garrick theater, which has been closed with the exception of a short time play or film engagement for the last two years, has been sold to Harris & Davis, of Pittsburgh, and will be reopened as a high class feature house early in October. The Harris & Davis company operate theaters in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Cincinnati and Pittsburgh.. All of their enterprises are conducted on a high plane, and prices as high as two dollars are charged at some of the theaters. It has not been announced yet what the admission prices at the Garrick will be. Isaac Lipzin, who has been managing the Harris & Davis house in Cincinnati, will be manager of the new place. The Garrick is very finely built and perfectly equipped, and was opened as a regular dramatic house by the Shuberts with Charles Richmond and Ada Rehan in "The Taming of the Shrew." When the Garrick goes over to pictures there will only be the Olympic, the American, and the Shubert theaters playing dramatic companies in the downtown district.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" DRAWING IN ST. LOUIS.

The "Birth of a Nation," which is in its third week at the Oympic, seems to be repeating the success that this remarkable fine feature has met with everywhere it has been exhibited. There was strong opposition to the film presentation, and the management secured a temporary injunction to keep the police from interfering with the exhibtion. The return made by the City Counselor's office filed September 11th, claims that part of the pictures ridicules the negro race, thereby causing prejudice. The case will be heard before Judge Hennings soon.

CINDERELLA READY OCTOBER 1.

The Cinderella dancing palace, one of the largest dancing resorts in the country, which is being turned into a monster moving picture theater by its owners, will open about October 1st. The theater will seat three thousand persons, and a program of big features changed daily for ten cents admission will be given. The management has also arranged for an innovation in the shape of dancing after the performance. A special dance orchestra will render music, and several hundred couples may remain and dance for an hour after the show. The auditorium of the theater takes the place of the dancing floor of the Cinderella, which was so large that after the seats were installed generous aisles and wide spaces at the sides were left. This space will be devoted to the dancing.

ANOTHER THEATER FOR DELMAR AVENUE.

The Pageant theater, an all picture house, opened at 5851 Delmar avenue on September 18th. The Pageant is a modern and well equipped house in every particular, and is perhaps the largest single floor theater in the country. Fifteen hundred patrons can be accommodated. A Hope-Jones Unit orchestra has been installed. A. E. Morelock is manager of the Pageant, and a program of first run pictures will be maintained. The opening bills will be composed largely of V-L-S-E features.

CHEROKEE STREET THEATERS IN CELEBRATION.

The Cherokee street neighborhood, one of the many districts in St. Louis where a number of theaters are grouped together, enjoyed its annual carnival and street fair the week of September 13th. There are a great many of these districts in St. Louis; they were formerly little outlying groups of shops and stores that the city grew around. Most of them have merged with the larger town, cast off their small unit habits and become as metropolitan as the balance of the city, and Cherokee street has merged, but it has not lost its identity, it is still the Cherokee neighborhood, it is still neighborly and friendly like a little town, and it likes to give its annual celebration and street fair each year that is very much like a big country picnic with metropolitan trimmings.

There are five theaters in the district, all within shouting distance of one another, the Best, on Jefferson and Cherokee; the Vandora, just around the corner; the Cherokee, across the street from the Vandora; the Favorite, and the big Favorite garden and airdome, under the same management. All of these theaters arranged special programs for the carnival and did their share in the entertainment of the many thousands of people that thronged the brilliantly lighted streets from dusk to midnight.

Fred Wehrenberg, manager of the Best theater and an active official of the Exhibitors' League, was very much in evidence at the celebration. Everybody knew everybody else, and everybody shook hands with everybody else, and nearly everybody had a chicken, or a duck, or a basket of groceries, won at one of the many contests that were a feature of the celebration.

Long Runs More General

In San Francisco an Interesting Tendency Toward Increasing Length of Runs for Feature Pictures Is Noticeable—Reason for It Not Yet Clear—Several Theaters That Furnish Examples—Value of a Fixed Policy.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ONE of the most interesting developments in the moving picture business in San Francisco of late has been the tendency toward longer runs in both dowtown and residence district theaters. A year ago not more than two exclusive moving picture houses attempted to show the same program for more than three or four days, while at the present time it is an easy matter to count a half a dozen who change but once a week. Whether this is due to the fact that the city has been entertaining hundreds of thousands of strangers during the past year and transient trade has assisted the theaters, or whether it is a natural development of the amusement business is by no means certain, but exhibitors are agreed that there is a strong tendency toward longer runs.

"The Clansman" ("Birth of a Nation"), which enjoyed such a heavy patronage at the Alcazar, is now being shown at the Savoy on McAllister street, after a brief engagement at the Cort, having been transferred to this house on account of the opening of the regular theatrical season. It is now on its twentieth week here, and from present indications will be run considerably longer, as the attendance is keeping up well. "The Woman" is now enjoying its six consecutive week's run at the Odeon on Market street, while "The Mix-Up" has run for three weeks at the Unique nearby. It is very unusual for any attraction to be offered at these houses for more than one week and the change in policy is significant.

The Imperial and the Portola theaters were the first local houses to inaugurate a solid week's run and the signal success that has been attained by these is due in no small measure to the uniform change dates and the uniform prices that were established. Manager Eugene Roth of the latter house attributes much of its success to the fact that the public was educated early to understand that programs would always be changed on a certain day and that prices would always be uniform. "Nothing is more annoying," he said, "from the standpoint of the patron, than to visit a moving picture theater and find that the program change day has been shifted and he is not seeing what he expected, or to find that the admission price has been changed overnight. A weekly change is convenient and uniform prices, regardless of the magnitude of the production, are essential to success."

NEW FILM CONCERN.

The Golden State Film Company has been incorporated at San Francisco with a capital stock of $53,500 by W. D. Walker, G. E. Duke, C. W. Humphreys, P. G. Hausman and J. Gale. Messrs. Walker and Duke have been engaged in the film business here for some time, with offices in the Mechanics bank building at 948 Market street. They have been handling the Evans and Sontag subject, "The Folly of a Life of Crime," as well as other attractions that have been secured.

SCREEN CLUB HOLDS FROLIC.

The Screen Club of San Francisco tendered a delightful entertainment in its clubrooms in the Tivoli theater building last week, the event being attended by more than two hundred members and their friends. Vaudeville acts from various theaters, dancing and other special features, including an elaborate luncheon, were enjoyed during the evening. The clubrooms were tastefully decorated for the occasion and visitors expressed delight at the beauty of the quarters. At a recent meeting of club members Leon Netter was chosen a director to succeed Sol Lesser, who found it impossible to be present at times, and Harry Schmidt was selected to fill the place of Leon Bories resigned.

FILM CONCERN MOVES.

The Pacific Comedy Film company has moved from the upper floor of the Film Exchange building on Golden Gate avenue, to the Mechanics' bank building on Market street. Manager H. J. Palmer has gone East to purchase additional film and expects to engage in business on a larger scale upon his return.

NEVADA BRANCH FOR EXCHANGE.

A branch of the Independent Film Exchange of this city is to be established at an early date at Reno, Nev., by G. Speck and F. Vallin. This will be the first film exchange to be opened in the Sagebrush State and the venture is being watched with considerable interest. It will be possible to serve the entire State of Nevada much more quickly than is now the case, and at a less expense to exhibitors, so a good business is expected from the start.

BUILDS HIS OWN FILM VAULT.

William Citron, versatile manager of the San Francisco branch of the William Fox Film corporation, has not only proved himself to be an extremely competent exchange man, but has also come to the front as a designer and builder of fireproof film vaults. When it was decided recently to erect a vault in the basement for the storage of film stock bids were solicited from local builders but their tenders were regarded as being too high so Mr. Citron undertook to handle the job, assisted by the regular office force. A reinforced concrete vault with a steel door has just been completed and the job would be a credit to any contracting firm. All of the films now kept on racks on the main floor will be moved to this vault shortly, and the inspection and poster departments will also be moved downstairs. A rest room for exhibitors will be fitted up on the main floor and other improvements of a permanent character made.

PICTURE THEATER AS TEMPLE FOR LEARNING.

Simplex Theater Number One in the Palace of Education on the grounds of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition has become one of the leading meeting places for educators and standing room here is very often at a premium. On Labor Day moving pictures were shown, these being accompanied by lectures on the following subjects: "Work of the Consumers' League," by Mrs. Helen L. Mabry, of the National Child Labor Committee; "The Science of Success," by Dr. Julia Seton; "The Profit Sharing Plan of the Ford Motor Company," by E. R. Riebel; "The Prevention of Industrial Accidents," by L. L. Richardson; "The Relation of Insurance to Labor," by Dr. Frederick L. Hoffman; "Labor's Deadly Foe," by Miss Mary E. Brown; "The Relation of the International Harvester Company to Its Employes," by J. R. Underwood; "What the Government is Doing for Labor," by Hugh S. Hanna, U. S. Bureau of Labor; "Devastation Wrought by the Hookworm and Its Effect Upon Labor," by Miss Laurine Sigmier, and the "Federation of Labor," by Grant Hamilton. Efforts to secure crowds at lectures without any other attraction have proved futile, but when these are illustrated with moving pictures it is with difficulty that accommodations can be arranged for all who wish to attend.

LEAGUE HEADQUARTERS MOVED.

The headquarters of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of San Francisco have been removed to the second floor of the Mechanics' bank building, where two large offices have been taken over. The Industrial Moving Picture company is also opening offices at this address.

SPOKANE THEATER TAKES NEW LEASE OF LIFE.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

J. W. ALLENDER and E. P. Gregory, who took over the Lyric moving picture theater last February from A. R. Patten, and have been running it as a five-cent house, have now leased the Spokane theater, which they will operate exclusively as a picture house on a ten-cent admission charge. This theater was formerly the home of many road shows, then the home of stock and later of a mixed program of pictures and a few vaudeville acts. It closed its doors several months ago and has been dark since. Additional to this it has been more or less dark for a couple of years.

Mr. Allender feels that as he and Mr. Gregory have been so successful with the Lyric that they will easily make a success of the Spokane and count on the Lyric as their bank roll for backing the new enterprise. The theater opened Saturday, September 11 at 11 a. m., and for the first hour all children under 14 years of age were admitted free.

Manager Allender has been in the picture business since 1908 when he started in Spokane and for a time since that was engaged in the same business in Montana. He announces that for the first eight days he will feature Charles Chaplin pictures in the Spokane and will open with Mabel Normand and Charles Chaplin in "Mabel At The Wheel," a two-reel presentation, and "Captain Swift," a five-part production of the Life Photo Film corporation by C. Haddon Chambers, featuring David Wall. Following these he plans to run Mutual Masterpictures and other features. His first change of program will include Charles Chaplin in "Ambition" and Dorothy Davenport in "Five Hundred Dollars Reward."

Mr. Allender has been showing second run Mutual Masterpictures at the Lyric and reports that the "Absentee," with Robert Edeson as the star, drew well.

PATHE OPENS OFFICE.

P. L. Carroll in Charge, Assisted by B. F. Hibbard.

P. L. Carroll, branch manager of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., has just opened offices at W412 First avenue and is handling the full releases of the company for this territory. He is receiving his releases direct from New York.

The Pathe News service is used at the Clemmer twice a week and occasional other releases are being used in other theaters. Mr. Carroll reports he has ten 24-sheet stands in the city to advertise productions of his company and that some three and six-sheet stands will be arranged soon.

B. F. Hibbard, formerly assistant in the local office of the Warner's Features, later absorbed by the United Film Company, which closed its local office when it went into the hands of receivers, is assistant to Mr. Carroll, as booker, in the office.

MUTUAL EXCHANGE TAKES NEW EXHIBIT ROOM.

Will Also Be Used by Neighboring Exchanges.

W. J. Drummond, local manager for the Mutual Film Corporation, has just closed a contract with Lee S. Forbes, manager of the Class A theater, for the Mutual Masterpictures and other Mutual service. Mr. Drummond reports business good and that he had films in 10 of the 13 picture and vaudeville houses of the city for the week ended Sept. 11.

The Mutual Company is also taking extra quarters at W410 First avenue adjoining its present quarters at W406 and 408 First avenue. The extra space will be for display rooms and there will be an exhibit room in it. The Pathe and the Universal Film & Supply Company will also use the exhibit room, when local theaters are not used for exhibition purposes, as their offices adjoin the Mutual. This is now called both "film row" and "movie row."

DUMONTS RETURN TO STAGE.

J. W. Dumont, who came to Spokane more than a year ago as manager of the local office of the Warner's, later absorbed by the United, and Mrs. Dumont will return to the stage the week of Sept. 19 to 25 in their former stage success, "Betsy And I Are Out." They will appear at the Empress.

J. P. COTTER WRITES OF GOOD BUSINESS.

J. P. Cotter, who with M. B. Haish organized the Majestic Amusement Enterprises, Baker, Ore., last spring, and took over the Orpheum and Grand theaters, of Baker, in a letter just received says:

"We did a nice business during the warm weather and have been packing them into our theaters since the cooler weather. We have been using the World Film productions for features with very good results, though we will play any feature that will bring in the 'dough.' We use in the Grand the straight General program and features and vaudeville combined in the Orpheum. We played 'Midnight at Maxim's' recently and stood the people out in the street. 'The Cup of Chance' also packed the theater and sidewalk. Chaplin is certainly strong here. We play him in the Orpheum, add three reels, making five reels in all, and it draws big crowds."

GERALDINE FARRAR FILM COMING IN NOVEMBER.

Spokane theatergoers will see Geraldine Farrar in her first film venture, "Carmen," at the Clemmer theater in November, according to F. S. Fountain, Northwestern manager of the Paramount corporation, who was a visitor in the city. The Farrar picture has just been completed by the Lasky company and is the first of several pictures in which the noted grand opera beauty will appear.

Mr. Fountain witnessed a private run of "Carmen" in Chicago, where he attended the annual conference of Paramount managers last week. He said: "'Carmen' is the most wonderful picture I have seen. The acting is superb. Some original effects are used in the production for the first time and Clemmer patrons are assured of a treat when the Farrar pictures come in November."

SPOKANE BREVITIES.

B. W. Copeland, manager of the Rex theater, reports that "The Scarlet Sin," featuring Hobart Bosworth in the title role and "The Broken Coin," a serial presenting Grace Cunard and Francis Ford, have been drawing big houses. He commenced to use the entire Universal program Aug. 29 with changes daily except Friday. The service includes the Broadway features and Mr. Copeland reports all have been drawing well.

picture; "Midnight at Maxim's" (Kalem), and Margaret Gibson in "A Child of The North," have been the leading attractions at the Majestic for the past week, from a box office standpoint.

Thomas Santschi, in "The Octopus," and "The Whirlpool," proved profitable attractions at the Class A during the week.

The Clemmer theater continues to pack the house with Mary Pickford productions. Not only did she pack the house in the second appearance of "Tess of The Storm Country," but also with "Rags," which appeared for four days close on the heels of the former.

The V-L-S-E production "The Rosary," proved an excellent attraction for the Casino as did "The Girl from His Town," with Margarita Fischer as star.

George Nash, in "The Cotton King;" Emma Wehlen in "When a Woman Loves," and "The Avenging Conscience," have been leading attractions at the Liberty recently.

IN DALLAS EXCHANGE OFFICES.

By S. G. Parker, Dallas, Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MANAGER C. C. Ezell is back at his old desk at the General Film company, after an absence of several months, during which time he handled the affairs of the Texas Paramount Pictures company. Mr. Ezell is one of the most popular exchange men in the southwestern territory.

C. E. Hudson, who has been managing the General office in Dallas, has returned to the East, where he has assumed a similar position with the same organization.

LeRoy Bickel, who has been handling the affairs of the Famous Players Film Company at Oklahoma City, is now installed as manager of the Texas Paramount exchange. Mr. Bickel is succeeded at Oklahoma City by R. D. Lewis, who has been traveling for that exchange.

W. M. Byrd, who was recently appointed manager of the World Film Corporation office in Dallas, after being a traveling representative for many months, did not stay with them long. He is now installed behind the mahogany manager's desk at the Box Office Attraction Company in Dallas, handling Fox productions.

At the present time, the World office in Dallas is being managed by C. R. McHenry, recently appointed assistant manager from the traveling ranks.

N. R. Spitzer, special Fox representative, will remain in Dallas for a week or two, getting Mr. Byrd "on" to the office and the work of the organization, when he will return to New York.

After the resignation of R. B. Morris from the Supply Department of the Consolidated Film and Supply Company in Dallas, A. B. Salles, who has been Mr. Morris' assistant for some months, was installed in the swivel chair.

DALLAS HAS FAIR CENSOR BOARD.

Local exchange men are congratulating themselves upon the personnel of the new censorship body in Dallas, as selected by Mayor Lindsley. The board is made up of seven members, taken from almost every walk of life—all of them broad minded, intelligent and prominent people.

After the rather fiery session of the Board of Public Welfare at the Municipal building, which was attended by the motion picture interests and the City Commission, held some time ago, Mayor Lindsley took the censorship proposition over from the welfare board and placed the matter under the direct jurisdiction of the City Commission. This was one of the points the exchange men and exhibitors were asking for, because it took the matter from the control of appointive officials and placed it in the hands of elective authorities, who are subject to the recall. Soon afterward, Mayor Lindsley informed the picture interests that the new board would consist of seven instead of three members, another bone of contention with the moving picture men.

BUSINESS GOOD IN SOUTHWEST.

The exchanges in the southwestern territory are expecting business to take a big leap, growing even much larger than in the past sixty days. In the last month or so, numerous exchangemen report business about 40 per cent. to 50 per cent. higher than in the past four months. One exchange in particular has been forced to add a few men to care for their increase.

The fact that within the past two weeks various reports show a total of about twenty new theaters in Oklahoma, ten or twelve in Arkansas and about thirty in Texas has wreathed the film and supply man's face in smiles. Besides the many new houses reported projected or in the course of construction, a large number of theaters are remodeling and purchasing new equipment.

V-L-S-E OPENS DENVER EXCHANGE.

Manager A. W. Goff Arrives—New Office—Relay Station in Salt Lake.

By Muriel Lee, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MANAGER A. W. GOFF, Coast Division Manager for the V-L-S-E is in town to select a new office for the exchange here, and to make this a buying office. Heretofore it has been merely a relay station out of Kansas City, but it has now become necessary to enlarge it and to make it a real exchange. Mr. Goff is going to Salt Lake in a week or ten days, and open relay station there which will be under the supervision of Mr. Frank Norris, who has been in charge of the V-L-S-E office, and who will become the district manager for the new one.

A. W. Goff.

Mr. Goff will be remembered by film men as having had charge of the Kleine optical works in Denver about five years ago.

The new V-L-S-E offices will be opened at 1433-37 Champa street, on the second floor of the Wight building, and will be occupied by the 1st of November. The offices will be very completely and very comfortably furnished, and will have a well equipped exhibition room.

MUTUAL EXCHANGE WILL MOVE.

Manager H. Lustig, of the Mutual exchange, in Denver, announces that his office will move from its present location in the Iron building, to 1724 Welton. This change was made necessary by the great growth of business and the outgrowing of the present quarters. In their new home the Mutual will have large, commodious offices with all the modern equipment. They will be in their new home by October 1.

BERTELSON TO MANAGE SALT LAKE V-L-S-E BRANCH.

R. W. Bertelson, until recently manager of the World Film Exchange, in Denver, has transferred to Salt Lake, as the manager of the V-L-S-E office there, which is just being opened. The Salt Lake office will be a relay out of Denver, and will govern territory in part of Montana, Idaho and Utah, some of the best film territory in the West.

Mr. Bertelson has had quite an interesting film career. He has had his own houses on the Pacific Coast for some time. Several months ago he decided to go into the exchange end of it, and to learn the business he worked for some time in the Seattle office of the World without salary, then was sent on the road for them. He had been in the game but a few months when he was sent to Denver to manage the exchange here. He has done such good work that V-L-S-E are sending him to open the Salt Lake office.

H. L. KNAPPEN NEW HEAD OF LOCAL PATHE.

Mr. H. L. Knappen has come to Denver to take charge of the Pathe exchange, in place of Mr. F. H. Quimby, who has been transferred to the coast. Mr. Knappen, besides making a brilliant showing in the film game for the short time he has been at it, is an old newspaper man. He has certainly had a varied experience that should make him all the more valuable to Pathe.

He began, a "cub" reporter on a Minneapolis paper in '94, and rose right up to be city editor there. From that time on, intermittently he has been in the newspaper game, doing his last work a year ago in Montana, where he got out a special edition.

About a year ago he began to become interested in the moving picture business, so he started in to learn it right from the bottom. He was sent out on the road, in the Pacific Coast district, and, as soon as this vacancy was known, he was put right here. He certainly will make good, for he is a live wire, and vitally interested in his work.

HOFFMAN FILM CORPORATION.

The Hoffman Film Company is a new Denver corporation. It has purchased twenty-three acres of land between Inspiration Point and Lake Side, where the film city will be built. Arthur E. Hoffman, a young Denver man, is president, and is promoting the company. Henry B. Dickinson is vice-president of the company, Joseph E. Guinn, secretary; Edward J. Mullenand and H. H. Buckwalter are two others interested in the enterprise.

The company will confine itself to three and four-reel subjects, comedy, rural drama and other outdoor films which will make the most of Colorado sunshine and scenic beauties.

Denver was selected by the new company for its headquarters after a careful survey of all other parts of Colorado. The experience of all other moving picture directors was taken into consideration and the obstacles and mistakes these experienced will be avoided by the management of the new company.

The new film company is capitalized at $250,000. Besides the men mentioned, there are other Colorado business leaders who have given encouragement and aid to the new enterprise.

WHEN THE WIRES CROSSED (Oct. 1).—The cast: L. C. Shumway, Adda Gleason, George Routh, Vivian Caples, Jay Morley, Melvin Mayo.

Oliver Kemp is candidate for mayor. Jim McEwen, boss leader of "Little Hell," goes to Kemp's home and tries to bribe him to withdraw from the ticket. Kemp advertises this fact and McEwen vows vengeance. Cyril Hays, McEwen's girl, plans a "Badger Game" on Kemp when she hears that Kemp has gone to his country home alone to rest. Mrs. Kemp while shopping steps into a telephone booth. The wires have become crossed and this message comes to her: "——Sherman Park Road, first house to right, I'll be ———" Why, that's our country home! She tries to hear more but in vain. On leaving the booth she sees a woman leaving one of the booths ahead of her and recognizes in her the original of a photograph she found at home, and which her husband said McEwen must have dropped!

Mrs. Kemp mistrusts her husband and that evening goes out to their country place to see how things are. Meanwhile Cyril and Spaulding, McEwen's henchman, have motored out to Kemp's country home. Spaulding remains outside and Cyril alone rings the door bell, and asks Kemp if she may come in and telephone her garage, as her machine has broken down. She telephones to McEwen that the coast is clear and he hurries out there with a newspaper reporter. Cyril once inside the house, takes off hat and coat, and feigns illness while waiting for help. Mrs. Kemp arrives in her limousine and looking in the window sees Cyril alone with her husband. An automobile turns in at the driveway and she watches while McEwen and the reporter get out. Spaulding, hidden in the shrubbery, cautiously tells McEwen that everything is all right and the three ring the door bell and Kemp lets them inside. Mrs. Kemp realizes then that the whole affair is a frame-up, and that her husband's good name is at stake, and resolves to thwart their plan. She climbs in a window leading to the dining room, removes her wraps, and fixes a tray with a decanter and three wine glasses, and enters the living room just as McEwen in a jealous rage is sneeringly accusing Kemp and Cyril, all of which the reporter is taking in, and promising to publish. McEwen and Cyril on seeing Mrs. Kemp realize their plot has failed, and they leave in a rage.

THE CELLO CHAMPION (Oct. 2).—The cast: Billie Reeves, Clara Lambert, Peter Lang, Charles Griffiths.

Music and Mrs. Pyfrom are closely connected in the minds of her friends, and when she announces a parlor recital by Dufoy, the famous but eccentric violincellist, all the fashionables respond with alacrity. Dufoy's eccentricity goes far this time. He elopes with the daughter of his concert agent and the date is off. In despair Mrs. Pyfrom sends her husband out to get anyone to impersonate the 'cellist, while she picks from her phonograph records the cello selections.

Bill, gentleman of too much leisure, is found on the front steps and induced to impersonate the player as an alternative to going to jail. With the phonograph and a soaped bow, Bill does very well until the young men, jealous of the attention he has won from the impressionable young girls, substitute a ragtime quartet for his next selection. The concert winds up in a riot, and all Bill gets out of it is a bad bump on the sidewalk and another where a flowerpot hit him.

THINK MOTHERS (Oct. 4).—The cast: Mary Charleson, Mary S. Smith, Charles Brandt, Jack Standing, Thurston Hall, Bartley McCullum.

Nora Murray, the daughter of an ambitious mother, is in love with and loved by Frank Noble, a good but poor man. Nora meets Lansing, a wealthy clubman, who takes her out to cafes and road-houses with her mother's consent but against her father's wishes. Nora's mother tells Noble over the phone that Nora is out, and disgusted he goes home to his parents on the farm, while Nora continues to go around with Lansing. After one of their trips to a road-house Lansing who has been drinking heavily runs the auto over the side of the road into a ditch, and nearly into the river. But with that warning the mother still wants Nora to marry Lansing, which she does.

A lapse of three years take place and Nora is very unhappy. Lansing does not stop drinking and goes out every night to his club and with chorus girls while Nora sits home. Nora calls her mother on the phone and tells her to come to her. Mrs. Murray comes to Nora and asks her forgiveness for the unhappiness she has caused her. Nora takes her mother in her arms and her forgiveness is given as the story ends.

LOVE AND SWORDS (Oct. 5).—The cast: David L. Don, Joe Opp, Edith Thornton, Walter Duncan.

Honus Inkwell, Pickle Trust Magnate, and Mike Grapefruit, head of Talcum Powder Trust, are the best of friends until they meet the charming Countess Lillian. Each falls desperately in love with her; they deceive each other and start out to pay the Countess a call. Honus is seen entering the grounds and the Countess and her lover plan to have some fun at their expense. The lover hides and Honus enters, telling the Countess how much he loves her.

Gets on his knee and hurts it on a rock, which he flings out of the way. Mike Grapefruit, who has appeared on the scene, arrives just in time to receive the full force of the rock.

From now on the friends are enemies. The Countess has her maid fill a water bag with boiling water, calls Honus and Mike on the phone and invites them to call. The Countess and her lover place the hot water bag on the chair, cover it with a thin cloth just as Honus is ushered into the room by the maid. The Countess invites Honus to be seated. He starts to tell her again of his love, but as time goes on, he thinks it is very warm, but the Countess assures him she feels very cold and reaches for a coat and places it around her shoulders. By this time Honus has unbottoned his coat and vest. He is perspiring now and very ill at ease and at last not being able to stay longer gets up and hurries out.

Mike, who has entered, is seen looking at Honus through the portiers. He goes into the parlor and is treated to the same dose as Honus. Honus arrives home, misses his key and hurries back to the home of the Countess to find it. Honus and Mike meet; they quarrel and challenge each other to a duel. The Countess' fiance agrees to act as referee. He notifies the undertakers to be on the job.

The undertakers are at the heels of Mike and Honus when they arive at the dueling grounds. They find men digging two graves; a wagon drives up with coffins and tomb stones. Mike is stabbed, the undertakers place a wreath on his breast and sprinkle it with water. Just then a girl enters and the duel is ended.

JIM WEST—GAMBLER (Special — Three Parts—Oct. 6).—The cast: Melvin Mayo, Dorothy Barertt, Helen Eddy, Robert Gray, Edythe Sterling, L. C. Shumway.

Jim West is the keeper of a gambling house. His wife, Kate, objects to his calling, but to no avail. Among the habitues of Jim's place is Stephen Morey. One night Morey loses all his money, and as a last resort, pawns his valuable ring with West. After losing this money too, Morey goes to a side room and kills himself. Jim slips the ring back in the dead man's pocket, and with an attendant carries the body out to the alley, so that no stigma shall be attached to his place. Kate finds out about the suicide and says that Jim must choose between her and the gaming table. Jim refuses, so Kate leaves with her daughter, Helen. Jim is despondent after Kate has gone. The police raid his place, and he is sentenced to two years' imprisonment. Stephen Morey's wife dies, and gives her son, Frank, his father's ring, warning him never to gamble. Frank leaves with relatives for the West. In prison Jim takes up religion, under the chaplain's influence, and Kate writes to him that she will take him back only when he has proved himself to be a man. With the idea of winning his wife back as his prime purpose in life, Jim enters the ministry after his release.

The years pass. Jim gets a call to a church in the same city where his wife resides. Frank is cashier of a bank there, and in love with Jim's daughter. While in the bank to deposit the church funds, Jim meets Frank, sees the ring upon his finger, and knows he is the son of the man who killed himself years ago. Jim also learns that Frank is following in his father's footsteps, and that the young man is under heavy obligations to a set of gamblers. Jim learns the location of the gambling house, and decides to save the boy as reparation for the past. It is night; Frank has taken the bank's money in a determination to win back all he has lost. Jim meets him in front of the gambling house, and tries to persuade the boy not to enter. Frank is obdurate, so Jim accompanies him inside to see that he gets a square deal, first removing his ministerial vest. The gamblers win all of Frank's money again, and Jim, with the old fever back, removes his coat, and gets into the game to win for Frank. He wins back all of the boy's money.

A fight ensues, and Jim escapes with Frank, but forgets his coat. The gamblers find it, and the letters in the pocket disclose the owner. They swear vengeance upon the minister. On the outside, Jim gives Frank the money to square accounts with the bank, and the boy promises to bring his sweetheart to church with him on Sunday. Frank and Helen meet Jim before the Sunday services, and there is a joyful reunion between father and daughter. Jim tells Helen he will accompany her home to see Kate after the services. As Jim preaches from his pulpit, the gamblers enter, and denounce him as a gambler before the congregation, exhibiting the coat as evidence. Helen rushes home and tells Kate she has found her father, but only to learn that he is still a gambler. At these words, Frank breaks his silence, and confesses to Kate how Jim gambled to save him. The elders of the church have a trial, and Jim, in disgrace, is dismissed from the church. As he walks away, a disheartened man, with all hope gone of ever seeing his wife again, he suddenly stares ahead in amazement, for there is Kate with outstretched arms.

THE TELEGRAPHER'S PERIL (Special—Two Parts—Oct. 7).—The cast: Ormi Hawley, Kempton Greene, Earl Metcalfe, Herbert Fortier.

Jane Darrow and Hugh Williams, an express messenger, are sweethearts. Jane's only sorrow is her brother, who, easily influenced and weak, is becoming addicted to drink. Both she and her mother protest in vain and in desperation the latter refuses the boy money and demands that he straighten up and get work. Instead, he falls in with a bad crowd and gets money by easier methods. Jane and Hugh marry secretly on the day she is made relief operator and agent at the country station near her home. On the same afternoon express money packages are to be left at her station and the Junction by Hugh. Jane's brother is influenced by his gang to steal it, and not knowing of her new position or marriage, he agrees. Part of the gang board the train at Jane's station and the brother and one other are left to get Jane's package. The brother left outside on guard hears his sister's scream as his pal tries to tear from her the package. He enters in time to save her and then learns why she is there and of the marriage.

Realizing Hugh is liable to be killed at the Junction by the rest of the gang, he helps her tie up the other man, leaves her on guard with a revolver and hurries across country to save Hugh. At the Junction tank the bandits have held up the train and while some hold up passengers and train crew the balance are trying to break into the express car, guarded by Hugh. An unequal battle is in progress, until the posse arrives and kill or capture all the gang. Hugh and the brother and the latter, ashamed of Hugh's thanks, would explain his part, but the sheriff hastens him away. Meanwhile the bandit Jane is guarding struggles to loose himself and Jane is afraid to shoot, when he finally does get free. They struggle and he gets possession of both gun and money. Jane throws herself upon him in an endeavor to keep him there and her brother and the sheriff arive in time to recapture him. The brother is accused by the bandit of being one of them and he admits it, but the sheriff refuses to arrest him. A brighter future opens up for all with the brother's regeneration.

THE SON (Oct. 8.—The cast: Octavia Handworth, Jack Standing, Eleanor Blanchard, Leon Kelly.

At the opening of the picture we see Harlow's happy home. His wife is waiting for him, while he is detained in his stock and bond office by an adventuress, Mrs. Fenner. When John Harlow comes home, he shows evidence of having had a pleasant interview. The suspicions of Mrs. Harlow and the twenty-year-old son, Gene, are not aroused until Mrs. Fenner calls him up on the telephone. When he comes back to the table, his wife asks him who called up, but he waives aside her question. In the days that follow, Mrs. Harlow becomes partly deranged through Harlow's absence from home, caused by the visits to this woman, Mrs. Fenner. One night Gene determines to follow his father, and sees him take Mrs. Fenner to a cabaret. The son is on the verge of rushing to his father, but controls himself. Instead, he goes home and refuses to tell his mother anything, too, feeling that she might spoil a plan that is laid to save his father.

The next day he goes to the home of the woman and asks her to give his father back to his home. The woman does not take him seriously, but instead, tries to exercise her wiles on him. The boy responds to her, it seeming his only way out. He sees the woman a few times, which keeps the father away while the mother thinks her son has gone from her. However, Gene waits until one evening, when he hears his father making an engagement with Mrs. Fenner, and determines to get at Mrs. Fenner before he arrives. This he does, and manages to stay until the father comes. The father comes in, is at first held aghast, and then turns on the woman and accuses her of inveigling his own son by her wiles. She turns on him and with all the animalism in her nature she tries to kill him. The son separated the two and the repentant father, who suddenly realizes things concerning the single standard of morality, goes home to the wife.

THINK OF THE MONEY (Oct. 9).—The cast: Billie Reeves, Patsy DeForest, Mae Hotely, Harry Coleman, Nancy Baring.

Billie and Jane are left their uncle's money on condition that they marry each other within thirty days. As Billie has a wife and two children, and Jane has a frightfully jealous husband, it looks as though they could not comply with the conditions of the will, but the provision that in case one should refuse the money shall go to the other offers a ray of hope. They have never met and each decides to pretend to be single and discourage the attentions of the other. Billie visits Jane and his wife goes along as his valet. Jane's husband pretends to be the butler that he may keep close watch over his better half. Billie has epileptic fits and Jane acts like a vixen, but Billie proposes and she accepts him, as in duty bound. Then Billie kisses her and his wife and her husband put up such strenuous objection that the deception is unmasked, but the executors send word that in the event of either being already married the money is to be divided and there is plenty enough for two.

BIOGRAPH.

THE OLD AND THE NEW (Oct. 4).—The cast: Edward Cecil, Kate Bruce, Curtis Cooksey and Isabel Rea.

The young efficiency expert, home from college, enters his father's office and begins to demonstrate his methods. "You need a vacation, dad," he urges, and sends his father off with the assurance that he will look after the business. His first act is to discharge the bookkeeper, a fiddling old fellow who couldn't recall the combination of the safe without looking up his records. The old man, disconsolate, goes home, tells his anxious wife he has been granted a holiday, and sits down sadly to think things over.

Meanwhile the young man's sweetheart learns what he has done and pleads for the old employe. But the expert tells her she mustn't bother her pretty head about business, and he'll take her to lunch. While he is still in the inner office, she playfully enters the vault. He comes out and locks the vault, then misses her and makes inquiry. In panic, he forgets the safe combination; then rushes to the bookkeeper's home just in time to save the despondent old man from suicide. He goes eagerly to the office to rescue the imprisoned girl, but cannot recall the combination—and his memorandum is destroyed. Instinct, however, still lingers in his sensitive finger tips, and the vault door is opened—none to soon to save the girl's life.

THE WORTH OF A WOMAN (Special—Two Parts—Oct. 5).—The cast: Vera Sisson, G. Raymond Nye, Jose Ruben and Madge Kirby.

Holmes, an importer, is ruined by reverses in the foreign market, and goes West to recoup his fortunes by working an undeveloped mine which he owns. His wife accompanies him. Walking past the saloon in the mining town, they see a man maltreating a dancing girl, and Mrs. Holmes interferes. The man is Barlow, proprietor of the place; and the girl is his sweetheart, whose jealous remonstrances against Barlow's attentions to other women have resulted in the quarrel. Holmes becomes infatuated with the girl, and she returns his passion. Barlow discovers the trend of affairs and warns the Easterner away from "his girl." The lovers determine to elope. Barlow discovers the girl leaving the saloon and threatens to kill her. She runs for protection to Holmes' cabin, but he has gone to the station to meet her. Mrs. Holmes shields her from Barlow's wrath. Holmes returns and the girl tells him that he is not worthy of his wife. Barlow sells out the saloon and leaves town. The girl decides to go with him. Holmes, his eyes opened, begs his wife's forgiveness and makes a fresh start.

HER SOUL REVEALED (Oct. 7).—The cast: Charles Perley, Augusta Anderson, Laura LaVarnie and Zoe Bech.

Poverty was not the only enemy which the Reverend John Sterling had to fight in the slums. Disease and other dangers lurked in the tenements which he tried vainly to have remodeled. Time and again he appealed to the wealthy landlord to clean up the tenements. At last he called in the Board of Health. This irritated the landlord, who, seeing his buildings in danger of being condemned, determined to get rid of Sterling. A chance meeting with a stage acquaintance gave him an idea. With the promise of a trip to Europe if she succeeded, he set the actress the task of compromising Sterling. She pretended interest in his mission work, and quickly won his confidence. But through a letter which came into his hands Sterling learned of the plot and denounced the woman. She, mortified, had nothing to say; but through association with him her eyes had opened to the misery of the poor, and in genuine sympathy she continued her tenement work. An epidemic of diphtheria had no terrors for her, and it was there that Sterling found her again, fighting single-handed humanity's battle against ignorance and disease, and knew that she was the woman sent from Heaven to be his mate.

BILLY'S STRATAGEM (Oct. 8).—Biograph—Reissue No. 18).—The cast: Wilfred Lucas, Claire McDowell, Edna Foster, Inez Seabury, Robert Harron and William J. Butler.

Billy and his sister, though living on the frontier of civilization, were just as fond of play as any boy and girl. The great stockade round their house was necessary as a defence against marauding Indians, but it shut out the enchanting world beyond, and they were always longing to get outside it. One day their mother went into the forest to carry dinner to their father, who was felling trees. Their good-natured grandfather permitted them to leave the stockade. They had been playing only a little while when Billy heard a war whoop and saw a band of Indian warriors coming toward him. At top speed Billy dragged his little sister home and helped his aged grandfather to bar the gate. Soon the Indians forced the barrier, slew the old man, and pursued the children to the cabin. In the inner room Billy laid a fuse of shavings to his father's store of powder, dragged his sister through a window, ran around the house and slammed the door on the Indians within. The terrific crash that followed marked the end of the Indian raid, and Billy was highly praised for his strategy by his parents and the other settlers whom the outbreak had alarmed.

Next day he sees a beautiful girl with whom he becomes smitten. Jones arrives at the beach and engages the attention of the girl. Bob's old flames cook his goose by showing the new girl his letter to Jones, which ends: "Women are fit only for playthings for fools." Enraged, the girl goes boating with Jones. He thinks she has gone out, gets up on both feet and the secret is out. Then to punish him and get him to accompany her to a dance that evening she writes a little note of invitation to dreaded mother-in-law to come on for a few weeks' visit. MISS STICKY MOUFIE—KISS (Oct. 8).—The cast includes Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew.

Her right name was Miss Claymore when Wade Buchanan first knew her and fell in love with her, but when he returned three years later, and married her he nicknamed her "Miss Sticky Moufie-Kiss," for she talked only "baby talk," and had become a regular human tanglefoot flypaper. At their wedding breakfast she put four lumps of sugar in his coffee, their desserts were mostly rich jams and preserves, and she called her uncle "Junky-Wunky." Then just imagine your wife at dinner greeting you with the following: "Did my dwate bid Mankins realize he wud doin' to dive up leading a nasty wasty bachelor man's life and stay home wiv his itty ongy-blossum wifie?" Wade's answer sounded as though he said it through a head of lettuce, and unable to stand it longer, he asks her if the salt water is sweet. Her reply that "it's dreffle nassy stuff" puts the finish-touch. Excusing himself, he goes down to the beach and wades out into the ocean, dress suit and all, until he disappears.

THE AGONY OF FEAR (Special—Three Parts—Sept. 30).—Robert Arthur, scion of an English family, is an outcast in America, living upon the remittances sent to him by his father. Cruel, and with little sense of honor, he repeatedly abuses and injures Henry, his valet. He receives a letter from his English cousin, Maitland, which reads in part: "Since your exile in America, your father has been very ill and cannot survive long. Your escapades cause him much worry." Cousin Maitland has also read a clause in Robert's father's will which says that should his son die within five years without a family, then the whole of the estate will revert to Maitland. Then it is that Maitland sends a confidential man to America to watch Robert and to endeavor to further tempt him to dissipation.

Robert has wronged Louise and she spurns the offer of money from him in lieu of an honorable name. Arthur receives a cablegram stating that his father died, and he is the sole heir. He endeavors to celebrate his good fortune at the club, but is spurned by his friends. Banished from home until she redeems her fair name or reveals the guilty man's identity, Louise creeps into the automobile belonging to Robert, and when he returns to it in a drunken frenzy, he throws her out and to her death. Henry, Robert's valet, is also assaulted by Robert, and leaves, vowing revenge. Donald, a new valet, is engaged. Shortly thereafter, Robert begins to receive mysterious messages. They come from all sources and say: "Beware of the stroke of ten." "A life for a life." "Justice shall be done neither by man's law nor by your own hands." To all parts of the country Robert flees in an endeavor to escape these terrible messages, but it is of no avail. And meantime, Maitland's confidential man reports that Robert's health is being rapidly undermined, and Maitland receives these reports with pleasure.

In desperation, Robert engages Bowles, a private detective, who discovers that Henry, the first valet, to whom suspicion pointed, is not guilty of working upon Robert's superstitions. Robert, in the far west, after months have passed, becomes engaged. Their wedding night is set. On the night of the wedding, Robert receives a message which reads. "On the stroke of ten on your wedding night, you shall pay." As the fateful hour approaches, Robert becomes more and more horror-stricken. The minute hand is one minute of ten, and the face of the clock disappears, and the face of Louise, the dead girl is seen. Robert falls lifeless of heart disease. Then it is that Detective Bowles arrests Donald, the valet. He conducts him to the death chamber, where the prisoner looks down upon the dead man. The detective takes a photo of Louise from his pocket and thrusts it into the prisoner's hand. Donald bows his head in assent and says: "She was my sister." It was Donald who was working upon the superstitions of Robert and had at last found revenge.

A brick is promoted to the job of Archie's first assistant and is sped on its mission by the arm belonging to Willie's rival. A little detective work results in the discovery that the man wearing the coat is handcuffed. Later, Arling learns that the second man is Bently, a Secret Service agent, and that the prisoner is King, a counterfeiter. Bently is taken aback upon learning of the counterfeit money with which the Grand has been victimized.

Vallie Martin registers at the Grand. The woman gets in touch with Dr. Perrin. Arling, who loves Martha, the doctor's daughter, finds himself regarding Vallie with suspicion. Later, King, by pretending illness, succeeds in having Perrin brought in to attend him. The physician suddenly strikes the detective from behind, felling him. He then aids the counterfeiter to escape, after first instructing the man to bind and gag him. Arling is led to suspect Perrin when the escape is discovered. Later, when another counterfeit bill turns up, he traces it back to Perrin. Bently makes the same discovery and attempts to arrest the doctor. A desperate fight ensues. Perrin breaks away, but upon reaching the lobby is confronted by the police called in by the management. A pistol duel takes place in the crowded lobby, which ends when Perrin is mortally wounded. In her sorrow, Kathleen takes from the bookcase a book of poems which she had been in the habit of reading to Adele. A note falls from the volume. It reads: "You have faithfully fulfilled the promise you gave our mother and I am going to set you free. The little powder I have kept for months gently shows the way. Adele." Watching her chance, Helen knocks her captor off the ladder and into the water and makes her escape. The train is just pulling away when the daring girl climbs to the edge of the tank. Taking a desperate chance, she leaps—and lands aboard the last car. The girl succeeds in warning Cameron of his horse's peril in the nick of time. The crooks are pursued. THE PLOUGHSHARE (Special—Four Parts—Oct. 1).—The cast: William West, Robert Conness, Richard Peer, Augustus Phillips, Frank A. Lyon, Gertrude McCoy, Bigelow Cooper, Helen Strickland, Margaret Prussing, Philip Quin, Bessie Learn, Bob Walker.

By the death of his father, old Judge Lawrence, William Lawrence inherits the family's vast Southern estates. The slaves welcome him as their new master, but they all dislike "little Jim," William's half-brother, who is left by the father in William's guardianship.

Twenty years elapse, and William is elected governor of his state. Little Jim has grown to young manhood, but with the passage of the years, his nature has become worse. It is discovered that Jim has had a secret intrigue with Jenny Strong, a simple country girl, who implores him to keep his promise and make her his wife. Meanwhile, she has kept all knowledge of what has transpired from her brother, Jack.

At the state capital are two important families, the Leighs and the Claytons. Evelyn Clayton has fallen deeply in love with Jim Lawrence. William Lawrence has met and fallen in love with Helena Leigh. Arthur Willet, a friend of both families, who has had from the first an instinctive dislike for Jim Lawrence, overhears Jim talking with Jenny Strong. Later, at the home of the Leighs, he comes upon Jim making love to Helena. He theerupon tells her father how he has heard Jenny Strong pleading with Jim to right the wrong he has done her. Dr. Leigh drives Jim from his house. There follows a violent quarrel between Helena and her father, during which the doctor falls to the floor, overcome by heart trouble. On his deathbed he begs Helena to marry the governor. Helena consents because it is her father's dying wish, though she fancies herself in love with Jim. Strong discovers the trouble with his sister and determines to get satisfaction. To revenge the exposition of his guilt, Jim writes to Willet to fight a duel with him. Willet, who is a crack shot, accepts and leaves to indulge in a little practice. Jack comes upon Jim, and before he has finished talking, Jim shoots him with one of Willet's pistols. Willet is accused of the crime and is placed in jail. Jenny takes her own life and an unsuccessful appeal is made for Willet by Curwood, a political leader and uncle of the accused.

Moved by Helena's pleadings, Jim confesses to his brother, but still maintains that he committed the murder in self-defense. His brother, the governor, pending the arrival of the sheriff, locks Jim in a room, but he is released by Helena, who, having taken two horses from the stable, rides away with him. Inasmuch as the governor had been to the stable, and seeing that he is accused of intrigue, he says that he did spirit his brother away. He resigns, and Helena, who realizes that she is the cause of her husband's downfall, declares herself in court as the accomplice in the murderer's escape. Helena, now that she is to be indicted in her husband's place and being cognizant of his great love, which she feels is lost forever, is about to commit suicide when her husband appears and tells her that the law has been satisfied by the death of Jim, whom they have learned was drowned in South America. The governor and his wife are reconciled.

THE BUTLER (Oct. 2).—The cast: William Wadsworth, Richard Tucker, Gladys Leslie.

Hugh Graham is pestered by creditors for his gambling, and to make matters worse he is in love with a girl whose mother insists that she must never marry a man who is not only well off but steady enough to take care of his own financial interests and support his wife in the style to which she has been accustomed.

Hugh receives a visit from a kindly faced old man, who bears a letter from Hugh's uncle, William Hunter. The letter informs Hugh that his uncle is about to start on a visit to Japan, and that as he may be gone for two years, he wishes Hugh to try to find a place in his household for this old man, the uncle's butler, until his return. Since his uncle is the only one from whom Hugh gets his income, he gives the old man a position as butler in his bachelor apartments. It is evident from the day of his arrival that the kindly servant is greatly distressed at seeing the way in which Hugh is "going the pace." Many a night when Hugh comes in late, Lanhem (the butler) is sitting up waiting for him. One day, shortly after Hugh has given an I. O. U. for a large amount to Spencer Morton, with whom he frequently gambles at cards, and who happens to be his rival for the hand of Audrey Lane, he receives a letter from Mr. Martin, his uncle's lawyer, telling him that the check for $3,000, which he receives with the latter, is the last remittance he will get until he has settled down and made good in some business. Just at this time, he is told by his sweetheart, Audrey, that her mother is determined to marry her to Spencer Morton, and that if Hugh wants to make her his wife he must lose no time in getting some money and bringing about a wedding. Hugh is in great distress. Suddenly he gets an idea and that is to change the $3,00 to read as $30,000. He ponders for hours upon the matter, and finally, with infinite care, he alters the check to read as he has planned. He then gives the check to his butler with instructions to deposit the check to his credit. The butler glances at the check. His startled expression would indicate that he believes that something is wrong. A short time afterward, as Hugh sits in his den, now thoroughly overcome with remorse at what he has done, the old butler enters. He sees Hugh reach out and open a drawer of the table, from which he takes a revolver. As he raises it to his head, the butler rushes forward and seizes his hand. Then the old man begins to talk to Hugh very seriously, finally, and to Hugh's intense surprise, taking from his pocket the photograph of a woman, at sight of which Hugh exclaims "Mother!" "Yes, Hugh," the old man declares, "and I am your uncle, William. I promised your mother to look after you, and from now on I'm going to do it. Instead of depositing that check, I have paid all your old debts, and now I want you to start again—with a clean slate!"

BLACK EYES (Oct. 6).—The cast: Raymond McKee, Jean Dumar, Guido Colucci, Yale Benner, Julian Reed, T. Tamamoto.

Mr. and Mrs. Willard are happily married, but Mr. Willard's law partner is somewhat of a rounder, and often tries to induce Willard to "come on out for a big time." One day—it is the day on which Willard has promised to take his wife to the theater—Willard's partner tells him that he has secured tickets for the big prize fight and begs Willard to accompany him that evening. Willard finally consents and, making an excuse to his wife, gets away. Mrs. Willard accepts a neighbor's invitation to play "bridge," and leaves for home after she has lost a good deal of money. Hubby, however, has arrived home first, and he "calls her down" for being out so late—forgetting to state that he has only been home for five minutes himself. They both promise to "never do it again."

But a week later, Willard's partner reminds him that they have both been invited to a masked ball at the home of a lady friend of the partner's. Willard plots with his partner to get away by having the partner send him a fake telegram calling him to Trenton. Willard receives the telegram and his wife is quite convinced of the necessity of his going to "Trenton." The same evening, while he is at the ball, she again goes to a bridge party. Quarreling with one of the women who cheats, she receives a black eye when the woman hurls a pack of cards in her face. She goes home horrified to find that it is growing worse every minute. Reading a paper, she comes across the advertisement of Professor Scarab, who guarantees to restore black eyes to their natural color in fifteen minutes. Off to the professor's goes Mrs. Willard, thinking only of having the eye brought to its normal appearance by the time hubby gets back from Trenton. But, meantime, hubby himself has received a beautiful black eye as the result of a fight with one of the male guests at the ball. His partner knows of Professor Scarab and rushes him off to have his eye attended to.

While hubby is resting in an ante-room of the professor's establishment, his wife is occupying another. While resting, Mrs. Willard picks up a newspaper, emits a horrified scream when she reads that the train on which her husband is "returning from Trenton" has been wrecked, and all the passengers reported killed. Willard, in an adjoining room, hears the scream and comes in, a sheet from the cot on which he has been lying wrapped about him. It takes a moment or two to convince his wife that it is not a ghost that she sees, and then she promises faithfully never to play bridge again. Willard, glad to be let out of a scrape himself, assures her that he forgives her and takes her in his arms.

AN UNWILLING THIEF (Special—Three Parts—Oct. 8).—The cast: Herbert Prior, Marie Sasse, Leol Steuart, Leonie Flugrath, Harry Eytinge, Lillian Devere, George Romaine, Marjorie Ellison, Yale Benner, Lawrence White, James J. Gerson.

While running along a carriage drive in her father's grounds, little Bab, the child of millionaire James Harrison, falls and cuts her wrist on a piece of broken glass. The doctor assures the mother and father that it is not serious, but that the child will bear a scar for life. A few days later, while waiting outside the gates of her home for the servant, Bab is snatched up by a woman who passes in an automobile, and carried away. One of the servants has seen the incident and he tells Bab's father. Realizing that the child has been kidnapped, Mr. Harrison at once communicates with the police, but after many days' careful search, no traces of Bab are found. The mother dies soon afterward.

Bab has been stolen by two men and a woman, who, instead of demanding a ransom, decide to start the child on a life of crime, compelling her to steal and otherwise aid them in their nefarious enterprises. Meanwhile, after his wife's death, Harrison has brought his nephew, George Barber, into his home to take the place, as much as possible, of his lost daughter. George turns out to be an absolutely worthless youth. George is gotten out of many scrapes by David Clay, a rising young lawyer.

Twelve years have passed when Meg Ferber, the woman who has stolen Bab, dies, leaving her to the tender mercies of the two men. Before she dies, Meg confesses to Bab the story of her kidnapping, and gives her the clothes and a necklace which she wore on the day she was taken from her home. After Meg's death, Bab determines to run away and leave the life of crime forever, and at the first opportunity she does so. She finally obtains a position in an apartment house, assisting the janitor. But even here she is not free from persecution, for Ferber and the other crook have tracked her, and Ferber tells her to steal everything of value or suffer the consequences. Terrified, Bab agrees. As she is going through the drawers of a desk in the apartment of one of the tenants, the young man walks in and surprises her. He proves to be David Clay, and feeling that Bab is not naturally a thief, he gets her to tell her story. When she shows him the clothes and the necklace given to her by Meg, he declares that they are just as described by her father in his account of the stealing of his daughter. He takes Bab to Harrison's home and tells the story that Bab has told him. This, with the scar on Bab's right wrist is sufficient to convince Harrison that his daughter has been restored to him. Later, after Barber, the good-for-nothing nephew has been told by Harrison that he must shift for himself thereafter, Clay gains Harrison's consent to make Bab his wife.

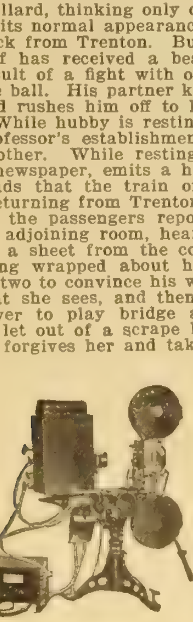
THE MANUFACTURE OF COIN (Oct. 9).—A thoroughly interesting and very instructive picture taken in the Philadelphia Mint, by permission of the United States Treasury Department. We see old gold and silver accepted by the mint and turned into coin, bars of gold bullion, and the process of melting gold scraps into ingots. We see also the process of analyzing the gold at the assay office. An interesting scene shows the process of filing off the rough edges of the ingots, after which the workmen's clothes are burned to recover the precious dust. The work of rolling the ingots of gold into thin strips is next seen.

This strip of metal is subjected to twenty-eight operations. First, the blanks are cut for the making of five-dollar gold pieces. These are then annealed, whitened and cleaned. They are next "milled" to round off the edges. Then we see the coining machine which stamps out the finished coin. There follows a scene of the operators loading the machines and then taking out finished twenty-dollar gold pieces. The coins are then examined for any possible defects, the slightest defect being sufficient to cause its recasting.

In counting the coins after they are cast, "counting boards" are used. By this method, large numbers of coins are counted in a very short time. Next, we see the process of weighing in a perfectly adjusted machine—a machine which does the work of fifteen women. All coins, either over or under weight are automatically separated from the standard ones. We are shown the way in which the coins are prepared for shipment, small bags being placed in larger ones, and these sent out to the different banks. In every case, as one would expect, heavily armed guards safeguard the shipment.



THE MASTER MODEL PROJECTOR is your safeguard against poor work on the screen and heavy remittances for frequent repairs. Its longevity and its perfect service justify its installation in your booth.

The engineer, who has wronged a girl in the city, takes her child and leaves it on the minister's doorstep in the village. Darling Dandy sees it and takes it to her home. The convict saves the warden's little daughter from drowning and is pardoned for his brave deed. Meanwhile his released cellmate forces the convict's wife again and again to give him money, and calling at her home one night, attempts to kiss her, but she repels him with a revolver. The pardoned convict arrives just in time to hear what passes and almost chokes his former cellmate to death. His wife, however, interferes; the former cellmate departs, and there is a happy reunion between husband and wife.

OFF FOR A BOAT RIDE (Sept. 30)—The cast: James T. Kelly, Ann Ivers, Margie Rieger, Jack Pollard, Bud Jamison.

The family starts for a boat ride, but father, attracted by a pretty woman fishing, slips out of the party and goes to help her land a big fish. The line is a rope, and, in casting it, father catches the woman and swings her into the water. The family misses father, but daughter's fiance finds him, and then mother takes a hand and makes it hot for papa. Two policemen become mixed up in the scrape and one kicks the other into the water beside the woman. A boat picks them up, while the family, abandoning all thoughts of a boat ride, starts for home. Then Jack falls into the water and comes up in a den of thieves. He is forcibly made to join in a burglary that night and it happens that the family's house is selected. After an uproariously funny chase through the house, with father, mother and daughter in night clothes, the burglar finally is caught through Jack's efforts and peace reigns once more.

THE FAMILY DIVIDED (Special—Three Parts—Oct. 2).—The cast: Edna Mayo, Bryant Washburn, John F. Cossar, Florence Oberle, Lewis Edgard.

Henry F. Glazier, a well-to-do business man, and his wife have two pretty children and are much in love with each other. One day, however Mrs. Glazier sees her husband with a strange woman and follows them to the woman's home. Here she sees the woman pointing to a child and indicating her destitute condition to Glazier. He helps her with money and Mrs. Glazier suspecting groundlessly that her husband has been untrue to her sues and obtains a separation. The daughter is awarded to the mother and the son to the father and the boy growing up without a mother's influence becomes wayward. Twelve years after the separation, Glazier decides to send his son away and writes to his wife to meet the youth for a farewell in the office of a mutual friend, "Bob" Moulton, a young attorney in love with Myra, the daughter. By chance, the parents also meet here and a reconciliation is effected, when matters are explained. The play is a strong argument against bearing idle suspicions against one's life partner.

KICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURE.

THE DRAGON'S CLAW (Special—Three Parts—Sept. 29).—A little girl and her father are among the settlers in a small Western town. The father is very friendly with the neighboring Indian tribe and is presented with a quaint piece of metal representing a dragon's claw—the tribe's good luck omen. Some time later, while traveling with his daughter, he is held up by a band of bandits and is shot by a man of their number who takes from him this dragon's claw. The man is left to die on the desert.

Years pass. The little girl has grown into a beautiful young lady. She lives in a large Eastern city and is prominent in the best society. She still remembers the days in the West, the episode of the dragon's claw and the killing of her father. She marries. Her husband is a prominent figure in the business world. Their love is very real and their life most happy. He becomes interested in a mine in the West which is found to yield the richest gold. He decides to go out West to see this mine and his wife expresses a desire to go along with him.

The mine is christened "The Dragon's Claw," because of an Indian charm the man owns. His wife does not connect the name with the killing of her father. While out on a Western desert, he shows the dragon's claw to his wife. She then recognizes it as the kind her father possessed when he was killed. She has understood it to be the only one of its kind. So it is her husband who killed her father!

What shall she do? She is undecided. She cannot bring herself to kill him in cold blood! Still, she must avenge her father's death. So, taking all with her, she leaves him alone on the desert to die. Some bandits have been prowling in the neighborhood. They see the woman and decide to make away with her. They start to carry out their plans. The husband sees them, realizes their purpose and hurries after his wife. He arrives while she is holding the bandits at bay and, while saving her, he is himself killed.

Help has arrived and to them the woman leaves the dead body, continuing on her way alone. She will have nothing to do with the man who killed her father! About an hour later she meets an Indian trader. In his hand he has a dragon's claw which he wants to sell to her! Like the one her husband and father had! Can it be that there are two such curios in existence, she asks? The Indian draws out a handful. They are common as dirt in that section of the country. The woman realizes her tragic mistake, rushes back to the dead body of her husband and falls lifeless over it.

MINA.

WHY THE BOARDERS LEFT (Sept. 30).—If you put up at a hotel where the bus driver dropped the grips on your head and stopped the horses several times between the depot and the hotel while he went in for a "smile," wouldn't it make you sore? If, while registering, he stuck you in the ribs with a pen, escorted you into your rooms with a kick and paid not the slightest heed to your ringing or requests, wouldn't it exasperate you?

If he started flirting with your wife, what would you do? If he aroused the feelings of another boarder who chased him through the halls with a gun, would you like the noise? And besides being bus driver and proprietor and hotel clerk, if he also tried to be the cook, what kind of "eats" do you think you would get? How long would you stay at a hotel such as that? Not very long. That is the plot of the MinA comedy of September 30th and is the reason why the boarders left.

hoodwinked Dexter that he thinks she is doing right.

Near the Dexter home there is another farmer, and at this house a family from the city are spending the summer. Little Amy Lee has taken quite a fancy to Carolyn and comes over to bid her go with them on a picnic on the morrow. Carolyn has just been sent to the well for water, and Mrs. Dexter gives the girl a tentative promise that Carolyn can go. Carolyn has lavished the love of her lonesome heart on a dog, and the two are inseparable companions. The two girls are indulging in happy thoughts of the morrow, when the step-mother, angry because the girl is offered some of the pleasures of life, orders her in to finish her work. The dog follows Carolyn in and the step-mother kicks the dog. At this the long pent-up anger in the girl's heart bursts forth and she upbraids the step-mother. When Dexter comes home his wife tells him of her trouble with Carolyn in such a manner that she seems to be the injured party, and Carolyn is given a severe scolding by her father.

Carolyn's position in the household has become so unpleasant that she is desperate. One day she receives a letter from Amy Lee in the city, and, after another quarrel, resolves to go to Amy Lee. Carolyn is welcomed by the Lees, and is introduced to a Miss Crompton, a friend, who, after hearing the pitiful story of the young girl, offers her a home with her.

In the years that pass, Carolyn becomes greatly attached to Miss Crompton. Another joy has come into her life in the shape of a young man, who is paying Carolyn lover's attentions. Dexter, meanwhile, has learned that his wife is the cause of the family eruption, and when he is informed by an attorney that his daughter is the heir to a small fortune left by an uncle, he upbraids her, for, now that his daughter is gone, they are not able to enjoy the money. They locate Carolyn, and Mrs. Dexter tries to win her back. But Carolyn has found consummate happiness with her "third mother," and refuses to go home.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURES.

THE BROKEN COIN (Episode No. 15, "The Deluge"—Two Parts—Sept. 26).—Count Frederick and Kitty lead the way to the dungeon, followed by King Michael, to escape from Count Sachio and his army, who, at that moment, were charging the outside of the palace. Kitty and Count Frederick finally succeed in finding a hiding place in the dungeon. On the outside of the palace Count Sachio and his men, after trying vainly to gain an entrance, finally decide to send a small army of men to look about the palace and find an entrance to Kitty's hiding place. At the front of the palace Count Sachio and his men succeed in getting into the palace and start in search of Count Frederick and Kitty. In the dungeon Frederick, Kitty and the frightened King, knowing it is useless to fight, wait for them to batter down the door, just as Sachio's men on the outside succeed in gaining an entrance through the window. Surrounded on all sides, Kitty and Count Frederick look at one another hopelessly. Count Frederick sees in a corner an old wheel used in former days to torture the prisoners of the palace. Quickly whispering to Kitty to hold their attention, he sneaks to the old wheel and turns it on, and before the others have time to see what has happened they find the water slowly rising above their knees. Count Sachio succeeds in getting to his king and is given instructions to accept a treaty of peace from Count Frederick if he will agree to one. After much trouble Frederick acquiesces and shuts off the water. King Phillip and his men rush from Gretzhoffen.

Kitty and Count Frederick after helping King Michael to the upper section of the palace, start to roam over the palace, joined by the prime minister. They plan to remodel it. As the prime minister leaves them Count Frederick starts to thank her for her help in the last few days. Kitty at first smiles, then thinks of the part of the broken coin yet to be found and leaves the palace. About to leave the torture chambers, Count Sachio finds on the floor a charred piece of script. Upon translating it he finds there is half of it missing. After studying it carefully he learns from the portion he has that a king had been abducted. Realizing its importance, he searches for the other half, but, hearing footsteps, gives up the search and makes his escape from the palace and Gretzhoffen.

On the outside of the palace Kitty hears a rustling in the bushes near her. She spies Count Sachio. Following him, she sees him drop a charred piece of paper. Thinking that it may be of some importance, she picks it up and follows Sachio further. She sees him stop and return in her direction. Thinking it must be the paper he is after, she quickly hides in the bushes. In the meantime, Sachio is missed at the palace of Gretzhoffen and a small body of soldiers is sent in search of him and arrive in time to help Sachio search for the missing document. Furious over his loss, he is about to leave when he sees in the tree his missing document in the hands of his greatest enemy. Kitty Grey. Quickly calling his soldiers, they draw their guns and start to take her down from the tree as the episode ends.

Two-Faced Bill, one of the "cappers" of the renowned Lady Baffles, is working around the station and on seeing the box becomes suspicious. He sees the note and at once get's out his telegraph instrument and, climbing a pole, begins to send out a call to the Lady Baffles. She learns that the ore has arrived. The wires are cut in on the dispatcher's board, however, and Nellie hears the code message. She realizes something is up and calls Detective Duck. By a clever arrangement of semaphore signals he learns of the crooks' machinations.

Now in the detective's office is the sheriff, who is belittling the famous sleuth's work. He receives the "S. O. S." message and quickly throwing a switch sends out a stream of electricity which knocks Phil off the post and gives Baffles an awful shock. Then, in one of his remarkably quick changes, there appears in the office a rube with a carpet-bag. He puts the sheriff in a barrel and joins him. The barrel rolls out and finally stops near the railroad. The sheriff leaves to gather his posse, while the rube wanders out and falls into the clutches of Phil, who forces him to steal the box and tie the dispatcher. They then make their escape. The sheriff is trying meanwhile to land the crooks, but in vain. The two join Lady Baffles and the rube is kicked aside, his grip thrown after him, and Phil and Baffles escape in a wagon. The box jolts off and when the two return in search of it they find the rube asleep on the box. He is again kicked off and they escape. The sheriff and his posse come upon the rube and take him into custody. The handcuffs are put on him, but the rube makes a quick pass and the handcuffs turn into a writhing snake. This is too much for the sheriff and he turns him loose.

They find the trail of the bandits and follow them to the waters' edge. The sheriff's party return to the rube and decide to take him. The rube takes off his disguise and stands forth—Detective Duck. The sheriff gives him the ha-ha, but his tune changes when Duck opens the grip and the ore begins tumbling out. He is forced to acknowledge the mightiness of Duck. Far out on the seas Baffles opens the box and finds a pair of oars with a sarcastic note from Duck.

While he is questioning her a lady friend of Mrs. Goody's comes to call on her. They all adjourn to the dining room, the lady caller leaving her hat and boa on the hatrack in the hall. John in the meantime has arisen, and, in looking through the morning papers, reads an account of a horrible murder committed the night before. He believes that he committed the crime, and is overcome with horror.

On his way from the bedroom he sees the hat and boa on the hat-rack, and, thinking they belong to his murdered victim, placed there by himself he nearly collapses. The wife, finding a strange man in the bedroom, calls in the policeman, who arrests the whole lot of them. John has given his wife a note confessing himself a murderer. During her hearing at the station house the note is found and read by the sergeant, who immediately gives John the "third degree." John confesses everything he thinks he has done and shows the sergeant the newspaper. The latter, on looking at the date finds the paper to be a year old. George and Tom are partners and pearl divers. George has become discouraged over their ill luck, when he receives a letter from a business man whose life he saved the summer before, offering him a position. Leonora reads of this in the newspapers and calls George's attention to the fact that George is from the same town.

They plan to gain possession of the rare pearl. Leonora influences George to visit his former partner and endeavor to gain possession of the jewel. Leonora accompanies him, but when she sees Tom at once falls in love with him, and later, when Tom rescues her from the surf, she quits the game and tries to win Tom, enraging George, whose life she has ruined. In revenge George attempts to throw her over the cliff, but Leonora had armed herself and in the struggle kills him. George falls over the cliff and his body is found. As Tom has had a row with George some time before, the evidence points to Tom as the murderer. His sister pleads with Leonora to save her brother, and Leonora, in love with Tom, frees him by confessing to the murder. Tom is released and she is arrested for the murder. She is released when she pleads that she killed George in self-defense. ## BIG U.

THE SHERIFF OF RED ROCK GULCH (Two parts—Sept. 30).—The cast: Murdock MacQuarrie, Arthur Moon, Edna Payne, Jane Aubrey, Henry Alrich.

Bill Borden and "Two-Gun" Smith love the same girl. She chooses Smith. He subsequently gets into a poker game and is caught cheating. In the melee he shoots his opponent. The vigilantes take his trail under the leadership of Bill Borden. "Two-Gun" flees to his cabin, grabs a few belongings and deserts his wife and baby boy. The vigilantes lose him and on going to his cabin find his wife dying. Bill Borden takes the baby and decides to raise it.

Twenty years elapse. The boy has grown to be a hearty young man and idolizes Bill, his supposed father. They prospect in the hills and streams for gold. One day the boy, Jack, discovers a rich claim, and there is a gold rush to the region. Among those who come is "Two-Gun" Smith under the alias of "Chalky" Dawson, so named on account of his white face and hair. He at once proceeds to intimidate every one by his gun play. Jack is in love with a little Eastern girl and they plan to get married when Jack sells his mine. Bill seems to recognize "Chalky," but can't place him because of his changed appearance.

Jack meets "Chalky" and is inveigled into a card game. He loses everything and eventually puts up his claims, which he loses. The boy tells Bill what he has done and also the girl. She goes to "Chalky" and begs him to restore Jack's claim. He seizes her and locks the door. Borden goes to "Chalky's" cabin with a gun to demand Jack's claim. The girl is concealed in another room when Borden arrives. Borden demands Jack's claim, but "Chalky" stands him off and also says that "no lead will ever croak him." He draws, but Borden shoots out the light and there is a duel in the dark. Jack hears the shots and hurries to the cabin. He lights the lamp as Borden strikes "Chalky" with his revolver. "Chalky" drops. The girl screams and Jack rushes into the room to rescue her. "Chalky" is recognized now by Borden, who tells him Jack is his son. He restores the claim and dies. Jack and the girl come in and Borden resolves that the secret of Jack's father shall never be revealed .

NESTOR.

SNATCHED FROM THE ALTAR (Sept. 27).—The cast: Eddie Lyons, Elsie Greeson, Harry Rattenberry and Helen Wright.

It is the day before their wedding and the boy and the girl are in a mad dream of happiness. Eddie tells his girl's father and mother that as the boys are rigging up a party for him that night, they won't be able to see him at the girl's home before next day. Now at Eddie's boarding house lives an old maid. She has never been able to catch a man and her only companion is a parrot. The landlady has fixed up a big wedding cake for the celebration and the old maid's longing for a mate is intensified by the festive air of matrimony in the air. The cake is cut amid joyful celebrations and the old maid sits beside the groom and in her exuberance embraces him.

That night was a glorious night for Eddie. In his joy he pulls out the license and shows the boys. Eddie, being the guest of honor, is the first to succumb to the libations, and his pal gets a great idea for a joke. Calling to their aid a movie actor near by, they dress him up as a minister and, getting Eddie in the old maid's room, insist that, as he is found in her room, he must marry her. In his maudlin condition Eddie says "he should worry," and the fake marriage is pulled off. The girl has received many presents and her friends begin to assemble on the next day for the ceremony. There is some worry because Eddie has not shown up, but they think he will be at the church, so all set out.

In the meantime Eddie has been having some time. Awakening sober, he is told of the ceremony, and when he won't believe, is shown the license filled out. He groans in misery, while the guests in the house come to congratulate the old maid. The old maid takes him out for an airing and to show him off to her friends. He is powerless to resist and accompanies her. At the church Eddie's absence is distressing and some of the boys go out to find him. They see him with the old maid. They drag him off, the old maid following, and bring him to the church. Elsie, his bride, throws her arms about him, just as the old maid runs up and tells of the ceremony. The girl faints. Eddie tries to break away, but his pal catches him and tells of the fake ceremony. Breaking away, he catches the girl, explains all and everything ends happily.

L-KO.

MARRIED ON CREDIT (Sept. 29).—The cast: Billie Ritchie, Louise Orth and Harry Bergman.

The minister wanted cash down for performing the ceremony, so Billie didn't get married. He left the bride waiting and went out to raise some "mazuma." During his absence a poor but nervy guy stepped in and tried to grab the bride, but the minister showed caution and demanded a fee.

This individual didn't have it either, and he was forced to go out just as the bride's father was coming in. Meanwhile Billie had contrived to get hold of a purse and was returning when he met the out-going individual, who relieved him of it. Billie retrieved the purse, but this didn't help him, for when he got back to the bride her father was there, and he had a decided aversion to Billie.

The polite thing was to leave, which Billie did. Father also left and so did a squad of cops who were careless with their guns. Bill went down a man-hole, father did likewise, the individual was also present, and the cops were also on hand. How they all got out no one knows except the individual, and he was in no condition to tell.

"A MORTGAGE ON HIS DAUGHTER (Oct. 3).—The cast: Peggy Pearce, Hank Mann and Kitty Howe.

Hank held a mortgage against father for ten glasses of beer which Hank said he would cancel provided father gave him his daughter in marriage. Father said he would, but he had forgotten another mortgage of twelve glasses of beer which another gentleman had on him, and when Hank came to claim his bride the other gentleman was marrying her.

Hank caused such a commotion at the wedding that no one got married. The bride felt very cold towards Hank, and Hank resolved to asphyxiate himself. He compromised on poison, but through an unfortunate mistake, father drank more than Hank did.

Both Hank and father then imagine they heard the spirits singing, and tried to absorb all the milk on a milk wagon as an emetic. The milkman objected, the nurses and doctors thought their victims were going to get away, and some cops tried to stop every one else. The result was that the ambulance went over a cliff with a lot of sick people, and Hank and father discovered that they had not taken poison at all. Furthermore, there was no wedding, and the two prospective grooms lost their mortgages.

BISON.

THE GHOST WAGON (Three Parts—Oct. 2).—The cast: Edythe Sterling, A. Edmundson, Sherman Bainbridge, Warren Ellsworth, Rex Roselli.

Bad Pete, who passes the cabin in the mountains wherein live Bara and Old Fleming, determines to stop for food. Bara objects, but Old Fleming invites him in. When Old Fleming leaves the room for a moment, Bad Pete makes advances to Bara, who stabs him with a table knife. Pete leaves upon Fleming's return and goes to the settlement of Red Wolf, where he meets Tom and Jeff, who buy him a drink or two and tell him of a deserted silver mine. As Bara is returning that night from a tramp through the woods, she passes the mine, and, hearing voices inside, enters. She is driving the men—Pete, Tom and Jeff—out, when, Fleming, awakened from his doze by the noise approaches with a gun. He is knocked motionless by Tom. Pete rejoins the camp of the Yaquis while Tom and Pete start for the settlement. On the way they are horrified, for they see "The Ghost Wagon." Paralyzed with fright, Tom and Jeff rush to the saloon and tell the bartender, who says that what they saw is a sure sign of death. Tom and Jeff think of Fleming's death, but say nothing.

A month elapses and the beautiful offices of Fairchild & Gould, Silver Mine Investment Company, are shown. Young David Fairchild, just returned from college, informs his indulgent father he is anxious to get to work Tom and Jeff are shown in, and, although the elder Fairchild does not know the men, he listens to their proposition. They show him specimens of silver they had taken from the mine in the mountain and say that they will give him a half interest in the mine if he will work it. David is interested and asks to go with the men and investigate the matter. His father consents. Later, David arrives in Red Wolf, and is shown to a shabby bedroom over the saloon. He determines to go out and explore for himself, not seeing Tom and Jeff in sight. He comes upon Bara seated beside old Fleming's grave. David inquires about the grave. Bara tells him that it is the grave of the only father and mother she has ever known. Drawn to him, she tells him of her parents coming there in a prairie schooner. Bara's father drives while her mother holds Bara, as a baby in her arms. Old Fleming and others are on horseback. They are attacked by a band of Yaquis and all are killed but Old Fleming and Bara. Bara ends up by telling him there is a story that "The Ghost Wagon" still runs in the mountains.

David reaches for her hand as Jeff, Tom and Pete come in sight. When Bara sees David talk to the men she turns on him in a fury, saying he, too, is one of their breed. She rushes out and Pete, unnoticed, follows her. He attacks the girl and David seeing him starts after him. Bara escapes and David and Pete have a fight in which Pete is beaten. That night Pete, half drunk with "fire water," incites the Yaquis, who have also shared the whiskey, to a raid on the settlement. David, watching from his bedroom window, thinks of Bara, and determines to rescue her. He grabs his gun and jumps from the window, making his way cautiously along the buildings.

Pete, bent on mudrer, finds David's bedroom deserted and calls his men to follow him. David, meanwhile, attacks a lone Indian on the outskirts of the settlement, takes his horse and rides toward Bara's shack, Pete following closely with the drunken Yaquis. David arrives at the shack and Bara attempts to repulse him. David picks her up and carries her out to his horse and rides away. After a chase, David and Bara seek safety behind a rock near the roadside. Their guns are empty and, knowing death is inevitable, they cling to one another. The Yaquis come up and surround the two. Pete dismounts and crawls toward them.

The posse of Red Wolf are seen in the distance. Pete determines to kill Bara and David. As he raises his gun "The Ghost Wagon" is seen speeding by, and a spurt of flame comes from old Fleming's upraised gun. Pete falls dead, and when the amazed Bara and David see the dead man, Bara says her father's spirit has saved them. Meanwhile the posse, coming up, gives chase to the Yaquis and captures and kills them. Bara and David, in each other's arms, turn and see "The Ghost Wagon" going across the mountain trail.

JOKER.

AN INNOCENT VILLAIN (Oct. 2).—The cast: Robbie Vernon, Edith Payne, Margaret Whistler, Eddie Boland.

Mr. Jinks and his wife have a row over the biscuits, which are hard. When Jinks drops one on his toe he leaves in anger. Stopping in the yard for a flower, Jinks sees a thief snatch a purse from a girl and pursues him. The girl calls for help and when the cop arrives on the scene the thief has thrown Jinks down and put the purse in his hand and escaped. Jinks is taken for a gentleman partner of the crook and escorted to the station. Unable to get off, he calls his wife on the phone and tells her that he has to be absent on business for thirty days. She decides it is too lonesome at the house and puts out a sign "For Rent" and goes to her mother's.

A bunch of college girls out for a good time see the sign for rent and arrange to take the house. Mrs. Jinks turns everything over to them and sets out for her mother's. Mrs. Jinks' mother meanwhile has decided that she will visit the young pair and sets out. The girls plan a big celebration in honor of their new home and are busy opening bundles getting the big feast ready. In one of the baskets a crab gets out and they put it in the bath-tub for convenience. The real purse snatcher has been caught and when he is thrown in the cell with Jinks the latter chokes him and forces him to confess the other robbery. Jinks thus gains his liberty and sneaks home. Tired and weary, he goes to his room and puts on his pajamas and goes to the bathroom for a cooling plunge. His first attempt results in getting "bit" by the crab and he leaves hollering. The girls are having a real "pajama" party and hear the noise. They think he is a burglar and chase him into a closet, where the cop, who has been called, finds him. Explanations follow and the girls invite Jinks to partake of the feast.

At this inopportune moment the mother-in-law arrives and "starts something." The girls take refuge in safety under the table, while Jinks is spanked by his irate mother-in-law. Mrs. Jinks, finding nobody home at her mother's, returns home and comes in during the ensuing performance. The mother tells her of finding Jinks in company with the girl in "undress uniform," but after a lengthy exchange of confidences the matter is straightened out to the satisfaction of all.

BROADWAY UNIVERSAL FEATURE.

JUDGE NOT; OR THE WOMAN OF MONA DIGGINGS (Six Parts—Sept. 27).—The cast: Harry Carey, Harry Carter, Marc Robbins and Julia Dean.

Through the death of her father, Molly Hanlon, of Mona Diggings, is left destitute. Leaving the general store, where she makes an unsuccessful attempt to get credit, she is insulted by a drunken cowboy, but is befriended by Lee Kirk, a gambler, who, after Molly has left for her shack, learns that she was refused credit, whereupon he purchases and sends to her a basketful of food. When she empties the basket she finds a note from Kirk proposing marriage. But Kirk is not truthful and when he receives Molly's acceptance, he has a false wedding performed. Sometime later to Mona diggings comes Miles, the carousing son of Judge Rand, who fled from his father palatial home in the East on account of a reproof his father had administered to him for his drinking habits. Miles visits the gambling joint owned by Kirk and is rebuked by the proprietor for his amorous glances at Molly. Miles resents and a fight is started, in which he is shot by one of Kirk's underlings. When he has recuperated, Miles begins to dissipate again, and in gambling with Kirk, he loses all. He is finally persuaded by Molly to go back East, where he finally becomes district attorney.

Meanwhile, Molly has learned that her marriage with Kirk was not legal, and the gambling joint is later set afire, following a fight. Molly escapes with the money, and believing that Kirk as well as the rest of the men has perished, she leaves for the East to look up Miles. In the city, Miles has renewed his friendship with June Markworth, daughter of an old friend of his father. Molly, arriving in the city, goes to a fashionable hotel, and deposits her money—$70,000 in all—according to the posted rules of the establishment in its safe. Subsequently she learns of Miles' success as a district attorney, and having now become thoroughly familiar with city manners and modes of dress and having made careful investments which enable her to live in luxury, she calls upon Miles at his office. Their old acquaintance is renewed, and when Molly tells him that Kirk is dead he shows greater interest in her, and decides to introduce her into society. The attention Miles is bestowing upon Molly is called to his father's attention by Mr. Markworth, who sometime ago had come to an understanding with the former that the families be linked together by the marriage of their respective children. After being admonished by his father to have nothing more to do with the strange woman, Miles decides to introduce his parent to Molly. The Judge is very much disappointed upon meeting the girl, and is completely astounded when Miles tells him that Molly is his promised wife.

Kirk escaped the fire and, owing to the antagonism existing in Mona Diggings, comes East. He learns the whereabouts of Molly through a newspaper article. Molly is almost paralyzed at the sigh of Kirk, who promise to refrain from making public her past relations with him for the hush money that she gives him. Fearing that she will injure the career of Miles, she calls up the Judge, who had previously asked her to give up his son and to which request she refused to listen, saying that she has reconsidered his pleadings and that she should like to see Miles that evening. Molly, by a prearrangement, has one of her other suitors call upon her and when Miles arrives he is so shocked by her apparent carousing with another man that he leaves in disgust. She then dismisses the man, for it was only a ruse to break with Miles and shortly afterward Kirk puts in an appearance via the window. She refuses his demand for more money, and in a fight that follows she secures his gun and kills him. Miles attends the coroner's inquest, learns the truth of Kirk's return, and for the first time he doubts Molly. Following a mental struggle with himself, Miles decides to defend Molly. prosecuting attorney has made a plea to the jury for a verdict of first degree murder, Miles puts forth a strong argument for acquittal. He wins, and the young people are not only brought together, but they win the consent of Judge Rand to marry.

UNDER SOUTHERN SKIES (Five Parts—Sept. 20).—The cast includes Mary Fuller, Charles Ogle, Clara Byers, Bert Bushy, Milton Sills, William Heidloff, John Ridgway, Paul Panzer, Marie Shotwell, Mary Moore, Harry Blakemore, Nellie Slattery, Margaret Wall and Marie Weirman.

Lelia Crofton, although she knows there is some mystery concerning her mother, whom she has not seen for years, and about whom she has made many unsuccessful inquiries to her father, Major Crofton, and to her Aunt Doshey, determines that, inasmuch as her eighteenth birthday is now being celebrated on her father's vast plantation in Louisiana, that she shall insist upon her parent revealing the secret surrounding the disappearance of her mother. Although the Major is pressed hard to tell, he again refuses but in a vision he sees how, years ago—it is the year 1860 now—he lived happily with his wife and baby girl in Savannah, when their happiness is blighted by the elopement of his wife with a young man who had been importuning her to flee with him. Unnerved by the attendant humiliation and desiring to keep the mother's indiscretion from his daughter, the Major goes to Louisiana, where he lives on a big plantation. As the party is in progress Lelia's mother, who years ago had been deserted by her lover, arrives at the Crofton estate and is seen by Steve Daubeney, a suitor who has been rejected by Lelia in favor of Burleigh Mayor. She is brought to the cabin of Aunt Doshey, who recognizes her.

Lelia gives a Hallowe'en party, and invites Steve, who has returned from Savannah. He, resolving to make Lelia his wife, tells her that while he was in Savannah he discovered that her mother is not dead and that he has learned all about her, but that if she will marry him he will keep the secret. Lelia agrees. Later, when everything is ready for the wedding Lelia declares that she will not marry Steve. Almost immediately after this utterance Lelia's mother, who has been looking in the window to see her daughter marry, rushes into the house and falls at the feet of Lelia, pleading for forgiveness. In answer to Lelia's request as to who the woman is, Major Crofton tells her that "she is your mother." The Major is greatly surprised at hearing his daughter remark that she is a white woman and asks her who told her that she wasn't. In answer to her father's request, Lelia declares that Steve informed her, promising to keep the secret if she would marry him. Before any one can lay his hands on Steve he disappears, and Burleigh Mayor, whom Lelia really loves, comforts her. They later become engaged.

Fort Sumter is fired upon. Steve is made a private while Burleigh is given an officer's position. Steve, who has an intense hatred for Burleigh, has a gang of toughs capture the officer with the intention of subjecting him to the tortures of being tarred and feathered. Anner Lizer has witnessed the abduction and informs Lelia, who, after searching the woods for her sweetheart, discovers him tied to a tree. While the attention of the gang is engaged in preparing the tar, she releases Burleigh, but before they have gone any distance Steve sees them. He orders the gang to go in pursuit and the lovers, being cornered in the middle of a bridge by a section of the gang at each end, jump over and swim ashore. The gang, frightened, retreat. Although Burleigh is Steve's superior officer, the former's good nature will not permit him to punish the culprit. Before the armies leave for the front, Lelia and Burleigh are married and just as the minister is ending the ceremony, which is taking place on the lawn in front of the Crofton home, Steve, who had determined that Burleigh shall not marry Lelia, raises his gun in his place of concealment to kill the officer when a bullet from the gun of a member of the squad, who had proclaimed Steve a deserter and had gone after him, kills the vindictive man. After the war the Major and his wife are seen seated on the veranda of his home with Lelia and Burleigh, who have just returned from their belated honeymoon.

THE HOUSE WITH NOBODY IN IT (Three Parts—Sept. 22).—The cast: Ivy Troutman, James Levering, Bradley Barker, Frank Whitson and Charles U. Travis.

Martha, the old nurse, in the employ of Donald Bryce, a wealthy young artist, believes the small happenings in life foreshadow important events to come. Muriel Allen, the daughter of the wealthy William Allen, is much annoyed by the attentions of Leonard Brandon, who really is in love with the fortune he knows will come to her on her father's death. Martha serves Donald his afternoon tea, and when removing the dishes calls attention to the tea leaves, informing him they mean he is to meet a beautiful girl and be very happy. Muriel has seen Donald painting in his garden, and by chance they meet at a week-end party in the country. It is love at first sight, and before retiring that night, they are engaged. The next day, Muriel receives a telegram from Brandon, that her father is seriously ill, and arriving home with Donald, learns that her father died. On his death-bed William Allen tells the doctor that his wife died in the Stanhope County Insane Asylum, also that Muriel is to inherit his wealth.

Some weeks later, Brandon again requests Muriel to marry him, but is told that she is engaged to Donald Bryce. Donald calls on his fiancee, and Brandon, who happens to be present, wishes him luck with insanity in the family. Muriel is shocked to hear this, but the doctor has to confirm Brandon's remark. Muriel thereupon breaks her engagement. The news of what killed her mother so unnerved Muriel that the doctor gives her a morphine tablet. Upon arriving home, Donald is served with tea, and Martha again reads signs in the tea leaves, that he is ultimately to have happiness, but with a great deal of torture before obtaining it. Muriel tells her housekeeper, she is going away and to close up the house; she also writes, informing Donald of her plan.

Arriving in the city, Muriel obtains employment in a department store. Brandon, believing there is great wealth in the Allen house, breaks into it, but is unable to locate the supposed money. To further embarrass Muriel, he has a detective agency in the city watch her, and receiving word that they have discovered her whereabouts, he calls at the store, in which she is employed and induces the manager to discharge her. Brandon calls upon her, but is again repulsed. Looking into the mirror, she realizes she is not the pretty girl of a few months ago, and, although tempted to take a tablet, she fights it off, but the habit is too strong and she succumbs. Before the tablet takes its full effect, she has a vision and is being drawn toward Brandon, when just about to fall into her arms, Brandon disappears and there stands a little imp, who tells her if she will continue in her bad habits, he will see that she is made beautiful again. Coming to her senses, she throws herself on her bed, and sleeps. Another vision appears to her in the form of angels. Realizing that they are far superior to the people in her former vision, she awakens and resolves never to use a drug again. The next day she goes to the Stanhope County Asylum, and, although seeing the record of her mother's death, promises the superintendent that she will go back to her old home, on his assurance that she shows no sign of insanity.

Brandon again searches the home, but without result, and is surprised in his work by the return of Muriel. Donald decides to paint the Allen home, and calls his picture "The House With Nobody in It." While sketching the house, a thunder storm comes up, and, taking refuge on the porch, he hears a struggle inside.

He sees Brandon struggling with Muriel and, in a fierce struggle, overcomes Brandon, who falls by the fireplace. A bolt of lightning comes down the chimney, killing Brandon, also knocking away the bricks near the fireplace, disclosing the hidden wealth of William Allen. On top of the box containing the money, is a letter to Muriel, informing her that she was found on their doorstep when but a mere babe. Realizing that it was not her own mother who died in the insane asylum, she readily agrees to become the wife of Donald Bryce.

THE FOOL'S HEART (Two Parts—Oct. 1).—The cast: Norbert Myles, Edna Payne, Frank Hall, Fred Hearne, Marvelle Spencer, Hal Wilson and Henry Aldrich.

Walter Keough, a stock gambler, also interested in gold mines, has been losing heavily. He is a heartless fool, whose chief characteristic is cunning. The beautiful Clara Clayton, his secretary, is, in truth, wasting her love on a worthless man, but in his own way, he loves her too. Keough is driven to borrow $5,000 from his partner, Van Atta, and signs an I. O. U. for the money. On his way back from the transaction he meets Gibson, a rich ranch owner and lucky at mining. The bully rouses Keough's jealousy. A thought passes through his mind, which horrifies him at first. Gibson, watching Keough's face, reads that the latter has murder in his heart, but also recognizing that Keough is a coward, dares him to carry out his desire. This only strengthens Keough's purpose.

The next day, Keough learns of more reverses. Miss Clayton advises him to rest and to forget his troubles. She calls up Van Atta's home, and learns that the master has gone away to look after some mining property, and that the only one in the house is Snowball, the maid, who is also going away that day. So the gambler's secretary advises Keough to go to Van Atta's house, where he can be quiet. Keough leaves shortly after. Keough, with murder in his heart, reaches the road along which Gibson, with his most recent "haul" will pass. The gambler succeeds in his foul plot, robs the body and drags it into the woods. Then he taps the wires, and phones to Miss Clayton, pretending that he is at Van Atta's house, and that he is about to retire. Meanwhile, Tait, a thief, has entered Van Atta's house. Earlier than he was expected, Van Atta returns from the mine, where he has struck it rich, intending to announce the good news to his partner as soon as possible. He enters the study, where Tait is plundering, intent on telephoning Keough. As he picks up the phone, he notices that the table has been tampered with. At that moment, the thief, seeing that he is discovered, jumps upon the mine owner, and strangles him.

Terrified at the sudden interruption on the telephone and her inability to reach Van Atta's house again, Miss Clayton asks the sheriff to investigate. Tait helps himself to Van Atta's pocketbook, in which he finds Keough's I. O. U. for $5,000. Just then Keough arrives at the house and enters. The thief escapes, unnoticed, through the window. As Van Atta's partner lights the kitchen lamp, Tait determines to enter the house as a stranger. He is welcomed in by Keough, who thinks that this will help prove his alibi, if necessary. He is invited to remain for supper, and as Keough goes out for wood, the murderer runs to the study, takes the I. O. U. and places it in Keough's coat, hanging in the kitchen. When Tait is about to leave, Keough sends him to Gibson's house, thus hoping to avert suspicion for the rancher's murder from himself. Later, the sheriff arrives. Finding Keough alone, they ask him if any one else has been there. He says there has not. The officers decide to investigate. The three enter Van Atta's study. When Keough looks down upon the upturned face of his partner, the shock, coupled with the sense of his own guilt, overcomes him, and he falls dead over the body.

MOTHER'S BUSY DAY (Oct. 5).—The cast: Neva Gerber, Webster Campbell, Rae Berger, Lucille Ward, Cupie Cavens and William Carroll.

Dad is a flirt, and mother, for this reason, keeps an ever-watchful eye. The family goes to the beach for a day's outing. Bobby first nearly kills a man by jumping on his stomach and is severely punished. He then looks for other fields to conquer. Strolling to a secluded spot on the pier, he finds a barrel, and gets an idea. He pushes the barrel into the water, throws his hat near the spot where the barrel sank, shouts for help and then hides under a bench, viewing the excitement he has caused. Mother finally discovers the culprit and administers another whipping. She rushes him to where she and father have been sitting and insists that he stay there with them. He is good as long as possible, likewise father.

A young lady chanced along and stands near the sheltering umbrella. Bobby and dad discover the trim foot and ankle. Trouble ensues. Bobby is again punished, but not until he has divulged dad's duplicity as well. Mother decides that a governess is the only cure for Bobby, and dad chuckles inwardly at the prospect. Jimmy wires that he is returning, and bringing home a pleasant surprise. He leaves his surprise (his bride) at the home of her aunt until a welcome can be assured. Jimmy learns of the governess idea, and decides to work Mary in as Bobby's caretaker. The scheme works out admirably until both dad and Jimmy are caught showering her with attentions. A compromising situation arises and causes mother to attempt to discharge the governess, when Jimmy makes known the fact that she is his surprise, and the story has a happy ending.

CURING FATHER (Oct. 9).—The cast: Rae Berger, Nan Christie and John Sheehan.

John, Nellie's father, suffers with dyspepsia. Nellie suffers with heart trouble—Bob being the cause. Bob proposes, is accepted, and then asks John. Suffering an attack, John refuses. Nellie tells Bob that it is only her father's dyspepsia that makes him so irritable, and if they could cure him it would be O. K. Bob has read an article saying that most dyspepsia was only imagination and that if the patient can be put to work and starved until really hungry, a cure could be effected. Disguised as a doctor, Bob calls on father. He hold out so much hope for recovery that John, in a moment of joy at the prospect of a cure, promises Nellie that the first day he eats a square meal she can marry Bob.

Still disguised as the doctor, Bob tells John that he must go to his sanitarium in the country for a time. John decides to go. Bob hatches up a plot with a friend to furnish his car and go as chauffeur. About five miles from the sanitarium they have a pre-arranged break-down. They all load up and start to walk. John nearly dies from fatigue, and rages when he finds the sanitarium is but a small cottage far out in the country. John is made a prisoner and fed on bread and water, while the others indulge in feasts. A great turkey dinner is prepared and they all sit down to eat. John smells the delicious odor up in his attic room. A lunatic at large arrives and frightens the diners away. He then sits down to eat. In desperation John breaks out and comes down. At first he is afraid of the lunatic, but, finding him a very congenial person, John sits down and eats a hearty meal. Nellie, Bob and the chauffeur return with the asylum guards and catch John at a hearty meal. Explanations occur and John, removing his disguise, insists on John fulfilling his promise.

THE ORIENTAL SPASM (Oct. 1).—The cast: George Ovey, Louis Fitzroy, Jefferson Osborne, Gordon MacGregor, Goldie Colwell.

Trouble ensues when Jerry is surrounded by his enigma—the police—and in his haste to evade their clutches he bumps into a peddler carrying a tray of phony jewelry, which, with the onslaught, is scattered on the ground. One of the jewels appeals to Jerry and he pockets it, not knowing that its possession forebodes trouble. Alone, he examines the acquisition. While gloating over his sudden wealth two Hindoos appear suddenly before him. They inform Jerry that the jewel he has had been stolen from an idol in their temple and that they have been requisitioned to find the possessor, and return him with the jewel to India, where the owner was to be made a slave.

Not being able to compromise the trouble, Jerry is carried to India, where he is taken before the Royal Kazabo, who orders him punished. Jerry, however, anticipates punishment and turns the tables by punishing the Hindoos. Thus he gets out of one room but in doing so he rushes into another occupied by the members of the Kazabo's harem and his favorite wife. To the latter Jerry is at one attracted. This attraction is Jerry's undoing for he spends too much time with her and the Kazabo and his guards are given time to revive. They start on Jerry's trail, capture him and throw him into jail where he has an exciting time. But he neatly escapes and in a row boat starts back for the good old U. S. A.

THANHOUSER.

THE MIRACLE (Sept. 26).—The cast: Eleanor Spaulding, Ethel Jewett, Tulla Hough.

It was with the simple abiding faith of a child that old Annie, shy, crippled and a recluse, had prayed for many years that she might be healed. Every day, rain or shine, she went to a little roadside shrine where her prayers to her patron saint were sent up, but though Annie was getting old she could see no change in her condition. So badly was she crippled and bent, so shy was she, and so sensitive about telling anything about herself, that the people of the village did not understand her. Instead of the loving big-hearted woman whose one big love in life was for children, they believed her a crabbed old recluse who might hurt the children if they were allowed near her, and the children themselves were taught to run and hide from "the old witch" as many called her.

That was what hurt the tender-hearted old Annie more than anything else, for she would have been perfectly happy just to have been "granny" to the youngsters of the village. It was therefore more wonderful when she finally won the love of one little girl, who, in return for the presents Annie laid at her feet, brought her berries and wild flowers. On one of her regular daily visits to her shrine, the old woman was more discouraged than ever, for all the little ones had quit their games at her approach and fled. She stood up from her prayers, her old eyes filled with tears, as she peered out over the landscape. What she saw, though, brought her bent old body erect and she tried to run on her crutches. It was the body of the one little creature in all the world who loved her that old Annie had seen, and that little one lay still and helpless across a railroad track with her foot helplessly caught in a frog of a track. Far off, Annie could see the smoke from the train that was approaching fast.

Once more she tried to go forward to the aid of the little one she loved, and once more she was helpless. Then she turned to her shrine in her despair. She flung out her arms, praying for a miracle. Old Annie turned once more to gaze out to where her loved one lay. She tried to take one step again. The miracle had happened—the little old lady's feet flew over the ground toward the railroad.

Just as the last tug had loosened the child's foot and both rescuer and rescued went tumbling down the embankment, the train that might have destroyed the little one flashed by. And it was this that the child's mother saw when she, too, reached the place believing her daughter crushed. Of course old Annie went home with mother and daughter. Both would have nothing else, for it was at that home, they said, that the little old lady would henceforth live. Still, for all the miracle of healing which made crutches a thing of the past, and a home with two loving souls, old Annie's cup of happiness was not quite full until one night when all the children of the village flocked around her and told her they wanted her to be their grandma.

GUSTAV GEBHARDT'S GUTTER BAND (Sept. 27).—The cast: Arthur Cunningham, Francis Keyes, Claude Cooper.

Gustav Gebhardt was very proud of his little three-piece gutter band. Audiences were generally appreciative, receipts were satisfactory, and furthermore Gustav was in love. The object of his affection was Apple Annie, a middle aged woman with a prosperous fruit business. Unknown to Gustav he had a rival in the bass horn player of his own gutter band. This man secretly hated his leader and hoped to supplant him in the widow's affection. One memorable Sunday his jealousy led him too far. The widow and Gustav went fishing, and the horn player, arrayed in a bathing suit, tracked them out on the water. When Gustav caught a large fish his rival dived under the water, grabbed the fish and smote his honored leader with it, knocking him into the water. This was followed by a terrific aquatic combat in which the two men participated. It ended with the defeat of the bass horn player and his ignominious discharge from the band.

The next morning the leader was treated to a surprise. The horn player was a Norwegian; the cornetist a Swede; while the man who handled the trombone came from Denmark. They united in a conspiracy, informed Gustav "We are neuter," and absolutely declined to play any longer with "a belligerent." Perhaps this would have been the end of the band had it not been for "Apple Annie." She remembered that it is impossible to play upon a wind instrument while watching another person suck a lemon. The "neuter" band soon had its troubles. Wherever they went they met children sucking lemons and pantomime music was all that they could play. In the end they humbly returned to their honored leader while the crafty horn player was thrown out into the world with the disgrace of having been discharged from Gustav Gebhardt's Gutter Band.

DAMAGED GOODS (American—Seven Parts—Oct. 4).—The cast: Richard Bennett, Adrienne Morrison, Maud Milton, Olive Templeton, Josephine Ditt, Jacqueline Moore, Florence Short, Lewis Bennison, John Steppling, William Bertram, George Ferguson.

George Dupont had always been a hardworking student while at college. He was graduated clean in mind and healthy in body and returned to the home of his mother, a wealthy widow, intent on practicing law. His simple mindedness and attractiveness made him an easy prey for women. He was seduced by Mrs. James Forsythe, an evil intentioned young married woman, and then got into difficulties with a seamstress, before his mother and aunt determined that he should marry Henriette Locke, the daughter of Senator Locke.

Shortly before his marriage, he was given a farewell dinner by his bachelor friends which was followed by a night of debauchery with a girl of the streets. Later on discovering an old school friend in a deformed and twisted beggar of the streets and learning that disease following upon a life in debauchery had changed the one time noted athlete into a degenerate specimen of humanity, George was seized with a dread lest he may have contracted the terrible disease. He purchased a scientific treatise on the subject and on comparing the symptoms described with symptoms which had appeared in him he realizes that his one night of fun had ended as he had little dreamed. Intent on suicide he goes to a park where he is rescued by the very girl of the streets with whom he had spent the night following the dinner given by his bachelor friends. She has been regenerated under the care of a noted specialist for whom she is now acting as a nurse. She tells George that he also can find relief. George goes to the specialist's office and is told that if he marries before the expiration of two years he will be a criminal in the eyes of the law. Although the specialist promises him a positive cure if he will follow his instructions carefully. George, dissatisfied after a few weeks' treatment, visits a quack, who gives him a prescription and guarantees a positive cure within three months. George, satisfied when the quack tells him that he is cured, marries Henriette. Later, when their child is born, the loathsome disease becomes evident in his progeny. He learns that the quack has done nothing to bring about his cure, and that he has been a criminal against society, by disregarding the instructions of the specialist. The horrible truth becomes known to his wife. Her father, broken-hearted at the disgrace upon himself, his daughter and her child, goes in search of Dupont. But the latter, realizing the shame he has heaped upon all those dear to him, does the only thing possible under the circumstances—commits suicide.

love with the family chauffeur. To break the infatuation, the father sends her to Europe to school. Before sailing, however, she informs the chauffeur, who resigns his position and books passage on the same ship. In mid-ocean, the ship is sent to the bottom during a terrific storm. The girl, the chauffeur and several passengers get away on a raft. One by one they die, until the captain, the girl and the chauffeur are the only ones left. The girl implores the captain to join the chauffeur and herself in marriage. The knot is tied. Then the captain dies.

The raft is finally washed ashore with the two occupants. Several days later the husband is killed by a wild animal. The following weeks, the girl widow, dying for want of food and drink is taken on board a passenger ship and later returned home. She tells of being cast away on the deserted island, but denies that the chauffeur was with her. Shortly after, her physical condition becomes such that she confides her secret in her elder sister. At her father's request, who knows nothing of his younger daughter's condition, the two girls go to an out of the way village, where the baby is born. It is placed in care of a farmer's wife to board.

Five years elapse. It is the younger sister's wedding day. As the ceremony is about to take place, a farmer appears with a little girl, announces that his wife can care for it no longer and disappears. Summing up the situation in a trice, the elder sister announces that she is the mother of the child. After the wedding, she is driven from the house by her irate father, taking the child with her. In the city she ekes out a living at sculpturing, her studio adjoining that of a young artist, who, in time, falls in love with her. The younger sister fails to keep her promise and claim her child.

The artist proposes to the elder sister, but she refuses to accept his proposal until the stigma has been lifted from her name. One day, the younger sister's husband, as a surprise, brings her to the studio to show her a portrait he is having painted of her. While there her child runs into the room in chase of a kitten. Immediately the mother leaps to her feet and rushes toward the child. But the latter leaps to the window sill and falls out. Uninjured, the child is brought back to the room. Then the younger sister confesses and tells why she refused to anounce her marriage to the chauffeur. "I feared my father's wrath," she declares. All is forgiven and shortly after the elder sister and the young artist are married.

MUSTANG.

MAN-AFRAID-OF-HIS-WARDROBE (Three Parts—Oct. 2).—The cast: Art Acord, E. Forrest Taylor, Anna Little, Lawrence Peyton.

James Montague, producer for the Titan Motion Picture Company, receives word from head office that they are sending out A. Lester Hale under contract for ten thousand dollars for ten pictures, to take Western leads, and is instructed to prepare for his arrival. A week later A. Lester arrives and is accompanied by a valet and a dozen large trunks. He is allotted a dressing room, but objects to the size of it, refusing to accept any other than the star's dressing room. Miss Manners, after a stormy interview with Montague, vacates her dressing room, stating that A. Lester Hale may be an actor, but if Montague casts him for a gentleman, he would have to do some rehearsing. Buck Parvin, extra man by force of circumstances, is filled with awe when Hale turns up in his cowboy outfit and is even more fascinated by his saddle.

Work commences on the first picture and Hale proves an utter failure. He refuses to ride through the brush for fear of scratching his saddle—he refuses to ride through the water for fear of getting wet, and commits the greatest of all crimes, of crossing in front of the camera during a scene. The first picture is completed and Montague waits with anxiety the report on the negative from head office. The report arrives, a curt telegram to the effect that A. Lester Hale is a scream on the screen, but that his contract is no joke, and it is up to Montague to fix it. Montague has an idea and with the aid of Buck Parvin arranges a little entertainment for Hale. That night while Montague writes a new scenario, Buck Parvin is mysteriously occupied with some revolver shells, a wax candle, and package of tacks.

The new picture is started. The first scene being located on the banks of the river, Montague explains to Hale that he, as leading man, must ride into the river and swim to the rescue of Miss Manners, who has been captured by the Indians and is a prisoner on the opposite bank. A. Lester Hale at first refuses, but at last consents to make the ride. Buck Parvin disappears and hides behind an adjacent tree. Hale's valet prepares with dry underclothes and a towel for Hale's ride from the river. The scene commences. Hale rides into the river, but when he finds his horse is swimming, gets frightened, and in his alarm falls off the horse into the water, where he clings desperately to the horse's neck. Buck Parvin takes a careful aim and shoots. With a wild scream of alarm, Hale lets go of the horse and disappears under the water, much to the amazement of the rest of the company, until Montague, realizing that he is on the point of drowning, rushes in and rescues him. Hale is revived, only to be told by Montague that the scene was a failure and that they must have a retake. Hale, driven to desperation, flatly refuses, and announces he will break his contract.

Buck Parvin, who has always longed for the beaver hat belonging to Hale, swims the river to rescue it and hides it in his shirt. Montague, who has been mystified over the shot fired by Buck, which was to have been a waxed wad, and has discovered the wad with a tack attached sticking to Hale's anatomy, accuses Buck of going outside of their bargain. Buck pretends innocence, and to hide his guilty feelings, produces the hat and tells Montague that he found it. Hale boards the train, swearing that he will never be induced to again work in pictures.

BREEZY BILL—OUTCAST (Two Parts—Oct. 8).—The cast: Jack Richardson, Helene Rosson, William Stowell and Dick Le Reno.

Breezy Bill, a western desperado and rustler, has a cabin in the mountains where he lives with Marta, a young girl, who supposes him to be her father. Marta dresses as a man and wears a mask when out, being known as "The Masked Rider." Breezy and his gang attempts to capture a bunch of horses. They are surprised by the herders. In a running fight the herders are driven off, one of their number, Jack, is held up by Marta, but she had not the heart to kill him and he escapes. Breezy escapes with the horses. Sheriff pursues but is afraid to follow Breezy.

Marta attempts to escape from Breezy when she discovers her identity. Jack, awaiting the appearance of Breezy, sees Marta as she attempts to escape and shoots her. Discovering that she is a girl, he takes her to his mother's cabin where she recovers. Breezy, fearing that the sheriff's posse captured Marta, attempts to rescue her. Holds up the sheriff and in turn is followed to Jack's cabin by posse. Breezy finds Jack and Marta in a love scene. Breezy Bill draws his gun to shoot, but thinking of his own love years before, he leaves the happy pair with the parting words: "You take care of Marta and I'll take care of the posse. Then they sell him to a band of nomads and with the cash received invest in a prosperous shoe shining emporium. Now, before they started out Mabel put her roll in the First National Bank of Womankind, her silk lisles. So, while applying the polish, Heinie spies the roll and grows much elated thereat. He tells Louie to keep at work on the shoes while he gets the razor which they keep on hand for just such emergencies. This instrument he plies with neatness and dispatch and relieves Miss Prune of her cash. The victim fails to realize her loss until she has gone some distance, but she goes back to the emporium and demands the arrest of the two captains of the pedal polishing industry. Mildred Bruce, daughter of an old sea dog, is in love with George Scott, a young fisherman; but the feud existing between the Bruce and Scott families causes her father to forbid her to see her lover. Captain Bruce has selected as the man to marry his daughter, Captain Dennison, who is employed by the old man. One day old man Bruce sees Mildred on the beach in earnest conversation with young Scott and orders the latter away.

Dennison takes the fish nets of Captain Bruce and puts them into young Scott's boat. There is an entertainment that evening at the town hall and Mildred is there with her lover. Suddenly the sheriff comes in, after being shown the nets in Scott's boat by Dennison, and places the victim under arrest.

But George is admitted to bail and keeps faith with Mildred. Mrs. Scott plans to kidnap the girl, with the aid of her mother, and so straighten out the affair. They do this and are pursued in a boat by the irate Bruce and Dennison, but manage to escape and are wedded. They return as man and wife, but still the testy Bruce will not relent. However, one day old man Scott comes on him along the water front while he is musing and puts out his hand. At first it is refused, but Bruce finally extends the hand of fellowship and the old wound is healed.

SOME BABY (Phunphilms—Sept. 20).—Luke has had a hard time. Try as he may, he cannot land a job. But there is one more place in the building where he might get something to do and he goes there. The owner of the place hires him, on the spot, for there's a reason. He has a big date with Florrie for that afternoon and he has just received a letter from his college chum asking that he meet his young daughter at the station at noon, just in time to spoil his party. He passes the buck to Luke and orders him to get on the job. The sole way Luke has of identifying the child is by means of "W. M." on her suit case.

He goes to the station, but the only person with such initials on her bag is a "dream." He reconnoiters around for a bit, but finally braces up and asks if she is the girl. She is, and Luke thinks of the time he can have on the expense money which has been given him. They have soda water, a wild boat ride, and do all the amusements in the vicinity before they get back to the office.

Meanwhile, the employer has been spending money hand over fist and ends up by "falling" for an expensive hat which Florrie admires. Then he returns to his office and makes out his expense account and finds, when Luke returns, that the latter's account is much smaller and that he had had the better looking lady.

Eighteen years later, the grown Annette learns from Mrs. Hardin the secret of Lost Isle; and Hernandez and Ponto learn the whereabouts of Annette. Neal Hardin, inspired by an officer of the U. S. Navy, decides to try for Annapolis. Neal fails to pass his examination because of the treachery of Joe Welcher, and enlists in the navy as a common sailor. In a drunken attempt to steal the map from Annette for Hernandez, Joe sets fire to the house, and Annette is rescued by the strange bruteman servant of Hernandez.

In this episode Annette is rescued by a squad of U. S. marines, and Hernandez chased to the roof of Lonesome Cove Inn, from which, to escape, he makes one of the most sensational jumps ever shown on the screen. A weazened, bewhiskered dwarf, Prof. Anastasius Papdopoulos, is also secretly in love with Lola and has vowed vengeance on her husband. He kills the latter, is adjudged insane, and put in an asylum.

As the day of his death approaches and after he has disposed of almost all his fortune, some to Lola, Simon is stricken ill while in a park one day and is discovered by her. She takes him to a hospital, where he is operated on and his life saved. The former Cat Queen nurses him back to health and is with him constantly. One day, Elenore and Dale, the latter having given up the Cat Queen for Simon's former fiancee, come to visit the former M. He finds her, but a shot from a gun carried by the dwarf, who has escaped from the asylum, hits Lola in the face and blinds her. Athanasius is killed while trying to escape. THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY (Chapter 21, "The Lion's Bride"—Two Parts—Sept. 20).—Williams, the bill-poster, sees before him the contorted face of his dead conferee, Burke. Ever and anon he would bring forth the diamond, for which he had let his companion die. The wagon which Williams was driving struck a tree stump and he was thrown head first out, while the horse continued on. Rising, Williams limped off, still clinging to the diamond from the sky.

Meantime, Marmaduke Smythe struggled to the house of rancher Jones, awakening him with the weird tale of a dead man crushed beneath a tree, and fared on, until at dawn he met a farmer who carried him to the nearest town. At the tavern the weary man collapsed, while the day clerk registered for him as "Lord Saveus, London, England." Esther resolutely stayed in Los Angeles, although one day when she called at the Powell mansion, she was informed that Arthur had been taken to a sanitarium. The statement was true only insofar that Durand and Vivian wanted to have him removed from the city. But weak willed as Arthur was under the drug affliction, he was stubborn and would not leave. He hardly dared mention Esther's name, for Durand, Vivian, De Vaux and even Blair, united in trying to convince him that his obsession regarding Esther was a manifestation of madness. And they refused the weakened man the administration of drugs during hours of suffering, as he grew stronger, and counselled him against the use of them, but took good care that the drug was where he could gain, as he thought, secret access to it. Bad as Blair was, this soul-wrecking conspiracy was revolting, and he determined that nobody else but the Stanleys shall possess the diamond from the sky.

Sam Santley, with his circus, with La Belle, the "Lady of Lions," and with Splinters, her jealous husband, the clown, arrived in Los Angeles. Sam Santley, the owner, is infatuated with the lion tamer. At the entrance of the tent, Sam was accosted by Jack Williams, who nervously blustered that while he was bill posting his companion Burke was killed by a tree and that the horse attached to the wagon carrying the posters had also been killed. Santley determined to win back his loss in a crap game. He pulled a hundred-dollar bill from his pocket, and threw it on the table. The billposter, realizing that Santley would not pay him his wages, because of the loss, instinctively reached in his pocket and drew forth the diamond from the sky.

Santley won the jewel and gave it to the lion tamer.

Late the next day, Esther arrived at the circus tent, and looked eagerly until her eyes caught sight of the box which held Arthur, Blair, Vivian, De Vaux and Durand. Esther crept along towards the box to speak to Arthur, when suddenly the entire party arose to its feet with a gasp. On the breast of the woman in the lion's cage blazed the diamond from the sky! Then a cry of horror arose. The lion had sprung at the woman, and had struck her down, tearing away the jewel. Santley sprang forward. Just then, Splinters shot him. The lion's claw drew away, bearing with it the diamond to the edge of the cage. A hand reached for it. Then the crowd surged out in horror, and Arthur and Esther were torn from each other by the human wave.

THE LITTLE MADEMOISELLE (Shubert—Sept. 27).—Lili Breval, a charming little French girl, goes to New York from France to make her home with her uncle, Henry Breval, a wealthy automobile manufacturer. Her uncle decides to open a Boston office and starts for that city, taking his family with him. In the party to make the journey is Etienne, son of Henry, who, the elder Breval is determined, shall marry his niece. Etienne, unknown to his parents, has other matrimonial ideas, and is in love with Gabrielle D'Ornay, with whom his parents are not acquainted. Soon after leaving New York, Uncle Henry and his son go forward into the smoker and Mrs. Breval and her maid fall asleep in the Pullman. The train stops at a country village and Lili, who is out on the platform, sees several children playing nearby. The French girl leaves the observation platform to play with the children and crosses the tracks to reach them. A second train passes between her and the one on which she was riding and while she is thus cut off, the first train pulls out, leaving her in the middle of the tracks.

As she stands there, bewildered, she is startled by the approach of two tramps. Lili runs and the men follow. To escape her pursuers, the now thoroughly-scared girl takes to the open country and finally reaches a small village. All the villagers in sight are gathered in front of the local garage and to them she applies for aid. None can understand her. Jim Pemberton, who is responsible for the crowd and who has just had a fight with a customer and been discharged from the garage, where he worked, understands French, and comes to her assistance. Jim's father is also an automobile manufacturer, a rival in business to Lili's uncle. Jim places Lili in the care of one of the women of the village. Disconsolate when Jim leaves her, she runs after him and by dint of much pleading persuades him to take her with him. Both are penniless, and when they try to telegraph for funds the agent refuses to send their message without payment. The local hotel keeper refuses them lodgings, so they start for Boston on foot. Lili soon becomes exhausted and Jim finds her shelter in a vacant house at the roadside. He forages for food and the two make a supper from some potatoes and onions, which Jim "borrows" from a neighbor-

Gundlach Projection Lenses

You can not get the BEST results without them, so what's the use worrying along with ordinary lenses when there is absolute certainty that these lenses will make your picture as sharp and brilliant as it is possible to make it. You can not afford to have a poorer picture than your competitor and nearly every theatre in the country is using Gundlach Projection Lenses now, so if you are not you are behind the game and badly handicapped.

There is no string attached to Gundlach Projection Lenses. They are sold subject to approval and you decide with your own eyes whether they improve the picture or not. They can be obtained promptly for any operating condition.

ing farmer and cooks in an old fireplace. Jim watches over Lili as she sleeps through the night on the floor of the old house.

Next morning the little girl and her escort renew their journey. In the first town they reach Jim learns of an automobile race to be held that day and he applies for a job as mechanician on one of the cars. Henry Breval has a car entered in this race, but on account of Lili's disappearance he has placed the car in charge of his friend, Sauverne, and men named Vallon and Mercier have been selected as driver and mechanician of the Breval car. These two men plan to "sell out" the race, but Jim learns of this and tells Sauverne, who engages Jim to drive the car. Jim's father appears at the track and discovers Jim. Sauverne, learning Jim's connections, refuses to allow him to drive and starts to race the car himself. Vallon, hiding in a thicket, shoots at Sauverne and wounds him. Jim pleads for his chance and Sauverne allows him to drive in the race. Jim wins, and with his pay from Sauverne, he takes Lili to her uncle and aunt in Boston.

Breval, in gratitude, gives Jim a position in his office but refuses to allow him to court Lili, for he has in mind her marriage to Etienne, who, in the meantime has secretly married Gabrielle.

Pemberton, Sr., learning where his son is working, informs Breval of Jim's true identity. Etienne adds to the surprise by telling of his marriage, and so Uncle Henry at last consents to the marriage of Lili and Jim.

PLAYING DEAD (Vitagraph—Five Parts—Sept. 20).—The cast: Sidney Drew, Mrs Sidney Drew, Donald Hall, Isador Marcil and Harry English.

The Blagwins, three years married and deeply in love, revel in their marital happiness until Proctor Maddox joins the Country Club. Maddox, clever and suave, makes an impression on Jeanne Blagwin by his philosophy of a new feminism. Jimmy Blagwin is the first to notice her waning affections. Loving her none the less, Blagwin decides to give her up. Her happiness is his one desire and if she will be happier with Proctor Maddox, Jimmie is willing to sacrifice himself for her happiness and her name. He must find some way beside divorce. Glancoma is one way. Death is another. Thoughtfully and thoroughly he lays his plans.

He engages passage on the "St. Louis." He writes his wife a note telling her of his approaching blindness, and advising her that he is paving the way for her marriage to Maddox and that his will which gives her all the property, is in the safe. James Blagwin boards the steamer. One day out, the captain finds his cabin empty and discovers a note from Blagwin telling them not to search for him.

Blagwin's will cannot be found, although the farewell note to his beloved Jeanne had said it was in the safe. The property is about to be turned over to Blagwin's relatives in Paris, although he had wanted it to go to his wife. Mrs. Blagwin, bowed with grief for her departed husband, mourns alone. Proctor Maddox no longer interests her. At last she realizes that she loved Jimmie Blagwin and no one else.

PARAMOUNT.

PEER GYNT (Morosco—Sept. 16).—The cast: Cyril Maude, Myrtle Stedman, Fanny Y. Stockbridge, Mary Reubens, Mary Ruby, Winifred Bryson, Evelyn Duncan, Kitty Stevens, Herbert Standing, Charles Ruggles, William Desmond and Juan de la Cruz.

When a capricious Gubransdale bride refuses to come out to be married, the rollicking "Peer Gynt" pretends to lend a hand, but once he has coaxed the girl out of the cabin he claps the bridegroom in and, locking the door on the howling swain, spirits the not unwilling girl away to a cave in the mountains. Banished for the "bride theft," Peer begins a worldwide wandering, and his susceptibility to beautiful women plunges him into thrilling experiences. But one after another they reveal selfish ends and work to his undoing.

He loses his sailing ship and narrowly escapes irons when his beautiful Annabel Lee turns out to be an agent of the secret service on his trail for slaving. By mere luck he emerges unscathed from the duel he is dragged into by an aristocratic little flirt of old Virginia. An Indian girl in the north woods inveigles him out of his precious pelt of silver fox and then deserts him, and his escape from lurking redskins is by such a hair that a rifle bullet knocks the very paddle out of his hands.

Years pass but do not bring him any better women, and he falls victim to the voluptuous charm of Anitra a soulless dancing girl of the desert, only to have her strip him of the very gems in his turban and the rings upon his fingers. Age finds him an embittered, cynical old man, and "Peer Gynt" drifts back to Gubrandsdale to die, but he finds waiting there the faithful sweetheart of his wild youth, the pure, gentle Solveig. So when the Button Moulder, personifying the Saver of Souls, comes to cast Peer back into the Melting Pot to be moulded over because his wasted life proves him without design, it is Solveig's devotion which saves him. The good in him has lived after all in her faith, in her hope and in her love.

THE WHITE PEARL (Famous Players—Oct. 11).—The cast: Marie Doro, Thomas Holding, Walter Craven, Robert Broderick Cesare Gravina, Maude Granger and Robert Cain.

On a Japanese island the Sacred Pearl of Buddha is stolen by a Chinaman, who later finds employment on a ship sailing for America. The inhabitants of the island believe that the loss of the sacred jewel will bring them unhappiness, and they pray daily that it be returned to them.

Meanwhile, in America, Nancy, the daughter of Capt. Marvell, awaits her father's return from the Orient, to tell him the good news of her love for Robert Alden, son of the wealthy tea importer. Bob's father, however, on learning of his son's amatory inclinations, and not approving of an alliance with a sea captain's daughter, decides to prevent it and orders his son to the Yokohama office of his establishment, that he may forget his romance amid new environment. Nancy's father, thinking a sea trip will bring back the color to his daughter's face, fading because of the news of Bob's contemplated departure, takes her with him on his return voyage to Japan. Aboard this same ship Bob conceals himself, and days later makes known his presence. Thus, the unexpectedly reunited lovers are happy.

Prior to his sailing, Bob has bought the Sacred pearl from a destitute sailor, who has told him the mysterious legend connected with it. Bob, while unbelieving the story, has given the pearl to Nancy, who always wears it about her neck. When nearing Japan, the old ship springs a leak, and in the sinking of the vessel, Nancy's father meets his death and the lovers are separated. Nancy floats on a raft to the island from which the sacred pearl had been stolen, while Bob is picked up unconscious by a ship on her way to Yokohama. The natives of the island drag Nancy ashore, and the long-sought sacred pearl is seen hanging about her neck. The natives are elated at the thought that the sacred pearl has been restored and that happiness will now return to them. Later, Nancy recovers consciousness, but her memory is all a blank. She remembers only one word, "Bob." The natives look upon her as a goddess, sent from Buddha with the sacred pearl. Thus Nancy, now known as O'Nyoko-San, begins a new life on the little Japanese island as the keeper of the sacred pearl.

Bob, arriving in Yokohama, devotes himself to the interests of his father, although he never forgets his little sweetheart, whom he believes to have drowned. In the attempt of Chinese pirates to obtain possession of the sacred pearl, Nancy is captured and sold as a geisha girl to the owner of a tea-house in Yokohama. Here she is taught the life and duties of the geisha girl. She soon becomes the favorite of the place, and attracts the attention of the wealthy Capt. Featherstone, who tries to buy Nancy from her proprietor. When she realizes that she is to be sold again, she screams, thus attracting the attention of Bob, who is on his way from business. He rushes in, sees and recognizes Nancy, but soon realizes that her memory has gone. In a spirited scene, Bob outbids Featherstone, and leaves with Nancy. He calls in specialists to restore her memory, but all his efforts are futile. Her memory suddenly returns, however, when Bob casually shows her the locket that had belonged to her mother, and which she had given to him just before the ship had sunk. Upon the sight of this Nancy recalls the entire past, and so the story ends with their happy return to America.

"BUILT BY BRAINS"

To the Film Manufacturer:

Why should you spend thousands of dollars constantly improving the quality of your negatives and positives to make the best film possible, if the film is to be reeled off in a theatre where good projection is impossible?

To the Camera and Projector Maker:

Why strive for better lenses, smoother action and more light when you know that poor projection surfaces may absorb all the light, or flare it back in a blazing glare and thus destroy all the efforts of your experts?

To Directors and Authors:

Why cudgel your brains planning beautiful light and scenic effects, or plotting tense, gripping action if the screen which receives the result of your artistic efforts buries them all in smudgy pictures?

To Actors and Actresses:

Why rehearse for days those swift emotional facial changes which stamp you as artists, and make the distinction between stars and supers, if these swift changes die on the screen, never reaching the audience who expect them when you appear?

To the Exhibitor:

Why waste the combined efforts of all these workers and defeat your own ends by denying to your audience the effects for which thousands of brains are working?

This advertisement having appeared in a former issue is reproduced at the request of hundreds of manufacturers directors, artists and exhibitors

E. R. Anderson

Gentlemen: This is to inform you that Mr. ——, Manager of the —— Theatre, ——, Utah, is in the market for a new screen. I am of the opinion that you can sell him one.

In writing Mr. —— you may use my name if you so choose.

Trusting that this may be of value to you, I am, Very respectfully yours,

REMBUSCH SCREENS

Announcement "Glory Light"

Last week I told you of the new screen made of White Fibre, which I have invented. I got a sample of every other screen that is made by other manufacturers and I placed this White Fibre against other samples, in the same light, and the difference was simply wonderful.

Some friends, to whom I was demonstrating, exclaimed that from every angle it has a glorious light, so I named this screen and I guarantee that if there is any screen of any other make that will compare with it in any way from any angle I will forfeit the price of this screen.

Just Think of This!

I was in the office of Jones-Linick-Schaeffer of Chicago, who operate the Orpheum on State Street, the largest moving picture theatre in the Middle West. I asked Mr. Schaeffer, "How is the Glass 'Mirror Screen?' " Mr. Schaeffer answered, "Well, F. J., when we put in the Glass 'Mirror Screen' in the Lyric seven years ago and the Orpheum six years ago, we thought we were spending a lot of money, but it has been the cheapest investment we have ever made, because our pictures are always great and it helps our patronage for that reason."

AGAIN: JUST THINK OF IT! A screen that is as good in seven years as the day it left the factory and this same screen is so good that I defy any other screen manufacturer to put a sample up against it in comparison. This should be reason enough to recommend it to your favor without a lot of conversation on my part.

The Quality Carbons of the World

Specially Constructed Negative with Copper Coated Core

Here is one of the letters we promised. It comes from a gentleman in Fort Worth, Texas, and was written to a mutual friend:

"I received a dozen carbons from the Reflex people. I am prepared to say that they are a better carbon than the present carbons on the market. They make two kinds, one for A.C. and one for D.C. The carbons for A.C. are by far the best for A.C. I ever used, giving at least 15% better screen illumination than any other brand. The D.C. carbons have a very brilliant white light. This is caused by the special pains they take with their negative carbon which has a copper coated core which gives a green cast mixed with the violet from the top carbon and makes a Brillianter, Whiter and Better light. In fact they are all that could be desired in carbons at this stage.

"The binder seems to be high grade. The core is composed of high grade carbon held together with the best sodium silicate ($No_2$ $Si_4$ $O_9$).

1 THE UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME is a highly fascinating game which will be played with greatest interest by millions of people in every State in the Union. It is a game of intelligence, wits and judgment. Any child or grown person may participate. It consists of suggesting titles that best fit a series of illustrations that appear in a newspaper in your territory. These illustrations that are published in the paper represent the titles of well-known book stories or photo-plays. The Public suggests what they consider to be the best titles for the pictures as they are published.

2 After the newspaper in your territory has advertised the UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME, explaining exactly what it is and how it is to be played, the newspaper will announce that if those who play the game wish assistance in digging up the best titles, they can secure such helpful assistance by seeing short strips of moving pictures in the ——— Theater, also by consulting the official catalogue which contains (among the 3,000 titles printed therein) all of the titles that fit all of the pictures to be shown, as such catalogues will be on file for reference at the newspaper office and elsewhere. Your nearest Universal Exchange will supply you with these short strips of Universal MOVIEGAME films, 2, 3, 4, 5, or 6 times every week, depending on the number of nights per week that you expect to show them. The MOVIEGAME moving pictures that you show at your Theater, run about 50 to 75 feet in length and require only about one or two minutes on the screen. Posters, slides and heralds can be secured to boost it in your House. Your Exchange will supply you with all this dope.

3 THE UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME in the large cities usually runs for about 72 consecutive days in the newspaper, if the newspaper publishes a different picture every day. If they publish pictures only 5 times a week, or 4 or 3, or perhaps only twice a week, the UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME will naturally run longer. Figuring that the paper publishes a picture every day—the UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME will then run 72 days, or about 3½ months. If the newspaper publishes pictures only 5, 4, 3 or only twice a week, the length of time for the game will be longer, of course, the length of time required for the completion of the game always depending on the number of pictures the newspaper publishes each week.

4 To start the UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME is easy. The newspaper announces the GAME in advance for several days, using large advertisements to explain the entire simple details to the public. Later you have the name of your Theater inserted in the newspaper's ads on the Moviegame, or you can announce it yourself by advertising in the newspaper; or, if you don't care to do this, you simply show the slides on your screen several days or a week before you start the game, also, you put the big posters on the billboards or in front of your House and on the billboards as you prefer. The posters, heralds and slides are all ready for you at your Universal Exchange.

5 After you have announced by slides, posters and by distributing heralds (also by having the name of your Theater published in the newspaper ads that the newspaper publishes), you secure the strips from your Exchange and run them, and you run the short moving picture strips AFTER the pictures have been run in the newspaper. For instance, if Illustrations No. 1, No. 2, No. 3, and No. 4 have been published on, say, Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Sunday, you show your moving pictures the following Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Sunday. You always show the films about a week later than the illustration appearing in the newspaper. The time that elapses between, gives the people a chance to do a little thinking over the best titles to suggest for the illustrations that have been shown in the newspaper.

6 You conduct the UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME throughout its entire run, exactly as described in paragraph 5 above. You always allow about a week to elapse between the time the illustrations appear in the paper and the time you show them on the screen in your House. People must have a little time to study up the best titles for each illustration as they appear in the newspaper. After they have studied, consulted the official catalogue on file in the newspaper office and elsewhere and want the real assistance for suggesting the best titles, they will come to your Theater to see the pictures after the illustrations have appeared in the paper.

7 The people who play the UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME get the newspaper in which the Moviegame illustrations appear. Figure No. 1 on the left side of this ad shows (in miniature) the style of the Moviegame illustrations. Each illustration will bear a number—and at the bottom of each picture there will be a space for the person's name, address, etc., etc. Any person may send in from one to five of these illustrations clipped from the newspaper, their suggested best title written thereon, name, address, etc., and these are sent TO THE NEWSPAPER. After the Moviegame is all over, the judges will go over all the titles sent in and the person who sends in the largest number of best titles for all the illustrations will receive the largest award. The second largest list of best titles, the second largest award, and so on down the line. Cut of the Official Catalogue (containing over 3,000 titles) includes all the titles for all the pictures to be shown.

8 The cost of running the game is practically nothing. All you pay for is the rental of the film, which amounts to so little that it isn't worth talking about. Your Exchange will give you details and the cost will be less than you can imagine. ANY house, no matter how small, no matter how low the admission prices, nor no matter how small a seating capacity, can afford the Moviegame. It will keep any house packed constantly, for everybody will want to see the moving pictures, as well as the newspaper illustrations.

9 What would you give for someone who could pack your house every night? What would you give for an orchestra that would pack your house every night? If you knew of some certain thing, some force that would keep your house jammed, what would you pay to get that "certain something?" In this case, that "certain something" that will keep your house packed—THAT WILL POPULARIZE IT, IS THE UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME. There is nothing in the line of schemes or plans that even begins to measure up with the UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME. IT'S GOT THEM ALL SKINNED.

REMEMBER if you are a UNIVERSAL EXHIBITOR and if yours is a well known UNIVERSAL HOUSE, you stand a better chance to draw bigger houses than if you are NOT A UNIVERSAL EXHIBITOR—BUT you do NOT have to be a Universal Exhibitor to get the MOVIEGAME. ANY HOUSE can get it and the cost of it is practically nil. We have attached herewith a special coupon. For QUICK ACTION, USE IT. FIRST COME—FIRST SERVED.

BROADWAY UNIVERSAL FEATURES

Francis Ford and Grace Cunard in "The Campbells Are Coming"

Scenario by Grace Cunard. Directed by Francis Ford.

Fifteenth Prize Release
Broadway Universal Features
Released Oct. 18

This thrilling photoplay has aptly been called "the military spectacle of the year." It is seldom one sees so much of the spectacular in a four-reel feature. Seldom that so much of the spectacular comes as a necessary part of the story of any play. The result is a picture that rings true; that has a punch such as a vigorous director like Francis Ford knows how to get into every act and every scene. Ford's experience in handling big serials has served him in good stead in this dramatic play by Grace Cunard. The story deals with the Relief of Lucknow, in 1857, at the time of the Indian Mutiny against English occupation. Francis Ford plays the part of an Indian Prince who is responsible for the revolt of the native soldiers and the subsequent massacre of the English colony. How the famous Scotch regiment of the Clan Campbell carved their way through shot and shell and in hand-to-hand conflict to the rescue of the brave company of defenders, makes a story that keeps one absorbed every tense moment for four reels. Grace Cunard as the Scotch school teacher, captured and imprisoned by the Prince himself, gives a wonderful portrayal of a difficult emotional role. Altogether "The Campbells Are Coming" is a fine picture that will enchant any movie audience, and which is well worthy of its place as a Broadway Universal Feature.

Herbert Rawlinson in "The Fair God of Sun Island" with Louella Maxim

Directed by Wm. Worthington.

Prize Drama of the Sea
Gold Seal—3 Reels
Released Oct. 19.

There is very much more than one man's personality to this fine picture, but if it is hard to conceive how the play could be so remarkably strong as it is without the virile characterization of the hero by Herbert Rawlinson. How a fisher lad was shanghaied by a wealthy shipowner who coveted the boy's sweetheart; how after a wreck and life with a beautiful South Sea maiden on a desert isle, he returns to his fisher maiden, is the brief outline of a story which gives a very capable cast splendid opportunities for good acting. The marine scenes, the wreck, the swimming and diving feats, all contribute to the continuous punch that carries this big story over in a big way. It is sure to please every lover of fine pictures.

"Room and Board a Dollar and a Half" with Billie Ritchie, Louise Orth and Henry Bergman

Directed by H. Pathe Lehrman.

Prize Comedy Burlesque
L-Ko—2 Reels
Released Oct. 20

What you would get in the way of "Room and Board for a Dollar and a Half" would be a joke. The way Billie Ritchie sees it is a tragedy for him—(he is the husband of the boarding house keeper—Alice Howell), but with the aid of a friendly palmist in the alluring personality of Louise Orth, he routs his rival, and as the audience is led to believe—gets a square meal at home. One continuous round of hilarity, with much handsomer sets than are usually shown in comedies. Great stuff to head a genuine Comedy Night. Go to it.

"The Greater Courage" with Jane Novak

Prize Emotional Drama
Big U—2 Reels
Released Oct. 21

Every week's program shows the growing charm of the work of Jane Novak. When cast for emotional parts she is distinctly at her best. In this strong story of a brother's perfidy, Jane as the sister marries a strong "man of the West" for protection. The brother returns East, makes good, and arrives at the home of Jane in time to prevent a family catastrophe. The interest is well sustained and the vigor of the scenes in the western mining camp reflect great credit on the cast as well as on the directing of West. An out-of-the-ordinary Western drama that will please the multitude.

"The Meddler" with Chas. Ogle

Directed by Brinsley Shaw.

Prize Heart Interest Drama
Imp—2 Reels
Released Oct. 22

Mr. Ogle's fine work in the past in the support of Mary Fuller receives its due reward in his being featured in this strong Imp drama. Ogle as a multi-millionaire finds himself engulfed emotionally in an affair of his younger days. He is a business rival of the husband of the woman in the case (now dead), and gives employment to her son. To describe the many tense situations and the startling climax would detract from your interest. It is enough to say that there is a story in the plot; the action is swift; the climax is unexpected and the ending satisfactory. In the big scene, on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, there is a punch that is irresistible.

"A Fight to a Finish" with Marie Walcamp

Directed by J. P. McGowan

Prize Railroad Drama
101-Bison—3 Reels
Released Oct. 23

Universal movie patrons always expect Marie Walcamp to do the unexpected, and they will not be disappointed in this thrilling drama in which Marie as a humble telegraph operator plays a heroic part. To prevent the hold-up of a treasure train Marie chases it on a small gasoline track car, afterward making a daring rescue of her brother from the engine. Thrill follows thrill, and all to good purpose, for the climax comes in a manner to bring about a satisfactory ending, to make one realize that the "stunts" are really part of the picture, and that Marie Walcamp has again lived up to her daring reputation.

"The Springtime of the Spirit" with Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips

Directed by Ben Wilson.

Prize Brother's Love Drama
Rex—3 Reels
Released Oct. 24

Ben's beautiful ward, whose mother was an old-time sweetheart of his, awakens in Ben a youthful ardor that leads him to propose marriage to her. Because her father left a request in a letter delivered to Dorothy years after his death, she felt impelled to accept Ben, though her heart was given to Ben's younger brother. The beautiful manner in which Director Wilson has developed the strong story in the picture brings about a convincing and logical ending, and a splendid opportunity for the fine acting of which he is capable. An idealistic photoplay of the greatest charm.

This spectacular drama is a thrilling story of royal plots and court intrigue.

The palace of Philip II was a gigantic web in which the King enmeshed courtiers and ladies.

The King ensnared them in his trap, like a great spider snaring moths and flies and butterflies.

But love and courage smashed the web and freed the imprisoned victims.

Its aim is true. Its photoplays strike the popular chord every time the bow twangs.

FIFTY-TWO WEEKS OF CAPACITY BUSINESS

One year ago there was released as the first offering of the WORLD FILM CORPORATION that masterpiece of photoplay production—

ROBERT WARWICK in "THE DOLLAR MARK"

Then followed a series of great releases—

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG in "HEARTS IN EXILE"
ROBERT WARWICK in "ALIAS JIMMY VALENTINE"
HOLBROOK BLINN and ALICE BRADY in "THE BOSS."
WILTON LACKAYE in "THE PIT"
LEW FIELDS in "OLD DUTCH."

They made thousands of dollars for thousands of exhibitors. They are still drawing throngs to thousands of theaters because each is one great appeal to the whole gamut of human emotions.

We have made mistakes. What beginner does not? We have learned many lessons and in a year have grown old in experience. So, for the next fifty-two weeks we offer a succession of features that will will even surpass our best efforts of the twelve-month just gone.

The money-wise exhibitor will book WORLD FEATURES NOW.

Facts and Comments

THE organized exhibitors of New York have enthusiastically approved the plan of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD to take part in the campaign against the new constitution. The framers of the new constitution which will be offered to the voters for approval or rejection on November 2 have shown a distinct hostility to the motion picture interests. The members of the committee which heard the motion picture men argue in favor of extending the freedom of the press to the screen not only professed their ignorance of motion pictures but gloried in it. We went to Albany expecting to find statesmen who would be broad enough and intelligent enough to define the legal status of the motion picture. We found instead a set of narrow and ignorant politicians. These men have lost touch with the questions of the day; they have grown strange and cold to the people who elected them. What they need is a jolt to get their memories back. Let us all help. Exhibitors remember the offer of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD in the issue of October 2—slides or speakers free upon request. Here is a chance to show what motion picture men can do to strike back at the politicians.

THE way the courts disposed of the pictures intending to show the events of a sensational murder trial in the South once more demonstrates that we do not need censorship in order to deal with objectionable films. Time and again now the courts have held that the portrayal of contemporaneous crime or of the interior of disreputable houses will not be tolerated if due complaint is made by a proper official or by any citizen. The court will sustain the findings of a conscientious license commissioner if such findings reflect public sentiment.

EXCESS of zeal on the part of the Mayor of Yonkers has placed the exhibitors in that city in a rather enviable position. The Mayor has refused to grant a license to moving picture men unless they stipulate to close on Sundays. The exhibitors refused to accept such a conditional license. In this attitude they were amply sustained by the Court of Appeals. That court has declared that such conditional licenses are a sort of subterfuge by which the Aldermen of Yonkers want to override the authority of the state. Hence the exhibitors in that charming town on the Hudson run their shows without a license, but in a perfectly legal manner just the same.

WE ARE happy to see so many signs of renewed activity in the National League. Petty dissensions had all too long prevented a good organization in the state of New York. Now the state organization is united and strong. It has made application for a charter from the National League. No doubt the charter will be granted. Ohio will have a great get-together meeting on October 19 and 20 at Cleveland. The situation in Ohio needs some clarifying. We hope that the organized exhibitors of that state will never again go on record as favoring state censorship. Remember the date —October 19 and 20—and the place—Cleveland.

THERE is, we are sorry to say, every indication that the British government will place a duty on all film imported into the United Kingdom. Recently a rumor ran the rounds in the city that the duty was an accomplished fact. This rumor has not been confirmed, but the imposition of such a duty in the very near future seems practically assured. In all likelihood the duty will be a heavy one, some prophesy more than a penny a foot. Such a duty will of course affect American producers more than any other and may result in the establishment of English branch studios by some of our big producers.

HAPPILY the courts are in nine cases out of ten a safe refuge for film men whom the censor boards are trying to harass and injure. Reviewing a long line of decisions reported from the courts of various states, we find that they are almost without exception characterized by equity and common sense. In the matter of the motion picture the courts have been far more responsive to public sentiment than either the legislatures or the politicians. The scientific value of the motion picture has been judicially vindicated by the courts that refused to interfere with the so-called "Twilight Sleep Films."

Man in Domestic Drama*

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

"VIRTUOUS and vicious every man must be,—few in the extreme, but all in the degree." So saith the poet who declares that "the proper study of mankind is man." The role man plays in any drama is one his character impels, plus or minus the influences brought to bear upon that character at critical moments according to his strength of reason. The same may be said of woman when she has a reason, when she does not wholly depend upon keen sensibilities and intuitive judgment. It is almost always a question of superior or inferior rationality with the being who is "a mighty maze, but not without a plan." He is a creature of remembrance and reflection, quite often conscious of his unfulfilled possibilities, inclined more and more, as the centuries of evolution are unrolled, to do his own thinking.

Man, as he is pictured by the playwrights, occupies one of two places when there is strife for a woman—that of duly legalized possession, or that of unauthorized desire. He plays a dual role when his errant heart is torn by affection for his wife and another woman at the same time. His social course seems to be clearly defined—he should maintain the conventions, annihilate the lover in one case and stick to his vows in the other, but the primary emotions, love, hate, jealousy and envy often unscramble his omelet in a fashion so distressing that his proper study for dramatic purposes becomes three-sided. Embarrassing as it is to the theory of man's ratiocination, he occasionally does reason less from premises to conclusion than along the devious course of inclination. From his tendency to range, more than that of woman, have risen the thousand and one variations of the Eternal Triangle.

H. for husband, W. for wife, L. for lover, C. for charmer, what a simple problem, especially for the uninitiated! It is merely H minus W plus L, or W minus H plus C. Small wonder that critics limit the number of plots! But H may not understand W. The clerk in De Maupassant's story never knew that his wife's jewels were not paste until she died. H, in another case, lavished jewels on his wife and found that she was wearing paste—the dear thing had sold the genuine ones, invested in real estate for the sake of her spendthrift hubby, and shamed him for his unjust suspicions. The infinite number and variety of stories to be told of dangerous misunderstandings in domestic drama are largely due to the supposed stupidity of H. What a startling innovation it would be to picture a husband of good, common sense! Regular thing, two or three times a week, is the play in which H catches W in the arms of a handsome stranger, who turns out to be her unknown brother. It never seems to occur to him to say "Will you kindly present me to the gentleman on whom you are showering your young affections?"

The average director's idea of a tense moment is when H takes a revolver from the table drawer and regards it with menacing gloom. He is an honest man, but W's cold conduct repels him, while C's expressive nature stirs his very soul. Shall he kill himself and satisfy the audience, or shall he warm W with a new sealskin? What a confession of weakness when H tries to redeem wavering W by exhibiting their chee-ild! There are ways for H to make a fool of L if he is not big enough to annihilate him. Sardou proved that in "Divorcons." If W is childish, so much the better—she will be more powerfully influenced by the instinct of selection. She will pick the winner. H can invite L to dinner and put nux vomica in his demitasse.

The lives of married people are replete with material for the screen story. The clash of individualities and the effect of that clash upon offspring; the inspiration afforded by an intelligent woman to her husband in his work; the disaster which often follows an inability to combine in a mutual effort; the comical readjustments of young married couples; the tendency of man to be weaned from his natural affection by his wife's inability to keep pace with his advancement; the danger of housing relatives whose partiality keeps the wounds of misunderstanding ever open; the strange happiness enjoyed by couples seemingly ill-mated; the folly of digging into the past of either party to a union; all these and many others furnish themes entirely outside of the Eternal Triangle. Nor need the question of marital fidelity seriously intrude where there is a breach between husband and wife on account of his or her associations.

The justice of man's role is largely dependent upon characterization. In that character lies a seed from which his conduct grows. His natural function, that of providing subsistence and shelter, the larger part of his mind force is directed toward overcoming the opposition he meets in competing with other men. The preservative forces in him make him aggressive. He is calculating—the recognition of individual property gives him a distinct object to pursue. He is avaricious at times because he must provide those very comforts and luxuries women enjoy, which cause them to prize the successful man without closely investigating his methods of doing business. He is obeying his most powerful impulses when he works hard, schemes cunningly and worries himself into fits of nervous depression to get possession of what represents the accumulated surplus of labor.

The man who is able to make his own way and provide a home for wife and family seems to be regarded from a theatrical point of view as more or less of a fool, if not an easy mark. He lacks on the screen, as on the stage, the keen penetration and quick wit of similar men in real life. Then, when the millionaire banker comes home and tells his wife that he has lost "all," they move into one room with the plaster falling off and dine from the milk bottle. All the sagacity, strategy, craft and cunning that the banker has displayed in making his millions disappears over night. There is practically no true characterization of men in the domestic drama. If they are not made to act in direct opposition to what might well be expected of them, they simply stroll through the piece in dress suits and other fine raiment.

To picture man as purely an automaton, or even merely as an emotional being, is to disregard the intellectual growth working within him. The emotions are constant—it is mind that is variable. Nature may impel him, propel him, but his mind does the steering. Necessity may drive, passion may urge him into dramatic entanglements, his collision with obstacles may be almost continuous, but chance should not be arbitrarily called to his aid—he should not be cleared of an unjust accusation by a dying confession of the real culprit. He should enforce the recognition of truth through his own intellectual activity. We love character, not incident and accident. Directors are not expected to provide characterization where none has been indicated. That is entirely up to the author, which means that he must have a supply of mind force in order to write plays.

Don't Sneer at the Screen

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE "highbrow" walking up and down the earth and viewing the works of the Creator with ill-concealed disdain does not approve of the motion picture. Indeed he assures himself of his ineffable superiority by taking occasional shots at the screen. With curled lip and haughty eye he descants upon the motion picture and upon the common people who favor it so much. These men who thank the Almighty that they are not as other men go through life in a shell. They give nothing, they take nothing, but live for themselves alone. I do not wonder that they have no use for the motion picture and its appeal to the masses.

One of these wiseacres lately poured the vials of his sarcasm upon a filmed version of "Peer Gynt." "Very little left of Ibsen," he says in his critique. Then he indulges this little sneer: "The film men will take the Book of Job next; they could make a good deal of Job's boils."

"Peer Gynt," before it was filmed, reposed on the shelves of the libraries. All of its profound wisdom and philosophy, all its witchery, all its poetic beauty, all its passionate preaching of love and truth was shut up between two covers of pasteboard. Consult the librarian and he will tell you with regret that the book is little read. Our hurried lives, the battle for the daily bread, give us little time to absorb and enjoy the treasures of literature. The film has in the past taken hold of the great and good things in literature and has visualized them for the general public. The imperishable charms and beauties of Homer and of Dante and of Shakespeare have by means of the screen been in some degree at least communicated to the great masses who never had the advantage and the luxury of an academic training. The story of the gospel has been presented in films to millions who had never had any adequate conception of it before.

Why belittle or why refuse to appreciate this glorious power and this wonderful influence of the motion picture? If the film succeeded in no more than giving a faint reflection of "Peer Gynt" to the motion picture audience a great thing has been accomplished. If the filmed version does no more than to stimulate interest in the poem and in the author of the poem it may mean the finding of a new source of inspiration for many a soul that otherwise might have gone through life uncheered and uncomforted.

A man of really broad mind with a spirit friendly to humanity takes kindly to the masses. To him that medium looks best which has the greatest influence and the largest audience. Crudities and imperfections may well be overlooked for the sake of what is vital in the message. All the real progress of our race has come through reaching the greatest possible numbers. The treasures of the world's literature are not merely for the chosen few. Time was when a manuscript was the precious possession of one man or one family or one little group of men. Then came printing and the book was read by thousands where the manuscript never passed out of one narrow circle. The screen makes the feast of knowledge even more general. Everybody is invited, everybody is amused and everybody learns something. A medium which reveals and visualizes for the masses that which otherwise would be merely the scholar's delight should not be sneered at—least of all by a real scholar.

We Want No Protection

By W. Stephen Bush.

TALKING recently to a film man who had just returned from the worst of the three censorship states I heard, with unspeakable regret, that some of the exchanges in that state are trying to curry favor with the censor board. These exchangemen are not satisfied with merely submitting their films to the censor. The law of course requires them to do that. They go a step further. They "kow-tow" to the censors and bend "the pregnant hinges of the knee that thrift may follow fawning." In the presence and the hearing of the inquisitors these men profess a belief in the necessity of censorship. They compliment the inquisitors and exalt their wonderful judgment. They intone a chorus of fulsome praise and sing a litany of humble subjection. Knowing that censors are not impervious to flattery these film men imitate the fox in the fable hoping that the censors will play the part of the crow.

Such an attitude on the part of the film men is really the worst result of censorship. It is nothing less than a denial of manhood and the renunciation of an American birthright. One cannot respect the man who kisses the hand that smites him. It might be urged that not all film men are cast in heroic mold and that men may be excused for trying the "easiest" way. Even judge on this lowest of levels, it will not pay to toady to the censor. You make yourself dependent on the whim of a master. He may be in good humor today and respond to your flattery by the granting of a "favor," but tomorrow he may want to vent his spleen and he is quite likely to make you the victim if he knows you to be a mean-spirited sort of fellow.

"Humoring" the censor will get no results. There is but one way of dealing with censors and with censorship. We must fight them to the finish. We are bound to win because we are right. Official censorship of the state variety exists in but three states out of forty-eight. If there had been any such overwhelming demand and any such ample justification for censorship as the enemies of the motion picture claim, censorship would by this time be a permanent institution in every single state of the Union. Let there be no mistake. We, the film men, have public sentiment with us and the censors have public sentiment against them. If we have conscience and understanding enough to keep faith with ourselves, to lay hold of our principles and stick to them, the final victory is only a matter of time.

Only when we or any of us begin to waver and to look for compromises and "for the easiest way out" are we in danger of losing the fight. The press and the public respect the man who is ready to fight for what he believes to be his rights. "Dickering" with the censors will lose us the respect and the sympathy of all the good people who are worth while.

We want no "protection" as that word has come to be understood in this city. We do not want to "step up to the captain's office and settle." The motion picture industry is not only big commercially, but it is with negligible exceptions a clean and respectable business. It is more than that. It is fulfilling a great mission and it is shouldering its responsibilities. It needs no furtive dealings with the constituted authorities. We are out in the open daylight, battling for our rights. If there are any film men in any of the unfortunate censorship states who are ashamed of their calling let them step out of the ranks. The motion picture industry will be better off without them.

New York Exhibitors Indorse Our Plan

Read This Carefully and Get in Line For This Big Chance

THE offer of The Moving Picture World to aid the exhibitors in the city and state of New York in the fight against the new constitution has aroused wide-spread comment and has brought numerous letters of commendation and acceptance.

We will supply set of slides and speaker free of charge. Read editorial page of October 2nd for full details. The idea is to teach the politicians a lesson and to convince them of the power of the screen and the intelligence of the exhibitor.

The organized exhibitors of New York City have formally indorsed the plan of The Moving Picture World. Exhibitors up the state are following suit.

C. H. Thomas, of Wellsville, a well-known exhibitor and manager of two big motion picture theaters in Wellsville and Bath, N. Y., writes:

> "Just read your great offer while waiting to catch a train to my other theater at Bath. Great offer, men. Would like to see one of your speakers come to this section of the state. I am with you ninety ways."

A progressive Syracuse exhibitor, S. Geddes of the Langan Theater, writes:

> "Moving Picture World—
> Gentlemen:—Send slides as I wish to co-operate with you in this work. Also want lecturer."

This fight is made for you exhibitors of New York city and state. You have a wonderful chance of showing your power and getting closer to your audience. Remember that the next session of the legislature will attempt to pass rigorous censorship and Sunday closing laws.

HELP TO CREATE SENTIMENT FOR THE MOTION PICTURE.

This is your golden opportunity AND IT WILL NOT COST YOU ONE CENT.

LET US HEAR FROM YOU AT ONCE.

Universal Serial by Fifteen Authors

Joe Brandt, of the Universal Company, Introduces New Idea and Engages Famous Writers to Carry It Through.

BELIEVING that the public has had about enough of serials in their present form and will welcome an innovation, Joe Brandt, general manager of the Universal Company, conceived of something brand new with which to follow the successful run of "The Broken Coin." Briefly, the idea advanced by Mr. Brandt and heartily seconded by President Carl Laemmle is this: Fifteen of the country's most famous fiction writers will be the authors of a picture. Each will prepare one two-part episode, carrying on the story as he sees fit and the installments will be released weekly under the title of "The Crack o' Doom," or possibly "The Graft Syndicate." Then, corresponding with the screen episodes, there will be a fiction version for newspapers, written by Hugh Weir.

When the Universal released "The Broken Coin" the officials of the company had practically decided that it would be their last serial for some time. Exchangemen and exhibitors were asked for their opinion and while many of them declared that the life of the continued picture was not ebbing, others credited their audiences with wanting something different. General Manager Brandt took it upon himself to find something new, and one morning he appeared at the office with the fifteen authors' scheme all carefully worked out in his mind. That was about three weeks ago and last week he had finished the preliminary work and had engaged the authors considered best qualified to prepare the serial.

Probably never in the history of literature have fifteen writers with the reputations of those secured by the Universal Company, banded together in one undertaking. They are Irvin Cobb, George Bronson Howard, Anna Katherine Green, Rupert Hughes, Reginald Wright Kauffman, Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, Leroy Scott, Thompson Buchanan, James Oppenheim, Wallace Irwin, Frederic Isham, Louis Joseph Vance, Zane Grey, James Francis Dwyer and A. N. and A. M. Williamson.

It is likely that Irvin Cobb, generally conceded to be America's foremost humorist, will be chosen to launch the serial, which will be released within the next few weeks. The author who writes the second episode will take up the story where Cobb leaves it and handle the characters and plot as he thinks advisable. When he has finished the third episode will be continued by another and handled in the way he thinks best, and so on, until the entire picture has been completed.

Every author connected with the serial figures prominently in present-day American literature. Cobb is famous as a novelist, humorist, war correspondent and lecturer. He wrote "Back Home," "The Escape," "Mr. Trimm," "Roughing It De Luxe," "Europe Revised," "The Paths of Glory," and is the most noted contributor to The Saturday Evening Post. Recently he made a record by seeing more of the European war and interviewing more of the celebrities of all the nations involved than any other correspondent.

George Bronson Howard, highly regarded as a novelist and playwright, has a long list of works to his credit, among them "Scars of the Southern Seas," "Yorke Norry," "An Enemy of Society," and "God's Man," recently published and sometimes referred to as the greatest novel of the year. Of Mr. Howard's plays, "Snobs," "An Enemy of Society," and "The Red Light of Mars" are probably the most noteworthy.

Anna Katherine Green is the author of "Missing Page 13," "The Leavenworth Case," "The Filigree Ball," "The Millionaire Baby," "Marked Personal," "Band and Ring," "The Mill Mystery," "One of My Sons," "The Circular Study," "That Affair Next Door," "The Sword of Damocles," "The Woman in the Alcove," "The House of the Whispering Pines" and thirty more of the best selling mystery stories in the English language.

Reginald Wright Kauffman is the distinguished author of "The House of Bondage," "Shifting Sands," "The Sentence of Silence," "Jim," "Jarvis, of Harvard," "Francis Baird, Detective," and "My Heart and Stephanie." He is also well known as a dramatist and essayist.

Mrs. Wilson Woodrow is one of the foremost women authors of the day. Leroy Scott is the author of "The Shears of Destiny," "The Counsel for the Defense," and "Thirteen Washington Square," on which May Irwin's play is based. Thompson Buchanan is a noted novelist and dramatist and author of "Judith Triumphant," "The Intruder," "A Woman's Way," "The Rack," "Lulu's Husband," and "Our Daily Bread."

"Black Friday," "The Strollers," "The Lady of the Mount," "Nothing but Truth," and "Under the Rose" are the most successful works credited to Frederic S. Isham. James Frances Dwyer has written many popular novels. The stories of James Oppenheim, Louis Joseph Vance and the Williamsons are known to readers throughout the country. Wallace Irwin is best remembered as the author of the "Letters of a Japanese Schoolboy," whereas Zane Grey, as a novelist and a contributor to leading magazines, has won a large following. Among the writings of Hugh Weir are "The Conquest of the Isthmus," and "Miss Madelyn Mack, Detective."

The Universal Company is not yet prepared to announce the cast selected for the interpretation of this interesting serial, but it is rumored that Hobart Henley is being considered for the leading male part.

Triangle's Auspicious Opening

New Combination Presents Its First Program Before an Enthusiastic Audience at Knickerbocker Theater.

THURSDAY evening, September 23, will be memorable in New York motion picture circles because of the initial showing at the Knickerbocker theater of the first program offered by the Triangle Film Corporation. It was the occasion of an unusual gathering of motion picture men of every degree together with many notables of the amusement and financial world who were interested in seeing just what constituted a two-dollar picture program. While all were quite naturally on the qui vive as to the nature of the pictures they were to see it could not have been possible for anyone who passed the man at the ticket box to miss taking in the charming young women ushers in their "Triangle" costumes from the rather awkward triangle chapeau to the dainty pantalettes tastefully edged with triangle lace which peeped out below their dainty skirts. There was a novelty that added zest to the occasion.

As an assembling of motion picture men few occasions of recent date have equalled the Triangle opening. The company was represented by most of its officers and all of the employees in New York. Harry E. Aitken, president of the company, was there with his ever-present smile. Ad Kessel, Charles O. Baumann, Charles Kessel, also of the official board, were conspicuous and busy receiving congratulations. Henry McMahon, W. W. Powers, W. C. Toomey and others of the executive staff circulated freely about the lobby.

Daniel Frohman, of the Famous Players, was an early arrival. William Swanson, now one of the leading exhibitors of the country, held his own little reception between the pictures. Joe Engel, of Metro; Winfield S. Sheehan, of the William Fox Company, and a score of other prominent producers, exchangemen, exhibitors and state-right buyers were on hand to see what was to happen. What did happen seemed to get even the most calloused film buyer, for the spirit of enthusiasm undoubtedly infected them all.

Among the other notables were Otto H. Kahn, Metropolitan Opera House Director and member of the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Company; President Walter Frew, of the Corn Exchange Bank; President W. B. Joyce, of the National Surety Company; former Secretary of the Treasury Frank A. Vanderlip; Charles Hayden, of Hayden, Stone & Company; A. B. Leech, of A. B. Leech & Co.; Conte Gianni Bettini, Marquis Serra, Ignace Paderewski, Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester, Mr. and Mrs. William Randolph Hearst, George Barr McCutcheon, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Hitchcock, George Beban, Howard Chandler Christy, James Montgomery Flagg, Penhryn Stanlaws, Irvin S. Cobb, Rupert Hughes, Mr. and Mrs. William Collier, John Emerson, Edward Abeles and many others.

Unquestionably the honors of the evening went to the Griffith production "The Lamb," in which Douglas Fairbanks had the leading part. There were moments when the audience fairly rose with excitement, which is saying something for a "mere motion picture." "Dusty" Farnum had many admirers among the spectators and Raymond Hitchcock got laughs a-plenty from friends who were amused at his antics in the new medium of portrayal of his always amusing character. All in all, it was a successful opening.

The program offerings included "The Iron Strain," a five-part comedy-drama produced by Thomas H. Ince, featuring Dustin Farnum and Enid Markey; "The Lamb," a five-part comedy-drama, featuring Douglas Fairbanks and Seena Owen, directed by W. Christy Cabanne, under the supervision of D. W. Griffith; "My Valet," a four-part comedy of the Keystone brand, featuring Raymond Hitchcock, Mabel Normand and Mack Sennett and directed by Mr. Sennett.

Louis Reeves Harrison, always keen to discover the true motif of a production and equally appreciative of its dramatic values and of the skill of the players in giving the true interpretation of their parts, writes the following reviews of the three Triangle photoplays shown on the opening night:

"The Iron Strain."

Favorite material with dramatists since the day of "The Great Divide" has been the rude and vigorous hero of the plains and the mining gulch, a slumbering volcano of primitive passions, tempered at moments by the expansive atmosphere of his environment, especially when placed in contrast with an exquisite and over-refined woman of eastern culture. Good, old material, but very much over-worked and rather out of date. Athletic contests of all kinds indicate that the east has its full share of lusty men, the western girls of high cultivation are far more scarce. In spite of all this, C. Gardner Sullivan has created an interesting story and one which, while featuring symmetrical Dustin Farnum, brings to Enid Markey the opportunity of her life.

Handsome Farnum steals her and compels a marriage. Thereafter, in a most trying situation, the unwilling bride passes through a series of character transformations which compel attention because they are subtle revelations of a young girl's mind and heart. Every wavering and trembling emotion, every proud little effort to stifle a betrayal of feeling, is depicted by the accomplished interpreter with a skill and consistency little short of marvelous. Of course, there is an artistic triangle at work—author, director and actress are in combination to bring out some powerful effects—but the honors go to Miss Markey. The complex structure of woman's soul is put on exhibition as rarely ever before. The play is a pure, high comedy, verging on tragi-comedy at moments, admirably typed and acted, but it is Enid Markey's play.

"The Lamb."

A new star has appeared in the motion-picture constellation, a comedian who wins through interesting personality and delightful characterization, a decided relief from the raw crudities of acrobatic clowns. Whether or not he will continue to shine as he does in "The Lamb," Douglas Fairbanks has scored one decided hit—he suits the role quite as well as the role suits him, and it seems to have been especially created to display advantageously his striking peculiarities. He holds the eye so strongly, and without apparent effort, that he is the whole play from beginning to end. This is not to the detriment of the story. It is a snappy and highly finished product—the Griffith supervision assures that—it has an appetizing dash of bitters from Christy Cabanne, and the subtitles are marvels—they sound very much like the scintillations of a certain photoplaywright who graduated from the highest ranks of criticism.

Scene from "The Lamb" (Triangle).

The entire product is the result of a unified effort by many bright minds, a product trimmed smooth in careful revision. It scores with the audience as soon as it is well under way and grows in strength until it approaches intense drama, but it is always delightful comedy, clean, wholesome, not catering to low tastes at the risk of nauseating minds not primitive. There is nothing that could be called startling about "The Lamb," but it has a quiet strength all its own, a certain humanness that warms one to the story and to its leading character. It belongs to a class of moving pictures which firmly established the new art in popular favor, a story to charm all who watch it unfold on the screen.

"My Valet."

Derived from an old stage comedy, "My Valet," takes on new life under the skillful direction of Mack Sennett, who plays the title role. As in the original, there is a change of identity, the master swapping places with his servant when about to meet the girl to whom he was affianced in childhood. In Sennet's hands the story becomes a travesty, turning the weapon of ridicule upon affectations of the stage and the screen, and, as such, it rises above mere "rough stuff" intended to get a laugh from the unthinking. It runs along Keystone lines, associating closely the perilous and the amusing, with some acrobatic feats on the part of Raymond Hitchcock that are bound to startle those accustomed to see him in a different comedy role. He rises to the occasion, however, and dares all the reckless action expected of him.

Scene from "My Valet" (Triangle).

Hitchcock not only makes good as a screen comedian, but he dominates most of the scenes in which he appears, but he has a dangerous rival for first honors in shapely Mabel Normand. Mabel is too great a favorite to be lost in any crowd. Her fine training as a swimmer equipped her for the strenuous movement of athletic comedy, and she has a personality that wins without effort. When she is tied to a rock in the ocean by Fred Mace, a "heavy" in many senses of the word, she is such a veritable Aphrodite, "foam-born and sweet to the eye," that she stimulates admiration as well as laughter. She and Hitchcock make a fine comedy team, well deserving of further united opportunity.

TRIANGLE PLAYS CLOSED BY SUBWAY CAVE-IN.

The Knickerbocker theater, at Broadway and Thirty-eighth street, where are being shown the Triangle plays, was peremptorily closed by the authorities on the days of Saturday and Sunday, September 25 and 26, following the bad cave-in of the planking forming the temporary street over the new Broadway subway in front of the theater. The smash came just before the evening performance of Saturday. While the worst of the accident was on the side of the street opposite from the Knickerbocker, there was a bad sag directly in front of the house. On Monday the police closed the Broadway sidewalk in front of the house, but it was accessible to the public on Tuesday.

The Triangle officials got busy and installed a temporary box office at the Thirty-eighth street entrance, and the performance went on as usual Monday evening.

The three subjects showing at the Knickerbocker this week—"The Iron Strain," "The Lamb" and "My Valet"—will be released to exhibitors throughout the country on October 27.

J. P. McGowan, Adventurer

New Universal Director Has Had an Interesting Career and Unusually Wide Picturemaking Experience.

READING like a chapter lifted bodily from some romance of adventure is the story of J. P. McGowan, recently appointed to a position of prominence on the producing staff at the Universal City studios. Mr. McGowan was born in Australia, on the edge of the far-famed "ninety-mile desert."

J. P. McGowan.

At seventeen he was apprenticed to a line of freighters. After several trips he tired of the life. For a time his occupations were widely varied. Then he settled down in the cattle business, in which he remained until the outbreak of the Boer War.

He was in many of the biggest engagements, including Laings Neck, the relief of Ladysmith and Belfast, and was one of the escort that met Baden-Powell after the siege of Mafeking. During all this time he was a member of the Montmorency Scouts, and for valiant service was twice awarded medals. At the close of the war he joined a hunting party, beating the country north of the Zambezi under the leadership of De Villiers. After several months as cattle buyer for the British government he came to the United States with a cargo of high schooled horses for the St. Louis exposition. He remained to break horses for the Paterson (New Jersey) police.

Then Mr. McGowan went to Texas to raise cattle. The wanderlust was on him and he journeyed into Mexico, where he traveled for over a year returning to Minneapolis without money, but with a wealth of experience more valuable. Here he had his first stage work in a small part with Robert Mantell, and in addition was instructed to drill a body of soldiers for the first act of "Richard the Third." He was soon assigned to larger parts, which ended in his being made assistant stage manager. Later he joined Faversham in "The Squaw Man," but after one season returned to Mantell. Mr. McGowan played repertoire for a season, after which he was booked for the title role in one of Savage's "Devil" road shows, and on the heels of this he filled an engagement in "Paid in Full.

Mr. McGowan's first picture work was with Kalem, with which company, before going to Los Angeles, he played in New York, Jacksonville, Ireland, Europe, Egypt and the Holy Land. His rise in the film industry from that time has been rapid. Perhaps nothing he has done created more comment than did his "Hazards of Helen" serial in which Helen Holmes was featured. Later he joined the Lasky company, and from that concern came into the Universal fold at its Pacific Coast studios, where he is now directing.

The Life Photo Film Corporation has been sued by C. Haddon Chambers, British playwright and author of the comedy drama "Captain Swift," which was produced in pictures by the Life Photo corporation. The plaintiff alleges that he made a contract with the defendant company which provided that he should be paid ten per cent. of the gross proceeds from rental of the picture and that the company has failed to fulfill its part of the contract. An injunction is asked pending the trial of the action for an accounting, which has been brought in the United States District Court in New York.

FOX TAKES "JUST OUT OF COLLEGE."

William Fox has booked "Just Out of College," the Frohman Amusement Corporation subject, for twenty days in his New York City houses. Morse & Brill have booked it for eleven days.

Great Interest in Kalem Series

Marguerite Courtot, Who Will Be Starred in "The Ventures of Marguerite," Is Being Deluged with Congratulations.

THE new Kalem series of one-reel subjects under the general title of "The Ventures of Marguerite," featuring dainty Marguerite Courtot, in the process of production, is being handled at the New York studios of the company on Nineteenth street, and it is reported that unusual progress is being made with it. Three or four releases have already been completed and, after Friday, October 22, there will be a "venture" of the little Kalem beauty on the regular General Film program Friday of each week for an indefinite period.

Miss Courtot is easily one of the most popular screen stars now before the public, and when the announcement was made in the trade publications some time ago—and followed up with direct notices sent out by the producing company—the little actress was fairly deluged with letters from admiring friends expressing their pleasure that they were soon to see their favorite in a series of pictures especially planned and written for her. Miss Courtot has employed a social secretary for a long time and it is telling not a little of the secret of her popularity when one says that each of these letters from her admirers is answered.

"The Ventures of Marguerite" will picture the possible experiences of a typical American girl who has unexpectedly inherited a fortune which she feels "she has not earned" and has turned her personal attention to the careful distribution of a large portion of her wealth to alleviate conditions of misery and poverty which commonly escape the attention of organized charity.

Miss Courtot, the Kalem people say, was chosen for the leading role in the series of stories—each complete in itself—not merely because she happens to be a member of the Kalem acting forces, but because she has exceptional claims to being the typical American girl. That she is of the American type of beauty has been pretty well established by the fact that only a few years ago she was awarded a prize by a leading New York newspaper in a competition undertaken to decide whether girls of American or of European birth and parentage were the more beautiful; Miss Courtot won a prize.

The Kalem company has been unusually successful with its "sequence" pictures of the same type as "The Ventures of Marguerite," and with the new releases not yet ready are assured that "The Ventures" will surpass anything which it has turned out.

Static Flashes Ceases Publication

Newsy Publication, Primarily Devoted to Interests of Cameramen, Met Difficulties in Projected Enlargement.

THE discontinuance of Static Flashes, that interesting, little California newspaper, which for more than half a year has been issued as a club publication under the auspices of The Static Club of America, the Los Angeles cameramen's organization, comes as a surprise.

Under the editorship of "Capt. Jack" Poland, of Los Angeles, who for fifteen years has been a descriptive writer and publicity devisor, Static Flashes came forth each week as a newsy and interesting little sheet of four pages, telling about motion picture life, scene and incidents, paying particular attention to the achievements and doings of the cameramen.

It is understood attempts made to interest motion picture people other than cameramen in the publication with a view to enlarging its field of usefulness and the placing of advertising in its columns met with little or no encouragement because the paper had become so thoroughly identified with the Static Club as a club organ.

At a special meeting called September 15 by "Capt. Jack" Poland, the editor and manager, it was decided to discontinue publication. All outstanding indebtedness was paid by "Capt. Jack," the paper stopped with the issue of September 8, and all outstanding payments due on stock subscriptions unpaid were canceled.

This leaves Static Flashes in the unique position of a record of achievement. It is one of the rare instances where a newspaper ends its existence after many months of pleasantry, education and interesting news publication free of debt, with money owing to it for advertising and subscriptions. "Capt. Jack" Poland has returned to his original work as a publicity expert, descriptive writer and correspondent with a wider conception of the motion picture industry and also much added knowledge about where and how it is "easy to make money publishing a motion picture publication." This latter expression is couched in "Capt. Jack's" own words.

Thanhouser Ball to Be Gala Night

Will Be Led by Mignon Anderson and Morris Foster—Screen Stars to Attend.

EVERY year New Rochelle puts on its happy clothes and welcomes the screen stars of the east into its peaceful domains. The entire staff of the Thanhouser Film Corporation takes this little way of meeting their confreres in the industry and all the performers and directors in and around New York City also take this way of having a mighty good time. This year it will be a great ball, which will be held in Germania Hall New Rochelle, on Thursday, September 30. Needless to say all the Thanhouserites will be there, but so will the members of other companies. It is a peculiar fact that everybody has a soft spot for New Rochelle, but this is usually understood by those who know what a corking set of entertainers the Thansouserites are. They have made New Rochelle's an open door for those who seek good fellowship and congeniality.

The grand march will be led by Mignon Anderson and Morris Foster, the Thanhouser newlyweds. The ushers will be the Thanhouser twins and the flower bearer the Thanhouser Kidlet. Among those who are glad they will be there are: Pearl White, Harry Benham, Maud Fealy, Gladys Hulette, Jack Harvey, John Adolfi, Ethel Grandin, Paul Panzer, Louise Emerald Bates, William Garwood, Jack Noble, Sidney Bracey, Marguerite Snow, Mary Miles Minter, Wally Van, Edith Storey and numerous others. Arrangements are in the hands of John Lehnberg, the well-known character actor, who takes delight in providing for anything that gives pleasure to others.

Edwin Thanhouser and the full executive staff will be present to help the festivities along.

Fred E. Wright, Essanay Director

DIRECTOR Fred E. Wright for Essanay, who has just completed the production of F. Marion Crawford's six-act drama, "In the Palace of the King," through his own enthusiasm inspired all of the 5,000 persons who took part in the photoplay with individual responsibility.

Fred E. Wright.

Before starting work, Mr. Wright had worked out his plan of production to the minutest detail so that when he had his great host of players, there was not a single hitch, and he was enabled to push the play through in record time for such a stupendous piece.

"With the thousands of persons who were absolutely raw material I anticipated some difficulty in getting them all to do exactly as I wanted. They knew nothing, so were ready to follow instructions.

"I took every one into my confidence. So many times when a great crowd is used the director says do this and do that. The extras haven't the slightest conception of what the play is and why they are going through a particular action. Consequently they are indifferent and do not care about anything except to draw their pay. As a result of my talk each one became interested in the play and was inspired to realize his individual responsibility."

Mr. Wright put the Essanay studios and yard where the picture was being taken on a military basis. Guards were stationed everywhere and a hospital tent established with a doctor and trained nurses to take care of anyone who might receive a scratch or any little accident that is possible when handling such a large number. Expert costumers saw to it that each person was properly garbed.

Mr. Wright directed "Graustark" and "The White Sister" of Essanay's feature photoplays as well as many other important multiple reel dramas. He has had more than 20 years' experience in directing work seven years of which he was directing photoplays.

More Lubin Enterprise

The Producing Staff of the Famous Firm Has Been Enriched by Edgar Lewis and John H. Pratt—A Glimpse Into the Immediate Future.

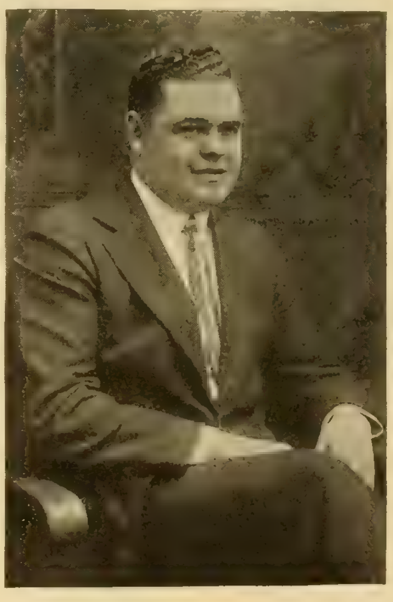
VIGILANT in their devotion to the good name of the Lubin picture Messrs. Ira M. Lowry and Ferdinand Singhi, the virtual rulers of the great plant, are exerting all their talents and all their energy to achieve triumphs of quality.

Lubin is a landmark in motion picture history. The founder himself was thousands of miles away; he was being lionized in San Diego when a representative of The Moving Picture World called at the famous place out in North Philadelphia. Lubin's is always a busy place, somehow suggesting hive, the flow of humanity inward and outward invites the comparison. There are new additions going up almost constantly, and even an absence of but a few weeks seems to show increased activity, new faces, bigger enterprises. Lowry and Singhi are tireless, no detail is too trifling to escape them, no project too ambitious to daunt their courage or dampen their enthusiasm.

Ferd Singhi.

Lubin photography, Lubin settings, Lubin realism, Lubin progressiveness need no comment. In the matter of direction a new departure seems imminent. The writer saw the man to whom the young rulers of Lubin's look for a successful new departure and he is undoubtedly a man worth while. The man is Edgar Lewis, no unknown name in the world of motion pictures; a man who laughs at criticism when he thinks it unjust and who profits by it whenever it is just. As to the justice or injustice he thinks himself well qualified to be the judge.

The writer saw Lewis just after his entry into the Lubin service sitting in his directorial corner in the new addition just at the right side of the general entrance. Lewis is a man who impresses you at once with his originality and his virility. He is radically different in every conceivable aspect from the common or garden variety of motion picture director. A good many of the directors assume the condescending attitude of the medicine man toward the plain Indian. Many commercial men who went into manufacturing some years ago were duly impresed by this manner and it is as a result retained largely to this day.



Ira M. Lowry.

"I have seen an awful lot of this world at its best and at its worst," said the new Lubin director, "and I have been connected with the theater ever since I was a youngster. I have made a brief excursion into newspaper life during my early career which you will readily see added not a little to my experience."

Mr. Lewis has produced great features, among them such film plays as "Sampson," "The Plunderer," "The Gilded Fool" and "The Bondman." He is now at work on his first big Lubin feature, "The Great Divide," with House Peters and Ethel Clayton. The other new director is John H. Pratt who, too, has an enviable record of film successes to his credit. Mr. Pratt has just finished his first Lubin feature, the scenario of which was written by Louis Reeves Harrison. The play bears the title "The Rights of Man." Richard Buhler and Rosetta Brice have the leading roles.

Another accession to the directorial ranks is Edward McKim, whose specialty are light comedies, in which D. L. Don is to be featured. Earl Metcalfe, who has been a leading man in the Lubin company for the last four years, is to become a director of Billie Reeves' comedies. A most valuable acquisition is Anthony P. Kelly, whose achievements as a scenario writer have made him conspicuous. Mark Swan and Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman, both of them well known and fertile writers, have also been added to the Lubin staff of scenario men.

Edgar Lewis.

LUBIN CORONADO PLANT OPENED.

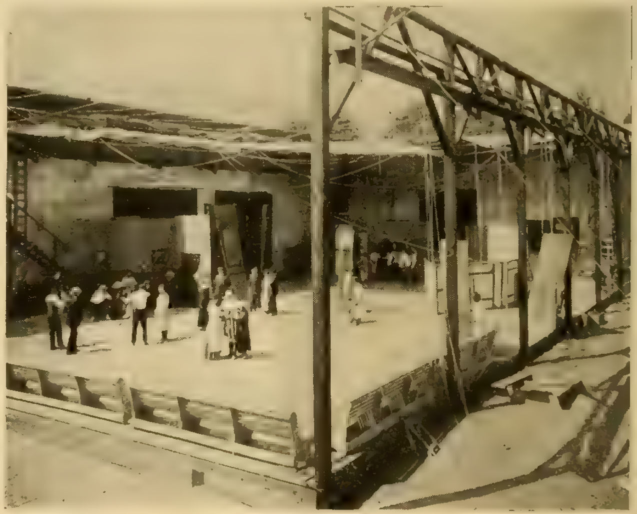
The latest addition to the Trans-Continental chain of manufacturing plants of the Lubin Manufacturing Company at Coronado, Cal., was formally opened and dedicated on Friday evening, September 24

Siegmund Lubin, president of the Lubin Manufacturing Company, was present at the occasion and delivered the address of dedication. More than five hundred of the leading business men and officials of Coronado and San Diego were present, including the Mayor of Coronado and the President of the San Diego Chamber of Commerce. After the dedication ceremony, Manager Wilbert Melville and his staff were hosts at a lavish entertainment, banquet and reception.

The New Western branch of the Lubin Manufacturing Company is undoubtedly one of the most complete and beautifully located plants devoted to the making of moving pictures on the Pacific Coast.



Outdoor Studio of Western Branch Lubin Manufacturing Company.

Situated on the edge of San Diego Bay, directly opposite the city of San Diego, it is surrounded by a scenic investiture which bespeaks the artistic taste of the one responsible for its selection.

The studio occupies some eight acres of ground. The office and administration building at one end, is of most attractive and pleasing design and provides ample quarters for the office force and laboratories. At the other end of the grounds is a structure running along the edge of the bay, thirty by one hundred and fifty feet and four stories high, designed of old English Castle style architecture. Between these two buildings are the garage, stage, dressing rooms, store rooms, wardrobe room and the various miscellaneous buildings.

The entire grounds are surrounded by an attractive and ornamental cement wall, fourteen feet high. All of the buildings, including the stage, the carpenter shops, dressing rooms, garages, etc., are of cement. In the carpenter shops, the latest woodworking appliances have been installed, and in fact, this is true in each construction department, so that the studio is practically self contained, being in a position to manufacture all of their new costumes, furniture, props and scenery. The comfort of the performers has not been neglected as the dressing rooms are all of the very latest types of cement construction and are provided with hot and cold water and shower baths.

When the new buildings have been completed it is figured that ample provision will have been made for the production of every style of motion picture under the most favorable conditions for directors and actors.

It is estimated that the total cost is something in excess of sixty thousand dollars and completing as it does a chain of Lubin studios which span the continent, it is a credit to the enterprise of the Lubin Manufacturing Company.

Gladys Hulette Joins Thanhouser

EDWIN THANHOUSER, "the wizard of New Rochelle," announces this week that he has secured for one of his stock companies Gladys Hulette, the erstwhile Edison star. Again, in making this engagement Mr. Thanhouser evinces his appreciation of legitimate talent. Miss Hulette, one of the most popular and youngest of leading women has been seen in such Broadway productions as the "Blue Bird" and "Little Women" and has supported DeWolf Hopper, Madame Kalish, Madame Nazimova and Henry Miller. She is known as one of the best screen subjects in motion picturedom and she asks no consideration for her tender years. She is gifted with wonderful magnetism which helps her get through her marvelous store of emotional power. Her face has been pronounced screen perfection, and her thousands of admirers will no doubt be glad to learn that she has joined the New Rochelle organization. Her first release will be scheduled soon.

Gladys Hulette.

This will set at rest all rumors which have been current, to the effect that Miss Hulette would withdraw from film work and accept an offer with one of the important Broadway managers.

Bannon Resigns From Edison

AFTER two years as publicity manager and special representative at the Edison Studio, Frank Bannon tendered his resignation, taking effect September 18.

Prior to his entrance into the motion picture field, Mr. Bannon held a responsible civil service position in the Department of Finance, where he gained the sobriquet of "Smiling Frank" through his genial disposition and happy faculty for making friends and keeping them.

Frank Bannon.

But he responded to the call of the pictures and, accordingly, resigned from his post in the city service to become proprietor of a motion picture theater in the heart of New York City. After three years' success as an exhibitor Mr. Bannon was anxious to probe into the manufacturing end of the business and, therefore, made connections with the Edison Company as assistant to Manager Plimpton.

Mr. Bannon has made the acquaintance of numerous exhibitors throughout the United States and is known as the "Edison Booster" wherever he visits. Due to his untiring energy, Edison nights have been established in many prominent theaters and, through his efforts an arrangement was made whereby the Edison Company could show its current releases to exhibitors on one night each week at the Claremont theater in New York.

Frank Bannon is an athlete of no mean ability, having won many trophies for his skill as an oarsman on the Harlem River and as handball champion of the Y. M. C. A.

BARD LEAVES FOR EXTENSIVE TRIP.

Arthur Bard, vice-president and general manager of the Associated Film Sales Corporation, left for the west last week to meet the exchangemen of the Associated who have already been releasing since September 13, to make arrangements for additional territory to them, as they find that exhibitors in uncovered territory are clamoring for Associated Service. The Associated, although a new factor in the film circles, has made such tremendous strides that it is making its competitors sit up and take notice. The manufacturers releasing through the Associated are working their forces day and night to meet the demand which is sure to come for their product as soon as exhibitors have seen some of their first productions. Although they have at all times twelve weeks' advance releases made.

In preparing the programs, Mr. Bard has been careful to make a fair division between dramas and comedies and between one and two-reel subjects. Also he has confidence in the Associated multiple-reel features.

Famous Players Gets Durland Academy

Will Convert 56th Street Structure Into Studio at Once—Laboratories Located Elsewhere.

THE Famous Players Film Company has leased for a number of years Durland's Riding Academy in 56th street, New York City, which, according to the terms of the contract signed this week, is immediately to be turned into a motion picture studio. The work of reconstructing the building, which is famous the world over as the rendezvous of New York's most exclusive set, is already being pushed with the greatest possible speed in order that the producers may begin work at the earliest feasible moment on the big feature productions which they are contemplating.

Ruins of Famous Players Film Company's Studio on West 26th Street, New York City, Destroyed by Fire Sept. 11.

The leasing of this building for motion picture purposes by the Famous Players is the result of the efforts on the part of that organization to find within the heart of the city a suitable substitute for the 26th Street studio which was destroyed on the night of September 11th by the most disastrous fire in the history of the industry.

The mammoth structure is ideally fitted for the requirements of the motion picture producer. The huge riding ring, with its high peaked roof, is larger than the drill floor in the old Ninth Regiment Armory. The roof being supported entirely by steel girders, spreading from wall to wall, the full sweep of the whole floor is available for stage purposes. which makes possible the presentation of the largest interior scenes that the most spectacular of motion pictures could require.

The stalls which line the former arena will be ripped out and the space devoted to the storing of scenery, for which it is ideally suited. Practically the entire second floor of the building is given over to lockers, dressing rooms and shower baths, which will be perfectly adapted to the needs of the stars and other players, with but minor alterations, which are already being made.

The front portion of the building, which was formerly used for offices and dwelling purposes, is being renovated to accommodate the executive and directorial staff of the film producers. The mechanical work on the films themselves, that is, the developing, printing, assembling and cutting, will not be done in the new building. Immediately after the fire all this work was transferred to the American Film Laboratory in 90th Street, of which Edwin S. Porter, treasurer and general manager of the Famous Players Film Company, is vice-president. The old academy will be devoted simply to the staging of features and to the executive needs of the company.

The acquiring of the academy building will in no way affect the plans of the company for the erection of the largest studio in the East upon its newly purchased tract of ground on Marble Hill, New York, where thirty-one city lots are to be devoted to the uses of the producers.

The Famous Players studio at Yonkers, which has served as production headquarters since the destruction of the 26th Street building, will continue to serve in that capacity until the completion of the renovation of the academy, when it will be temporarily abandoned.

Selig All-American and Neutral

Unwarranted Statements in British Publications Brings Forth a Statement From the Selig Polyscope Company.

SEVERAL obscure newspapers in the British Isles, according to press clippings received in this country, have been publishing undeserved and unjust attacks on American manufacturers of motion pictures. One or two of these publications have rather broadly intimated that the American motion picture industry is controlled by "the enemies of the Allies," and such expressions as "their growing power in England," etc., are liberally interspersed in the text.

While it is not thought that these more radical newspapers will influence thinking and more broad-minded people, yet it may be just as well to correct some of the unjust assertions given publicity in one or more of these newspapers, particularly for the reason that a number of individual manufacturers of motion pictures are singled out for targets for personal abuse.

The Selig Polyscope Company, for example, long ago announced the policy of strict neutrality on the subject of the unfortunate conditions of affairs in Europe, and that policy has been strictly adhered to. No pictureplays have been put in production that would bear in any detail whatsoever on the warfare in Europe, and no such pictureplays will be released in the future.

It may be well here to outline the personal history of the controlling heads of the Selig Polyscope Company in order that no future misunderstandings so far as this particular company is concerned, can occur.

William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, was born in Chicago, Ill., on March 14, 1864. He is a son of the late T. J. Selig. William N. Selig was educated in the Chicago public schools and was united in marriage to Mary H. Pinkham, of Stockton, Calif., on September 7, 1900. He early became interested in photography and invented many appliances used in motion picture photography. He has been actively engaged in the motion picture business since 1896, and is president of the Selig Polyscope Company of Chicago, Ill., Los Angeles, Calif., and of London, England. He was the first motion picture manufacturer to make a pretentious historical photodrama. "The Coming of Columbus;" was the first producer to introduce wild animals in photoplays. He financed expeditions of Prof. Frederick Starr to the interior of Africa, Korea, Japan and the Philippines; he financed the expeditions of Dr. E. B. McDowell to Chicago, Africa and India; also financed the expedition of Emmett O'Neill to the Amazon River in 1912. He was presented a medal in 1912 by Pope Pius X for his pictureplay, "The Coming of Columbus."

Mr. Selig is a member of the Presbyterian Church; in politics is a Republican; belongs to the Masonic Fraternity and his home is in Chicago, Ill. He has probably accomplished more than any one person in making interesting scenes of the British possessions known to the American people through the mediumship of motion pictures. His business interests in England are extensive and he frequently visits the British Isles. At the time war was declared in Europe Mr. Selig was in Paris, France. He remained in France and in London for a number of weeks, and in both countries he donated liberally to the Red Cross organizations.

J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of the Selig Polyscope Company, was born in Paris, France. For many years he was prominently identified with Pathe Freres before joining the Selig Polyscope Company.

PIERCE STILL FIGHTING.

Carl H. Pierce, special representative of Bosworth, Inc., producers of "Hypocrites," is still making a fight at Columbus, Ohio, to get a judicial review of the decision of the Ohio censors barring that picture from the state, but up to this time he seems to have made no headway in that direction. He has succeeded in stirring up considerable public opinion in favor of the production and several clergymen have noticed the picture and its teachings favorably in their pulpits. At a dinner party held at the Virginia grill, Columbus, Friday evening, September 24, among those present were: Max Stearn, Owner Majestic theater; his sister, Miss Bertha Stearn; Joseph R. Hague, Ohio State Journal; Mrs. Joseph R. Hague; John M. McCardle; Miss Alice Coon Brown, dramatic editor Ohio State Journal; Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Willard, of the Hayden Clinton Bank; Mr. and Mrs. Arthur C. Johnson, Columbus Evening Dispatch; Mr. and Mrs. Raper, of the same paper; J. A. Maddox, manager of the Majestic; Mrs. J. A. Maddox.

A NEW TRAVEL SERIES.

A NEW and most complete travel series is being put out by the Paramount Company which they have entitled "The Paramount Travel Series."

They are illustrative of South America and are advertised as equivalent to a "personally conducted trip" through that country.

There is every evidence that care and thoroughness have been bestowed on this series; they have already proved attractive where some of the first numbers have been shown and without doubt interest will increase as the additional installments come along. A brief description of the first set of twelve is here given:

Travel Series No. 1.—Take an exciting aeroplane trip over the Florida keys; sail on beautiful Indian River. See how society amuses itself at Palm Beach, and have a good laugh at an animated cartoon.

Travel Series No. 2.—See thousands of queer Pelicans on Pelican Island; watch them haul in the pound net at Daytona and visit quaint St. Augustine; see the negro boys at Kingston harbor diving for coins. Another clever comedy cartoon.

Travel Series No. 3.—It is interesting and educational to watch the catching of huge sea turtles and the capture of the giant sea cow off the Florida coast. It is entertaining to learn how sponges are secured. A clever cartoon.

Travel Series No. 4.—Ride over the Florida keys on the Flagler railroad and have exciting sport catching the lordly tarpon at the Long Key Fishing Camp. Become acquainted with picturesque Key West. Exciting experiences of Paramount cameramen told by a clever animated cartoon.

Travel Series No. 5.—Tour Jamaica in a high-powered car, and see picturesque Roaring River Falls and watch the native boys gathering cocoanuts. In addition, a cartoon.

Travel Series No. 6.—It is interesting to participate in the deck sports on board the S.S. Kroonland, en route to South America; see historic Moro Castle and Havana, and visit a prosperous tobacco plantation. Cartoon.

Travel Series No. 7.—Watch the initiation, by Father Neptune, of prominent business men crossing the equator (a riot of fun). Become acquainted with native life on the island of Jamaica. Comedy cartoon.

Travel Series No. 8.—Take a complete trip from the Atlantic to the Pacific via the Panama Canal. See the locks open and close, the famous Culebra Cut, spillways and control stations, as they are today. Timely serious cartoon.

Travel Series No. 9.—Introducing South America, become acquainted with the Pan-American Union in Washington, D. C.; then visit beautiful Santiago de Chile. (A particularly attractive release.) Timely cartoon.

Travel Series No. 10.—See the varied modes of transportation in Santiago and different scenes of native life; attend the efficiency drill of their famous fire department. A clever serious cartoon.

Travel Series No. 11.—Approach Antofagasta, Chile, by water and observe in the harbor the myriads of gulls and sea lions. A visit to Valparaiso, the chief Chilian seaport, and a sojourn to its famous beach resort, Vina Del Mar, will appeal to you. In addition, a cartoon.

Travel Series No. 12.—This week we land at Mollendo, Peru, and ascend by rail to Lima, the capital, and are thoroughly entertained by seeing the unusual, interesting sights there. In addition, another timely animated cartoon.

To Interest the Schools.

For the purpose of arousing interest in the schools, the Paramount Company, in their very beautiful descriptive circular, issue a form of letter calling the attention of teachers to the series, enclosing descriptive matter which may be read to the classes, together with information as to where the pictures can be seen. A continuous plan of a weekly installment is intended to keep alive the interest, while giving helpful lessons of travel, also teaching geography, both physical and commercial, history, zoology, biology, etc. There is an advantage here that schools may use the pictures, or the nearest exhibitor has both chance and method provided for him to work in conjunction with the schools to their mutual good.

The very attractive descriptive circular issued by the Paramount Company covering this series is one which they would do well to see that it gets into the hands of the school principals even if it has to be done through the exhibitor; much of the success of this series from an educational standpoint depends upon getting the matter before the right people; this is a series that will be more successful if this method is applied, rather than distorted press views. The whole should be too good to be subject to the contortions of every local editor. It is an interesting and intelligent series.

THE EDUCATIONAL PICTURE.

By the Rev. E. Boudinot Stockton, S. T. B.

The Pittsburgh Schools.

THE Board of Education of Pittsburgh, Pa., have been for some time seriously considering the formal adoption of the moving picture as a part of their regular educational system. The subject, according to one of their members, has been thoroughly thrashed out to a favorable conclusion at different meetings, and the board has now reached the point where the sole remaining obstacle to be overcome is that of finances. None of the schools are equipped for projecting the pictures and only some of them for the use of the stereopticon. The city fire and insurance regulations also add considerably to the cost. It is believed, however, that these obstacles can be surmounted in the near future, and the board hopes that by the time they are ready and able to use the pictures that the "manufacturers and exchanges will be able and willing to provide them with a supply of pictures that can be used regularly and profitably."

The Bell Telephone Company.

The ideas of the Pittsburgh board are not altogether theoretical, but are based on practical experiments that they have been making for some time, principally through the aid and co-operation of some of the large business corporations of the country who at their own expense have exhibited pictures illustrating various industrial processes and commercial courses in connection with the curricula of the schools, the latest of these being the Bell Telephone Company, who supplemented the high-school course in electricity with an exhaustive series, made by them, illustrating the principles, and application of electricity in the manufacture and use of the telephone, scientifically, industrially and commercially.

SEITZ TO WRITE NEW PATHE SERIES.

George Brackett Seitz, adapter of the "Exploits of Elaine," "The Galloper," and many other of Pathe's most successful releases, has been commissioned by the firm to write a series of photoplays under the general title of "Who's Guilty." Following somewhat the same plan as Pathe's very successful series "Who Pays?" the stories will be serious studies of life as it is and each will end with the query, "Who is guilty for this social crime?" In many incidents it will be found that we, the state, are responsible for the mistake of an erring boy or girl. Mr. Seitz has just completed the first of the series which is entitled "Grist of the Mill."

MARION LEONARD IN KNICKERBOCKER FEATURES.

Marion Leonard, who needs no introduction in filmdom, has been engaged to appear regularly in the releases of the Knickerbocker Star Features. This will not interfere with the company's policy of putting Broadway stars in regular service as it is their intention to feature some male star in each of these releases with Miss Leonard supporting him in the leading female role. Before joining Knickerbocker, Miss Leonard scored an enviable screen reputation with the Biograph, Reliance and Rex companies. The first appearance of Miss Leonard in the Knickerbocker Star Features releases will be in "The Dragon's Claw," released October 13.

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard.

New Club Dedicated to the Moving Pictures.

WELL, the Film Club has been launched, with a large charter membership, including men, it being the desire of the founder, Marion Howard Brazier that both sexes be represented, especially on the board of management, and it looks now as if that popular and genial manager, J. Arthur Eslow, of the Universal Film Exchange here, will be the treasurer. At the adjourned meeting Sunday the 19th by-laws will be adopted and all the officers elected. In addition the club will have as guests Mary Fuller and Irene Fenwick. The former is at Cape Ann rehearsing in "The Heart of a Mermaid," and Miss Fenwick is also here in the flesh in "The Song of Songs," at the Tremont, and better still is in the films at the Boston in "The Spendthrift." But to go back to the club. It has started auspiciously and its possibilities seem many. It is proposed to invite David W. Griffith to become an honorary member for his work in giving us "The Birth of a Nation," which happily is still here at another theater as a result of the purchase of the rights by a syndicate of producers.

Some form of courtesy will be extended to Rose Coghlan when she comes here in October and celebrates her 50th year on the stage. We have not yet seen this celebrated actress in the films, but if memory serves, she entered the field in "The Sporting Duchess" with Lubin. Good idea for some of the Hub managers to resurrect this film and give us a sure-to-be treat. About a year ago I saw an item about Gertrude Coghlan, daughter of the late Charles Coghlan and a niece of Rose, relative to her, entering the Selig ranks. How about this? Did she weaken?

Mary Fuller has had a chance to test our "Rock bound coast" to the extent of nearly losing her life, for "the breaking waves dashed high" during rehearsal last week and knocked her clean off the rock, much to the dismay of the summer colony at Gloucester, where she has been the attraction, posing as a mermaid. This, you know, made it impossible for her to use her extremities—hence the S. O. S. call and the rescue. I wonder if the cameraman caught this thrilling scene—not down on the bills.

Mrs. Ayer wisely selected Mary Pickford in "Rags" for the opening of her Exeter Street theater on the 13th when a large and fashionable audience gathered to inspect and enjoy the several improvements, notably the balcony which has been extended, done in white and gold, and made additionally attractive by the boxes, four in all, and spoken for during the season. Wisely, Mrs. Ayer has retained Jarvis Jocelyn, as pianist, as his music is in good taste, never instrusive. He also plays the fine organ when occasion requires, and he never indulges in freak instrument playing. For the first two weeks Signor Allessandro Alberini, the Italian baritone opera singer, renders solos, and in place of an additional soloist, as formerly, Mrs. Ayer has the lights turned on for a brief intermission to relax and chat. "Bold Emmet" was one of the short reels and introduced us to Sidney Olcott, who made an excellent lover. There were other features of which space forbids mention. At this theater no horse-play or offensive scenes of any description are permitted, as for instance that hideous reptile, the snake, which should never be shown on the screen. An evening was entirely spoiled recently by the sudden introduction of a boa constrictor, winding through bushes near the heroine. Despite the inconsistency in having so large and long a snake in a peaceful country scene, where nothing of the kind exists, except in the cage of a passing circus, I somehow felt like screaming and a woman near me fainted, while there were audible "Ughs." It was my pleasure to call attention to this particular film to some of the managers who were unanimous in disapproval and declared that if they booked the film that part would be eliminated. Then I went to the General Film headquarters to see some try-outs and was again horrified to see a ten foot snake creep toward three defenceless women in a rural New England town. It was the sort of a reptile one sees in Southern swamps and at zoos, but not around here. Any M. D. will tell why the sight of a snake is disastrous to prospective mothers, and this fact alone ought to stay the hand of those responsible for such inflictions. If they want to scare females like those referred to, a mouse headed their way might have the effect of scattering them. If man did not spring from apes we know that women spring from mice.

I went to see Jack Barrymore in "The Incorrigible Dukane," and how we did laugh! A north shore belle sat near and expressed dismay on seeing Stewart Baird playing the villain, for he is one of the Back Bay set here and has hitherto played the fine lover before her eyes, when a member of the smart "Amateurs." She evidently did not see him in "The Moth and the Flame," in which he made his first film appearance here.

We had Beverley Bayne here Sunday at the Boston in a pretentious play, "Hearts and Roses," and for the life of me I fail to see why her new opposite, Darwin Karr, does not fill the bill. He is a good looker, is manly and certainly knows how to make love equal to Francis X., whom we learn she is to join with the Metro company. The villain was not an attractive man. Among the several short reels on that night was "Her Bargain," introducing again that wonderful actor who captured us in "Fifty Years Behind the Times," and whom I have already mentioned in these letters. "A Stranger in the Valley" was a human play with an excellent moral and many touches of nature.

We rather enjoyed "The House with a Thousand Candles," though differing in many details from the book, and a bit too melodramatic in the library scene toward the close. Why spoil a picture by showing an eye through an aperture in a wall? It is inartistic and unnecessary. I thought the outdoor night scenes wonderfully beautiful in the moonlight with the exterior of the big house gradually being lighted with candles. It was a joy to see Forrest Robinson as the servant, for his art stands out no matter what the character. The Boston is giving us some rare films and the comedy is clean there, with a series of base ball sketches called "You Know Me, Al." This week we have Emily Stevens in "The Soul of a Woman" and Irene Fenwick in "The Spendthrift," also a distinct novelty made in the Hub called "He couldn't Make His Brain Behave," the work of a clever local cartoonist, Ed Payne, featuring Katherine Ward the head usher who has adorned the speaking stage and is a very capable young woman. The scenes and participants are amateurs here, and well known to patrons. Mary Pickford appears twice and there is always the best music obtainable by the Fadettes, with an extended repertoire.

Esmeralda was fairly good with "Little Mary" and Charles Waldron, whom we so enjoy, playing opposite. What a fine face he has for the camera, anyhow! Waldron made his first real hit here in "The Fourth Estate" some seasons ago and his latest one was in the film "When We Were Twenty-one" with William Elliott—and that was some cast!

Naturally I am enthusiastic over "The Blindness of Virtue," if only for the great lesson it teaches to parents and young girls approaching womanhood. It is several sermons rolled into one, and if there were more flesh and blood clergymen like the Rev. Harry, who was a good sport with it all, and more young men of the fibre of Archie (done admirably by Bryant Washburn), we would not have to borrow trouble over life's temptations for our own. A young girl was heard to say, "Well, a feller with a dimple like his would get away with any girl, and I don't blame Effie a bit." The point of the play was lost upon her.

Such old-time actors as George Fawcett are always greeted with pleasure. In "The Majesty of the Law," put on at the Park, he has a part befitting his ability, but I felt that the hero was unnecessarily saddled with one too many alleged crimes. It was rubbing it in too hard, for he was such a fine chap. On the same program was "The Heart of Jennifer," with Hazel Dawn and our old friend James Kirkwood, who is proving his versatility as director and actor.

When "Marrying for Money" comes here many will turn out, for it was written by young Pezet, son of the Peruvian Minister and former artistic director of our Toy theater, a Harvard man, and clever amateur actor. Furthermore, he captured a Back Bay girl and will wed soon. Associated with him in the production was Gilbert Miller, son of Henry.

One of the best of the Vitagraph two-parts in my opinion is "The Millionaire's 100-Dollar Bill," shown at the Boston, and well done by Leah Baird and Leo Delaney. "Neal of the Navy" is making a big hit at this house, for it is alive and up to date. "When a Woman Loves" hit our fancy, for we have much admiration for dainty Emmy Wehlen from Australia, though quite Americanized and happy here.

How Kansas Censors Work

Methods of Judging Productions Revealed by Members of the Board—Will Enforce the Law.

"WE HOPE that within a short time all the films entering Kansas will be undergoing censorship without friction, so that schedules of the actual cost of censorship will be available to the next legislature, and that it can change the law to provide for a smaller fee."

Thus spoke W. D. Ross, superintendent of public instruction of Kansas, and in that capacity under the law chief censor of the moving picture films, to a World representative.

"The law requires my department to censor all films before they are exhibited in Kansas houses; it requires the exchanges to exhibit the films to us, and to pay a fee of $2 per reel before the inspection of the films is begun. The attorney general has advised us that we are violating the law if we should inspect films before the fees are paid.

"I have recognized that a new law of this sort must be put into operation with some care and judgment, and have not strictly enforced the penalties for showing uncensored films. Ample notice has been given that all films must be censored, and we are gradually drawing the lines tighter. I am sending a man over the state now, to notify exhibitors that they run the risk of prosecution if they show uncensored films, and to inform the county attorneys of their duties to prosecute exhibitors who show such uncensored films. This representative will also secure the co-operation of the local educational bodies with which we are in touch, the school boards and the teachers, in the work of checking up the exhibition of uncensored films.

"This department wishes to co-operate in every possible way with the exchanges and the exhibitors, for the smooth operation of the censorship law. The law requires that the exchanges exhibit to us, that they provide the facilities for showing the films. However, we have offered to provide a room in the state house for the exhibitions, and to supply the electric current for operation. We will supply an ample corps of inspectors to care promptly for all pictures offered for censorship.

"The legislators did not know how much it would cost to maintain the censorship. We cannot tell now. Apparently, $2 a film is more than is necessary. But if it is necessary to keep inspectors on the road to discover offenders, and to arrange for local assistance in enforcing the law, the surplus will quickly be exhausted.

"There is apparently a misapprehension as to the rules of the censorship relating to drinking scenes and representations of immorality. We do not eliminate scenes nor reject films merely because they contain pictures of men and women drinking or drunken, women smoking, people in improper attitudes, or anything of that sort. If such incidents are essential to the plot and story, they are retained; but we frequently shorten them, leaving in enough to carry the plot."

The correspondent of the Moving Picture World listened with interest to these statements from Mr. Ross. The correspondent had previously talked with Miss Carrie Simpson and the Rev. Festus Foster, the two principal inspectors, and had watched them work. Miss Simpson had had dramatic experience; she and her brother had operated a moving picture house in Kansas City, Kan., and she watched the pictures from the critical standpoint of their dramatic interest and effectiveness. But her decisions were according to the regulations of the censorship board, and in line with the tastes of the public.

One remark of Miss Simpson, with reference to a certain group of pictures, was particularly enlightening as to the methods of the inspectors.

"Personally, I don't like that sort of picture, but the public does, and there is nothing objectionable except from an esthetic point of view."

This statement was the more interesting since it was almost word for word what so many exhibitors themselves have said, in many cities, to the correspondent.

The Rev. Festus Foster is a clergyman whose wife is a prominent clubwoman of Kansas. It happened that "Oil and Water" was one of the films he was inspecting. He commented, with a view to and exposition of the censor's attitude, on many scenes. There was drinking by men and women, drunkenness, cigarette smoking by women, much loose life of the stage, displayed. This and that, he mentioned, were basic facts in the plot and development of the story, and were passed without hesitation and without a cut.

"It is not our purpose to keep such scenes absolutely from the knowledge of Kansas boys and girls," he said. "But we object to prolonged scenes of drunkenness and lewdness which have no other purpose than the exploitation of such pictures. And, too, we do not want them to gain a false view of life, particularly of the immoral aspects of life as occasionally shown in the pictures."

Mr. Foster commented on the fact that of the 2,500 subjects inspected since the board was established, only 30 had been rejected. And of these 30, three had been passed by the appeal board, all three being 5-reel productions. Most of the cuts had not been eliminations of entire scenes, but reductions of the length of scenes, leaving enough to carry the story.

Mr. Foster was to leave September 20 on his road trip. He will arrange for a complete census of the moving picture houses of Kansas, and the exhibitors, and will spread the ruling that all films henceforth must be censored. He will arrange with the local educators for watching the local houses, and with county attorneys for prosecution of exhibitors; a fine of $25 may be assessed for displaying an uncensored film, with $100 fine for a second offense.

There is no disposition to cause unnecessary hardship and prosecution—but the board says the law must be enforced.

Mrs. C. J. Evans, a member of the local school board, who has frequently been called upon by Mr. Ross to inspect pictures, will assist in inspection while Mr. Foster is on the road.

The board has inspected 4,000 reels since April 1, the income therefore having been $8,000. The inspectors have been paid $3 a day, and other expenses of administration have brought the total expenditures to probably less than half the receipts. In August, for instance, the receipts were about $2,000, the expenses $700.

The exchanges pay all expenses of exhibiting the films. They make arrangements with the local exhibitors, paying about 50 cents an hour to the exhibitor, who pays the operators and the other costs of running the films. Paramount, World, Metro, Universal and some Pathe pictures are being exhibited at the Cozy, where Lew Nathanson has fitted an upstairs room especially for the purpose. Miss Simpson is now inspecting there—she is provided with a table and a telephone. Miss Simpson also inspects at other houses when exchanges make arrangements for exhibition elsewhere. Mrs. Maude Gandy gives over the Aurora for exhibitions before the inspector every morning, the Mutual, General, Kleine and Pathe being usually shown there before the Rev. Mr. Foster. The Gem also receives some commissions, as do other houses, the inspectors being informed that films are ready—and the money on hand—and going where they are needed as they are at liberty. The exhibitors usually are at hand, to give the inspectors the benefit of their experience and acquaintance with the public taste and the exigencies of moving picture making and exhibiting.

As many as 51 subjects have been inspected in one day in the Cozy's special room. Fewer, of course, can be handled in the other houses, where exhibitions are in the public room, from which the public is excluded during the exhibitions before the censors.

HELEN HOLMES TO BE FEATURED BY UNIVERSAL

There are few people at work before the eye of the motion picture camera who are more deserving of the title "daredevilish" than Helen Holmes, heroine of a hundred narrow escapes and prospective heroines of as many more, who has recently joined the forces of the Universal Film Company at their Pacific Coast studios.

Miss Holmes' first work in pictures was with the Keystone Company. Then she went to the Kalem Company's studios. It was while she was with this company that the "Hazards of Helen" came to the fore with Miss Holmes playing in the title role of Helen.

To attempt to enumerate the daring feats which this young woman has successfully performed before the camera is to attempt the impossible. It is one of the "things that cannot be done." However, she has not yet finished them, for with the advent of her former director, J. P. McGowan, into the Universal fold, Miss Holmes was also asked to join and continue her popular work for the benefit of the patrons of that program.

TWIST IN TOWN.

The many friends of Stanley Twist will be glad to know that he is back in New York, having recovered his health. Mr. Twist was taken suddenly ill while in the employ of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company in New York and went to the coast to recuperate. Just what his plans are he would not divulge, but we expect to hear more of him very soon.

Mr. Wunderle.

A. G. WUNDERLE, of the Wyckoff, Brooklyn, sends in a new program and this letter:

> The enclosed program submitted to you gives a fair idea of what I offer my patrons. Will send another which I feel will show a big improvement on this one. The Wyckoff theater is a large house for 600 seats and has every comfort to make the patron's visit a pleasure. Business is as good as the best season could guarantee with few exceptions
> You will no doubt disapprove of the ALWAYS 5c. However, the time of the year, sharp competition and building up the patronage of a new theater are, in my opinion, strong reasons for the price at the present time, and also for the programs I offer.
> Your opinion will please me, as it generally enables me to see my faults more clearly, and then your faultfinding method is very encouraging, too.

We like Mr. Wunderle, but even in our affection we cannot and will not admit that the price for a new house MUST be five cents. Why? S. E. Wall, down in the Ohio valley, took a decrepit house and saved it by making the price ten cents and worth it.

Five cents will get some people. It will keep other people away. Why not get the ten cent crowd and let the other fellows get the jitneys?

Even if we did not know that Mr. Wunderle was in Brooklyn, we could guess it. A line tells about the open roof and adds that this is protected with a wire netting so that stones thrown will not hit the patrons. In Brooklyn it seems to be the juvenile idea of humor to throw stones and otherwise useless fruit and vegetables at open cars and into windows and up to date the police have made no arrests. It does not speak well for the town we sleep in, but we still have hopes of being able to catch and murder the youngster who handed us the last tomato we got.

Mr. Wunderle has too much type on his front page.

He also has too much type on his second page.

The third page carries as much excess matter.

The back page is overcrowded.

And Mr. Wunderle has three Country Stores a week. He gets no space for chat. He little more than lists his reels. It is all he can do. It would be better to change the space to a running comment on the bill, cutting down the display type and still getting a display. Compare these two advertisements: The smaller is from the Opera house, Shepherdstown, W. Va. It can be more easily read, tells about as much, and takes only one page against two.

It is not the blackness of the type nor yet its size that counts. It is what you get read.

Good.

The Motion Picture Exhibition Co., of Newark, sends in a four page folder for comment. It is very nicely done in green on primrose. More; it is well written. The back page supplies copy that can be used by others. It runs:

> We are living in a pictorial age. Evidence of this confronts us on every hand. The camera tells the truth, but the Moving Picture Machine does more—it places on your mind the whole story in a way not soon to be forgotten. And we show them so that they are a delight to the eye, filling an evening with pleasure and enjoyment.

The company, by the way, specializes in entertainments for churches and schools. When there are more of these it will be easier for Exhibitors to get what they want to work school and church schemes with.

Good Lobby Display.

Here is a cut of the lobby of the Star theater, Louisville, that shows an unusual use of cut-outs for lobby display. It will be seen that not only the regular cut-out is employed but that a big sheet has been cut up to increase the display. This takes a little time and costs a little money, but it lasts longer than the day and brings in more than it costs, so the balance is all in favor of the house. The addition of a backing helps not a little, but is not wholly necessary.

If Only.

First we looked on the front page and then we turned to the back. We looked inside and then outside again, and it was not until the second trip inside that we discovered (in eight point type) that it was the Grand theater, Lewiston, Idaho, that had taken Ralph Ruffner's comprehensive catalogue form. They cut down the space to a very neat vest pocket size and they get out a really good looking issue, but this is the first—and we hope the last—program we ever saw that hid the house name. That should be given on the front page where "facts" now runs. If this is done, it will serve as a good model for a calendar for features.

Now Has a Name.

The Stamco Post is the name of R. B. Wilby's house organ. This is formed of Strand Amusement Co. and the names of the Plaza, Orpheum and Strand theaters. Oddly enough, we offered, hors concours, the Post as a title. Mr. Wilby writes that it gave him a fine mail list and got written up in the papers twice, so he thinks the ten dollar prize was well invested. Mr. Wilby is hitting his stride, as, for example:

> ENTIRELY FOR YOUR INFORMATION.
> It has been our experience a few times in the past to see some picture in which one actor—actress, usually, if you insist—played a part in a manner that so appealed to us that we wanted to know her name, not only for the mere information, but that we might watch for future appearances. And it has usually been our experience that nobody around the place could furnish the name, even though that name may have been shown at the beginning of the picture. Maybe that has happened to you, so—
> Beginning on Sunday the cashier and doorkeeper of each theater under the management of the Strand Amusement Company will be furnished with as complete a cast of each picture shown in that theater as is available. They will be able to give you any information you may wish concerning the names of players—or if they can't give it, a telephone message to the manager will so change things that they will. This is being done entirely for your information, and will be continued just so long as patrons of the different theaters seem interested in it.
> Along the same lines, we will be glad to give you any information we may be able upon any picture or player—whether those to be shown at the theaters controlled by us or not. For this information either telephone 227 and ask for Mr. Wilby, or address him through the mails.

This is a lot better than in the old days when the manager did not seem to care a whoop if you ever found things out. Now managers know that it pays to play personality, but few have gone at it so completely and comprehensively, but that's the Wilby way. He is coming, so watch.

Perhaps with Music.

Perhaps the press man of Piper's Opera House, Virginia City, Nev., wrote this for a song; at least it scans like the chorus of a best seller from "tinpan alley." It works on the reversed type idea:

Charley Chaplin

With his little beany, his breeches and big feet
He's at Piper's Thursday—come early for a seat.

CHARLEY CHAPLIN

Punch him with a stick—lam him with a brick
Poor fellow—an auto knocks him upside down

NI⅃ꟼAHƆ YƎ⅃ЯAHƆ

And when he glides, those left foot skids
Tickles the kids. Churn him up—mix him up

CH⊳RLШ⅄ CHAP⅃IN

He's funy—gets the money—never smiles, tis true
He safely leaves that all to you

CHARLEY CHAPLIN

We all will roar and yell for more
At Piper's on Charley Chaplin night.

For Ministers.

L. W. Barclay, of the Grand, Johnstown, Pa., sends this self-explanatory letter:

> We are enclosing herewith a copy of a letter we mailed out to every minister and priest in the city, enclosing complimentary tickets, and asking them to come to the theater to view "Sins of the Mothers." We are thinking of doing the same thing next week, when we will run Fox's "Dr. Rameau." Would like to have your opinion of this stunt, which we have done more as an excuse for the newspaper stories than anything else, and also hope that some of the ministers at least may make some comment after viewing the picture.
> Would appreciate your inserting the name of the Grand in your "Advertising for Exhibitors" column with the request that exhibitors mail sample programs.

Please note the request for programs.

The letter to the ministers reads:

> Rev and Dear Sir:
> We are enclosing herewith complimentary tickets to the Grand theater, and extend a cordial invitation to you to attend this theater as our guest Wednesday morning or afternoon, Aug. 18th, to witness the production described on the enclosed herald, "Sins of the Mothers." We would be pleased to have every minister in Johnstown and vicinity as our guest on that afternoon.
>
> The Grand theater attempts, in arranging its program, to secure those feature productions which present clearly a moral that may accomplish good among those who witness them. We believe "Sins of the Mothers" to be a production of this type. We are inviting every minister in Johnstown and vicinity to view the production as a critic, and we would appreciate your acceptance, and any comment you may desire to make at the box office.
> We believe in the future of the motion picture industry as an educational factor. We believe it to be yet in its infancy. We also believe, however, that in making productions of the type of the "Sins of the Mothers," the producing companies are taking a long stride in the right direction. A film of this kind appeals to us as a sermon, striking home its moral with tremendous effect, because of its highly entertaining feature. By depicting real life upon the screen, showing the inevitable punishment that is meted out to wrong-doers, we believe that the motion picture theaters of the nation may become a tremendous power for good.
> We would deeply appreciate your opinion of "Sins of the Mothers," a picture representative of the type of which we speak, and once more press our invitation to be present to the showing of the picture the afternoon of Wednesday, Aug. 18th.
> Sincerely yours,
> GRAND AMUSEMENT COMPANY.

The stunt brought them nearly a column in the papers, but we hope that Mr. Barclay will report the result in full.

Still At It.

The Third Street theater, Easton, Pa., is now making its specially drawn cartoon work double. It offers ten tickets for any idea handed in at the box office and which is used by the artist.

Better.

The Orpheum, Gardner, Mass., has changed the appearance of its weekly program, the display matter being paneled. It costs a little more, but it looks a lot better. Where it can be arranged to have the boxes stand, the higher cost comes but once.

Mailing Lists.

The Cherokee, Louisville, a suburban house, sends in a four page program with the explanation that usually they use a part of the space for house stuff, though the copy sent is all display advertising. The reason seems to be that they are making a special effort to boom "The Goddess," but we think even that should not be permitted to detract from the regular house chat. Talk of the house that is always there beats talk of a film that will play a few Monday nights. There is nothing better than a fair proportion of well written house stuff to make for permanent business instead of the one-night kind.

They ask what we think of mailing lists. We do not see how any house, city or suburban, can afford to be without one, and the better the list the better the chance of making business. The program that comes by mail is more apt to be looked for and read than the one that is shoved under the door, and the list is available for emergent use as well. Every house should have a general mailing list and have this still further efficient by dividing into classes.

V. P.—P. B.

The Strand, Atlanta, has adopted the vest-pocket and pocketbook leaflet, with the catchline, "Put this in your pocket or your purse." It is a four pager 2¼ by 4 inches and sometimes used for a full week but also worked for to day specials, such as "Should a Mother Tell?" the latter card carrying on the front a huge question mark and "Should a Mother—" the turn over to page two adding: "eat her heart out in silence to protect those near and dear to her when, by betraying her inmost secret, she could save herself?" The particular value of so small an issue is that it will be accepted and carried where a larger folder would not be preserved. The house sends some photographs, but there was no protection for the prints and they cannot be reproduced. One shows the lobby so full of paper that it is not possible to discern the entrance. This is by no means to be commended, particularly when it is otherwise such a handsome lobby.

An Indoor D. K.

The Raymond Amusement Company, Ocean Park, Cal., sends in a set of "screen sheets." These are virtually indoor door knob issues, for they are provided with holes by which they may be hung up. The sheet is stiff card 2¾ inches wide by seven long. Each issue is a different color and each carries ten or twelve attractions. On one is a line—good enough to be made permanent—that reads, "A collection of Rosemary screen sheets makes a valuable reference." This encourages the fan. Another last line offers to bring them in sets of twelve. It is a catalogue of coming attractions and not a program. Mr. Raymond writes:

> We are mailing this in the envelope we use for our mailing list which we have built up from requests only. This has taken more time than if we compiled a list from a directory but every name is a distinct asset.

A mailing list even taken from a telephone directory, is seldom fifty per cent. efficient and it pays to take a little more trouble to get a proper list and keep it right. It has been some time since we last heard from the Rosemary. We hope they make more frequent calls.

Trouble Ahead.

The Lubinews, the house organ of the Lubin theater, Cincinnati, announces a series of lessons on photoplay writing and adds: "Any persons who follows the lessons about to be issued in these columns can write a scenario by following the directions." It cannot be done that way. They can write something that looks like a script, but there must be brains of the right sort back of the instruction. Presently a lot of patrons will be blaming the Lubin for getting them into trouble.

Good Work.

Leon Brick, of the Regent, Buffalo, N. Y., is doing some splendid work in a series of editorials he is writing for his house program. Each issue carries some point vital to the playgoer and important to the management. In time he will have one of the best educated audiences in the country and they will know enough about conditions to require a lot of coaxing before they will desert to other houses.

Sad.

The saddest blow of all happened in Philadelphia when they pasted up parts of fourteen keystones into a five reel, gave it a new name and some eight sheets, duped a negative from what must have been duped positives and put it out. It is doing a lot to kill the Chaplin craze.

Here's Steve.

We know that those who have been helped by the Steve Farrar ideas will be sorry to learn that the hustler for the Casino, Eldorado, Ill., mourns the death of his wife. Steve writes that he does not feel much like writing advertisements but he is going to start in again and turn out some stuff we can reprint.

Mr. Reid Has Moved.

Edmund Reid, who used to conduct a theater at Milledgeville, Ga., has taken on the Palace in Barnesville, in the same state and has started his unique one page daily paper. It is a surprising thing that no one has followed Mr. Reid's lead in this daily. It is about the best advertising that can be done for the price and it is something that is looked for every day. In any town where there is no local daily this form of paper can be made to work hard. It is a sheet of common news fifteen inches wide by eleven deep, which gives five standard columns. The middle columns carry the house display advertisement whole, the other columns are mixed house and general advertising and local paragraphs. The "ears" on either side of the title carry the weather forecast and the cotton quotations. Some of the four page sheets carry a lot of want advertisements. The daily issue is even better and six daily issues will cost little more than one four pages. We are glad to see Mr. Reid's issue. He has been silent for so long that we have wondered what he was angry about.

With a Band.

P. R. Matson, of the New Crystal, Flandreau, S. D., gave a band concert to launch "The Diamond from the Sky." The band marched from the house to the school grounds, where the concert was given, and while the populace listened to the band, the house people passed literature. Mr. Matson packed the house and more than got back the cost of the band, so that the serial was most successfully launched and practically without cost. That is the way to figure advertising. Do not count the cost of the band, as a total cost. See how much it will bring and perhaps you'll find that the band is free.

DIAMOND FROM THE SKY

Go Ahead.

George Editor Carpenter says that presently he is going to print a good ad. scheme in Real Reels that has Marcelled whiskers. We do not wear them waved on here, but we'll listen, anyway. Meantime George Editor suggests to managers that some day they take a day off and attend their own show in their own house as a patron and not as owner. Did you ever try it? We beat him by putting it in Picture Theater Advertising before he got it in Real Reels. The idea is to look over the house, not with pride, because it happens to be yours, but with the critical spirit of a patron. You never get the busted hat rack or the seat where a broken shade used you for a spotlight screen. Get in and sit down and try to figure how a patron looks at things. It may cost you a little money, but you'll be glad you did it, because it will not cost you the money that lost patronage will.

Playing to Railroad Men.

L. H. O'Donnell, of the Grand Opera House, Washington, Ind., sends in a form letter sent out for "The Hazards of Helen." As this series is to be extended, the letter will be of service to others at division points. Mr. O'Donnell explains:

> We herewith enclose you copy of letter which has been mailed to all the conductors, brakemen, engineers, firemen and the office forces of both the B. & O. S. W. Railroad and the E. & I. Division of the Evansville & Terre Haute Railroads. As this is division headquarters, it gave us more than three hundred names. We hope by doing this to increase the interest in the Kalem, "Hazards of Helen," series.

The letter itself reads:

> Dear Sir:
> We are desirous of entertaining yourself and wife or lady friend, next Wednesday evening, Aug. 18th, and ask you to accept this invitation to be our guests on this occasion.
>
> The program will include an episode of Kalem's great Railroad Scene, "The Hazards of Helen," featuring "A Race for a Crossing."
> This episode in the Hazards of Helen series features Miss Helen Holmes. If she were working for a real railroad she would undoubtedly be receiving the highest salary paid to any telegraph operator in the country, for she is continually engaged in saving enormous sums of money or else preventing the destruction of railroad property. In this episode she is instrumental in saving the United States mail contract for the railroad, undergoing some thrilling adventures in doing it. An agent of a rival railroad opens the waste cock on the tender of the engine, and when the mail reaches Lone Point, where Helen is stationed, there is no water. Helen takes the mail on a new gasoline handcar, and there ensues a race to meet the limited train at the junction on time. She makes a crossing just a few seconds ahead of a fast express, and reaches a drawbridge just as the agent of the rival road is raising it to prevent her crossing. The car shoots down the incline of the rapidly-raising bridge at express train speed, and Helen pulls into the junction with the mail just in time to catch the limited.
> Each Wednesday we show one of these features and each feature is a story in itself. In addition to the above our regular program will be shown and the new vaudeville act of Sheridan and Williams, comedy entertainers will complete the evening's entertainment. You will kindly sign your names in space below, present same at box office and receive tickets FREE.
> THESE TICKETS ARE NOT TRANSFERABLE.
> Very respectfully yours,
> PALMER AMUSEMENT CO.
> By L. H. O'Donnell, Manager.

In the original, the third paragraph, commencing "This episode," is done in six point type, five em indent on both sides, the remainder being in reproduction of typewriting, though frankly a printed form and not a personal letter. In the lower left hand corner is a form to be filled out by the recipient. This is merely a double line for the name of the recipient and his companion. The name of the latter would seem to be non-essential and might be omitted. It is preceded by the word "Pass." A better form would be:

> Grand Opera House
> Mr ...................................... and one
> are invited to be guests of the management on
> August 18, 1915.
> Please fill in and exchange at the box office for
> two tickets.

In the same way the invitation should read "Yourself and a friend," or "yourself and lady," and not the rather awkward "lady friend."

It would be well to allude to the fact that all of the stories of this series have been written by Edward W. Matlack and Frank Howard Clarke, both in the employ of the Pennsylvania lines at Pittsburgh. They gained a reputation as writers before they took up this series and it is because they are authors as well as actual railroad men that the stories are both interesting and accurate.

Perhaps You.

The Majestic, Grand Junction, Col., in its Movie Fan, seeks suburban business through theater parties. It runs this notice:

> PALISADERS NOTICE!
> Read the Movie Fan, choose the program that appeals to you. Get up a theater party. Phone to the Majestic. Tell us how many are in your party, and we will gladly hold the seats in reserve for you. Then make arrangements with I. W. Penny of the Valley route auto line. Mr. Penny will make you a rate. Can you find a better way of spending an evening? A joy ride to Grand Junction and return with a high class show sandwiched in. Try this! Do it now.

It should be possible to make theater going a lark to the people out in the country. Work up the idea. The Movie Fan is slowly getting to be like a real newspaper, but it never will really and truly be one so long as they use so many sizes of body type. It is hard to read, though worth reading for ideas.

Surprise Packages.

The Lehigh Orpheum, South Bethlehem, Pa., sends out a program each week, which has already been praised, but almost every week the envelope contains some other piece of advertising; sometimes a herald, but often some surprise idea. It makes people open the envelope with pleasurable curiosity as to what is inside "this time." It is an idea that might be followed to advantage by others. A late envelope carries a card announcing Sunday and then:

> NO, NOT BILLY, BUT ONE OF THE SWEETEST LITTLE GIRLS YOU HAVE EVER SEEN IN AN EXCITING FIVE-ACT MODERN DRAMA. IT COSTS A "JITNEY" TO ENJOY "SUNDAY'S" COMPANY FOR NINETY MINUTES.

Here's One.

Fanwood, N. J., recently held a community picnic for the purpose of getting the townsfolk together. One of their advertisements, the advertising being done by A. Rutgers Nielson, Jr., was printed on a paper drinking cup. It is a little late for picnics, but think how greatly appreciated a drinking cup would be at any public gathering. Do not give them in advance, but distribute them on the grounds with the program for the week and some house talk. You cannot get the picnic night, but perhaps some other evening they will come.

Inquiries.

Questions concerning the writing (but NOT the marketing of) photoplays will be replied to without charge if addressed to the Photoplaywright Department and accompanied by a fully addressed stamped envelope. Questions must be typewritten or written with pen and ink.

Questions as to the financial standing of concerns or the probable markets for specific or certain styles of stories cannot be answered.

In no case and under no circumstance will any manuscript or synopsis be handled and if sent will be returned without reply.

A list of addresses of producing companies will be sent if the request is made direct to the publication office, but not where request is made to this department.

More of It.

HERE is another man who thinks that all he has to do to sell scripts is to write them. He says:

> I must confess that at the end of two months, after I have written and submitted perhaps ten scenarios, which have all been returned to me, I feel somewhat discouraged. Hard work does not deter me in the slightest degree. If I felt confident that I had any natural ability along this line, I would wade through any amount of hard work to gain even a mild degree of success.
> One trouble with which I am cursed and, I believe that a great many beginners must suffer from the same affliction, is an excess of enthusiasm. To explain: when I conceive an idea which, on second thought, appears to be a good one, I wax enthusiastic and am not satisfied until I get it down on paper and rush it off for judgment. Now this causes haste and, on looking over my rejected scripts, I find many places where a little more care and deliberation would have worked wonders.

The correspondent adds that he is a private secretary. We take it that he did not learn stenography to the point of proficiency in two months, and that it required a longer time than that to gain speed on a typewriter, but after writing ten scripts he feels a sense of disappointment that he has not sold.

For the love of Mike! What does he think photoplay authorship is that it should require so brief an apprenticeship? What gives any otherwise intelligent person the idea that photoplay scripts are things to be tossed off carelessly and gobbled up eagerly by grateful editors? And if this were the case, what would the product be worth that required so small a degree of skill in its mastery?

It is practise and experience that counts. It is practise and experience, resulting in adequate workmanship that is paid for.

Even his own letter convicts him. He gets ideas. They are great. He rushes them down on paper. Then it doesn't look so good. He does not yet know the difference between good and bad plots, and yet egg candlers spend more than two months learning how to tell good eggs from bad. He does not know how to get his idea adequately on paper, yet artists practise outline drawing before they try to fill in with color and learn anatomy before they attempt seriously to draw figures. He finds many cases where more care would have greatly benefited his script, and yet he is "somewhat discouraged" because this work that he knows to be imperfect was not bought.

Just so long as the outsiders think that a manufacturer of photoplays is a cross between a charity aid society and a drunken sailor, so long will the percentage of rejections rank about with the percentage of purity of certain advertised soaps.

Script writing, is a business; a serious and important business to those who approach it properly. Be businesslike if you would make it your business.

Clarity.

The best script tells its story so clearly that any director can accept the facts and go to work on it. If your story is logical only or the leading character wears a pointed beard, do not forget to explain that the character wears a pointed beard. Do not suppose that the director will see that to be logical the character must dress his whiskers this way. It may be clear to you, but the director may merely find it illogical without being able to tell why it is.

You may know that your heroine makes love to a tramp because he is a splendid specimen of manhood and she admires his splendid proportions and virile strength. If you merely mention that Mary makes love to the tramp, how is the director to know that the tramp wears a clean shirt and looks like a prosperous banker on a camping trip? The word will conjure up the usual vagabond. The admiration will be illogical and the story will be regarded as foolish. To you the story sounds all right, because you have a mental picture of the tramp, but the vagabond, the editor and director will see will be a vastly different sort of fellow.

It does not matter whether the special point is a certain sort of beard or a certain sort of man. You must make your points fully clear or the story will not get over and if it does go to production the result will be muddled and most unconvincing. The director will do his best, perhaps, but that will not be very good if the story is so told that many little points seem to him to be obscure. In his effort to correct these points he will render the story still less convincing because his changes will not be in line with the author's mode of thought but his own, no matter how anxious he is to follow the author.

Coppering.

If you go to the theater and see a very funny story about a lady barber, do not hurry home to write another very funny story about a lady barber. Let the lady barber suggest a lady truck driver and the story is more apt to be new.

If you see the triangle story of the faithless wife, the noble husband and the faithless friend, go home and write a story of how a girl saved the lady from the ever-willing faithless friend, so not write another story with the same triangle. Let what you see and what you read suggest stories to you, but not the stories you have seen or read.

Expense.

When a producer decides that a story will be too expensive, he does not mean, as a rule, that he is not willing to spend that much money, but that in the case in hand he feels that he will not get an adequate return for the money paid out. He might not be willing to pay forty people for a twenty-foot mob scene where he would be glad to pay for eighty in three hundred feet of another story. Try to make your costly stuff more than pay for itself, but this does not mean stringing the twenty-foot scene to three hundred without real reason for the extension.

Naming a Player.

Three scripts came to a certain studio one day last week. Each one was titled "Charles Chaplin ———," the blank representing the rest of the story. They were written for Chaplin and on rejection there had not been changed.

Don't do it in the first place, but if you have done it, change the name before you send the script to any other studio.

Reading Up.

"Does it help or hurt me to read current fiction?" is the question asked by a recent inquirer.

As a general thing it is necessary and helpful to read current and standard fiction; not for their ideas but for the ideas these plots may suggest. A story should not be read and then developed into a play, but much reading will give the author a knowledge of how others have handled certain situations and will show what the general run of situations are. These, to the inventive mind, will suggest other situations and different treatments of the same situations.

A baseball pitcher who refused to see other pitchers work because he might copy their style of pitching would be foolish indeed. The really good pitcher is the one who studies all the others and then adapts a style of his own, possibly based on the work of a dozen others but his own because a new combination.

The author who reads properly and intelligently does not reproduce, but creates new ideas from old themes. Reading Romeo and Juliet will not give him the Montagus and Capulets in modern dress. It might suggest to him the story of the faithful nurse, brought down to date and adapted to our present day. It must be remembered that each of the characters in a story has his own life history and that perhaps some of these will be fully as interesting as that of the characters in which they are but mere figures.

Read the story of Lear in Geoffrey of Monmouth's History of the Kings of Brittain then read Shakespeare's play. The poet did not invent the character of Lear. He did immortalize it where but few know the old English black-letter.

An author does not, out of a perfectly blank mind create his plots. An author is one who, from the material he has stored up in his mind, invents an entirely new arrangement of existing facts. He might, for example, combine Lear and Romeo and present a story that is neither of these gems. He would not rewrite either, but with the facts of the two stories, plus imagination, arrive at a story perhaps equal to the originals. Nothing can be produced from nothing, but just as the seed, placed in the ground, germinates into the oak or the weed, so does the idea, once planted in the fertile soil of the inventive mind become something larger and better than it was.

Store your mind with as many facts and incidents as possible, but do not merely reassemble them. Re-create them into something that is your own.

The Opening Punch.

William Lord Wright said considerable when he recently stated that the punch in the opening scene of a play was a promise to the spectator that must religiously be kept. The opening punch must be the keynote and not the climax of the story.

Values.

Diamonds cost more than coal because they are more beautiful and more uncommon. If diamonds could be mined as coal is dug, they would not have their present value.

It is the same way with photoplays. It is the uncommon that commands the price. Not "anyone," but any writer can work the triangle, the Enoch Arden, the Raffles or similar theme. Almost any batch of scripts will show these and the other standbys. For that matter, any company can dig into its own records and get similar themes well developed. These are not bought because they have already been purchased, not once but many times. They are the coal of photoplay production and can be sold only at ton rates. But diamonds are more scarce and so they sell by the carat when they can be found. It pays to dig for diamonds, rather than for coal, if you can find the right pits.

It does not pay to turn out a lot of conventional plots. They do not sell to advantage when they sell at all. It pays better to keep on working until the plot becomes a masterpiece and to offer only these. It takes more time to evolve a reasonably new idea and to get it into proper technical form, but it pays better whether the face of the check or the pay per hour is considered. And in addition to the purely financial price there is the added value of establishing a reputation that counts for something among editors.

Don't get a reputation as a manufacturer of junk. Become known as a writer of good stories.

A Wrinkle.

When writing your rough draft, leave four to six lines of space between scenes in which to note added scenes if required.

Asking Advice.

Some writers wonder why editors are not more generous with suggestions and advice. They do not know that it is because most editors have been tried beyond their patience. It is no part of an editor's business to advise concerning scripts sent to another concern, and yet letters are written weekly asking what should be done when a script is not returned by another company. Of course these inquirers are very new to the business. They do not know the ropes. They write and send out to the first address that comes into their heads or which has been suggested by the school that supplied them with a list. We know one company that has been dormant for several years and non-existent for the past few months, but the initial letter is such that it stands close to the head in an alphabetical list. Scripts are sent to the live addresses and returned. Then comes the name of this concern; the script is sent there and that is the last that is heard of it. Instead of applying to the postoffice the author writes some other company and wants to know what to do. Naturally the editor gets tired of replying.

In the same way an author will sit down and write an editor that he is preparing a script for that company, but how should a certain scene be written. If the editor replies he is liable to get other inquiries; as many as eight inquiries have been sent in on a certain story just because the first question was replied to. And the editor knows that his company cannot buy the story when it is done. You may never have transgressed, but when you are refused information you might have better reason to expect, blame the refusal of the editor on the boob novice and not the editor himself.

Selig in the Market.

Here is a catalogue of the Selig wants contributed by Clarence Frambers, its editor of photoplays:

> Our market is not brisk but we would be glad to consider one and two reel wild animal dramas and comedies (preferably single reel) in which wild animals figure prominently and not simply walk through a scene. The plot must be woven about wild animals, not pets, and the story must warrant their use without making them do impossible stunts. We have nearly every kind of animal there is in captivity.
> We also wish one and two reel western stories of a thrilling nature suitable for Tom Mix and when writing such stories authors should bear his characteristics in mind.
> We also wish two reel society dramas of unusual strength and also three reel stories. Most writers pad their stories into three reels but in plot their stories are only sufficient in strength to warrant two reels. Our plays run on an average of forty to sixty scenes to a reel.
> We only solicit material from experienced writers who can put the work across as we want it. A study of our productions will help to determine the character of scenarios we desire. We are anxious to consider stories from amateurs but unfortunately the majority are so poorly written and the technique so wretched that the real worth of the story is concealed. We pay the highest prices and give screen credit to the deserving and decisions are promptly rendered.
> I am always glad to comment or suggest changes where same is thought advisable and while it takes more time and patience in the long run it may develop a new field of writers that will eventually benefit our company.

Bluffing the Editor.

Don't try to bluff the editor. You cannot, as a rule, and it only makes you look foolish. A script very evidently by a novice and bearing a "serial number" in the eleven hundreds is not at all convincing, and yet four figure serial numbers are not at all uncommon though few of the professional script writers are beyond the first thousand. When the editor sees a five figure serial number on a script that is not even properly bound, he knows that the author is unusually stupid.

Another fatal bluff is the elaborate but home made binding. Scores of authors bind their sheets most elaborately, but with the crudity of inexperience. The average script does not need to be bound and the real authors seldom get beyond a backing sheet of cover paper. But the cover paper is properly printed up and does not carry much printing. When the amateur goes to the printer he writes too much copy. Little more is needed than the name and address and the type of story.

Of the same piece is a long list of scripts accepted but not by the receiving company. Now and then the editor will find one or two titles that he knows were written by others. If he does not he can guess that the list or part of it is "phony" and will turn the script aside. All that interests him is the availability of the author's work for his own company.

But perhaps the worst bluff of the lot is a letter that follows the script into the studio a couple of days later that says, "Please return my story "Tricked by Fate" if you cannot immediately make use of it, as the Gump Company is very anxious to secure this." That is supposed to bring quick action by making the editor anxious to beat the Gump to it, but he has seen the trick worked before and he calls the bluff by returning the script.

Don't bluff—you cannot.

Eastern Wants.

For the benefit of several inquirers, the form letter being sent out by the Eastern Film Corporation, 1 McKinley street, Providence, R. I., is repeated here:

> We would like to have you submit at once, the best two-part comedy stories of which you are capable, together with exceedingly strong high-class four, five and six-part feature dramas, suitable to be placed on any program.
> We have facilities of every kind necessary for the production of good pictures and desire clean, fast moving, light comedy stories featuring comedians of the well dressed type. We intend these pictures to be an offset, if possible, for the numerous poor slapstick comedies on the market and therefore wish to secure stories containing laughable situations, but devoid of vulgar business or grotesque make up.
> Tom McEvoy, Dan Mason and Wilfred Clarke (of "What Will Happen Next?" vaudeville fame) are among our leading comedians and we number among our stock company sufficient pretty girls and clever ingenues to suport these players.
> We desire four, five and six-part feature dramas of novel and original construction and handling big themes.
> These stories should be of the intensely dramatic human interest type, in which it will be possible to feature well known players both of the legitimate and moving picture stage.
> We have at our command extremely beautiful and artistic locations, both land and water, and can secure the use of everything desired in the making of great productions, whether it be a steam yacht, millionaire's home or a flying machine.
> Kindly submit your material to Mary Murillo, Scenario Editor, and we can assure you that the utmost consideration will be given and the highest possible prices paid for acceptable stories.

With Improvements.

John Preston Walker, of Carbondale, Ill., has an improvement on the auction sale. He sends out his scripts with a letter that reads:

> I submit herewith a copy of "The Misunderstanding." If you wish the play, please make offer. If you do not want it, please return it in the inclosed stamped envelope.
> I am sending a copy of this play to several companies. The highest bidder gets the play. No company will be permitted to bid the second time.

That last clause is a wonder. No company will be permitted to bid a second time, so they will bid as high as possible the first time—IF they bid at all, but scripts are not purchased at auction and the man who tries to auction off his goods gets no market at all.

It is strange how many beginners hit on the auction scheme. It is remarkable that they should suppose their scripts to be worth competition in purchase.

Please Note.

Just remember that your old theme is not going to look any more novel to an editor because it is the young American correspondent who falls in love with the Princess Pumperkickel, doomed to wed the aged Prince Paul. The plot is just as old as though it concerned the love of Johnnie Jones for Susie Smith who must marry Schultz, the aged brewer as a personal favor to her family. And remembering that—don't do it, please.

Two of a Kind.

Pretty girls and good stories are alike the better for having good forms.

Both Ways.

It is better to write one good script than a hundred poor ones, but you must write a hundred poor ones before you can do one good one.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such article has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. You may be surprised at the number yon cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 105.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

> What are the supposed advantages of the meniscus-bi-convex condenser system as against the plano-convex? Can you use a meniscus lens in front with a plano or bi-convex next the arc? What is the E. F. of a lens? What is its B. F.? What effect on the E. F. of a condenser has altering the distance between its factors?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 99.

The Roll of Honor on Question 99 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; John Solar, Watertown, New York; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, New York; A. T. Weiss, New Orleans, Louisiana; M. Nosti, Tampa, Florida; F. V. Poyser, Manitoba, Canada, and C. A. Dann, Toronto, Canada, whose reply was most excellent, but came too late to be considered for publication.

I have been unable to select any reply suitable for publication, therefore will endeavor to answer Question 99 myself.

Reply to Question No. 99.

By F. H. Richardson, New York City.

The Question:

What is it causes condensing lenses to discolor? What are the effects of discoloration of condenser lenses as applied to the result on the screen? Is it better to use a spot of large diameter or of small diameter? Explain, in detail, your views as to this highly important matter.

The Answer,

The cause of discoloration of condenser lenses is due, as I understand the matter, to the addition of certain ingredients used to "whiten" or to "clarify" the glass. Discoloration is of three kinds, viz., green, which is natural and due to the iron in the glass, purple and yellow. It is present in almost all grades of condenser lenses now available, and there seems to be no relief in sight. The effect of discoloration is a diminution of light brilliancy.

A large spot is unquestionably the better, by reason of the fact that, where a large spot is used the outer, or impure edge of the light is not projected to the screen, and, moreover, where a small spot is used, unless the operator gives his light very much closer attention than the average operator does give it, there will be at least an occasional discoloration on the screen.

It does not necessarily follow that the large spot will cause loss in illumination, because, unless the condenser system be such that a small spot will be projected to the aperture with the arc a given distance from the lens, then the small spot can only be obtained by pulling the arc back farther away from the lens, in which case you will lose at the arc just as much as you will gain at the spot, because, the arc being further from the lens, the lens will not collect so much light—do you get the idea? The argument is, I think, wholly in favor of the large spot, though, of course the large spot can very easily be carried to excess. A 1½ inch spot is, I believe, about right, and ought to be adopted as standard.

Some claim a small spot is necessary when using alternating current. I should like to see this matter discussed in the department. I am not at all sure that it is true, nor, on the other hand, am I prepared to dispute the proposition.

Brother Smith was the only one of those answering question 99 who was wise enough to see that the large spot does not necessarily mean any loss in illumination.

Several Things.

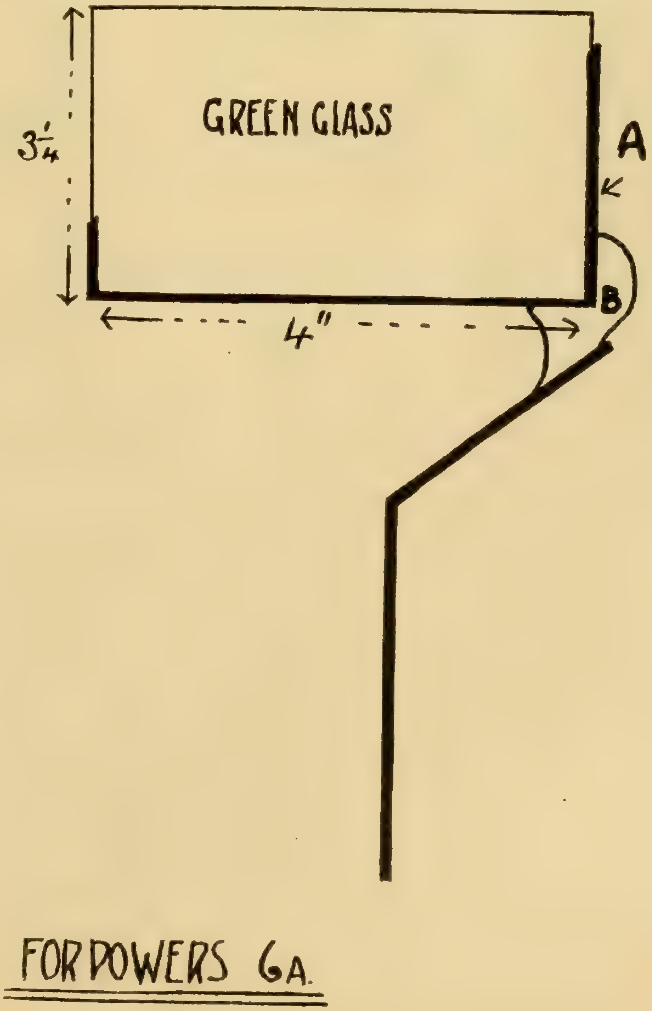
Vancouver, British Columbia, submits two excellent sketches and writes:

> This is the first I have written to the department and I trust it will not be introduced to the waste basket. I desire to submit a little scheme I have adopted with a view of preventing eye strain from the glare of the spot. It is designed for the Power's Six-A. In submitting this I trust I am not handing in something that has been in use since the days of Mr. Adam's grandfather. (Well, that is a little further back than I have heard up to date. Ed.) I have never seen anything exactly like it before. By examining the diagram you will see that I have cut shield B out of brass, and have bent a thin strip of sheet brass ½ inch wide, so as to form a U shape, thus producing a groove which is bent to form a bottom rest and end piece for the glass, as at A. This part is soldered to brass shield B on the lower film guard, but care should be taken to solder it on the inside, since if you don't it will catch on the small bearing which the fire shutter works in. A piece of green gelatine is then bound between two slide cover glass, without a mask, and is slipped into place and a thin wire wrapped around either end to make all secure. I have had one of the above in use over a year and it is entirely satisfactory. I read the Moving Picture World every week and consider it to be indispensable to the operator; also have one of your handbooks which I find of great usefulness.



> Have a little electrical pocketbook which I can recommend to any one. It covers units, definitions, transformers, motors, dynamos, and in fact about everything, including some dope on interior lighting. It is published by Emmott & Co., Ltd., 65 King street, Manchester, England, and costs 6 pence (12 cents). By the way, should not the shutter on page 282 in the handbook be set the other way, as it travels upward in a Power's Six-A? I think it should be as per diagram submitted. I may be wrong, but that is the way I have doped it out.

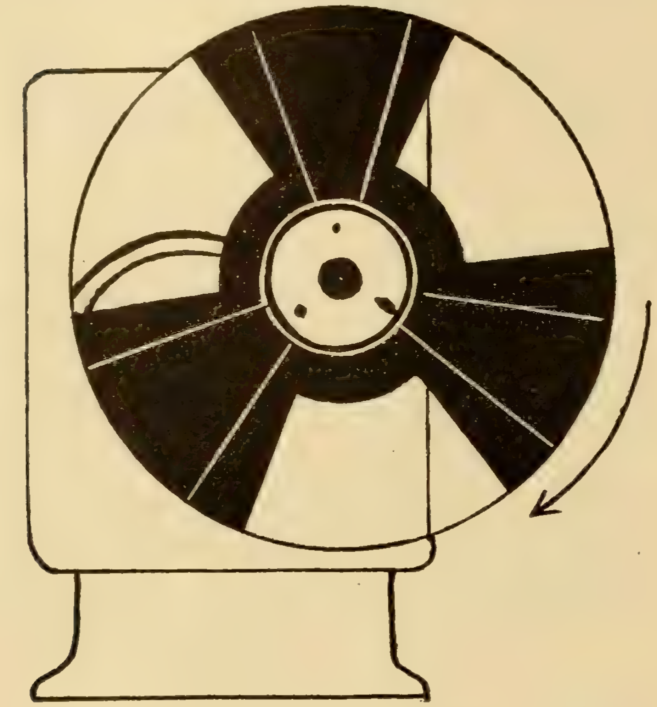
With regard to the shutter the editor was for nearly four years inspector in the Power's factory, and during that time set the shutters on more than 12,000 new machines. It may therefore be presumed that the instruction in the handbook is correct.



As to the pocket electrical book you speak of, it quite probably is excellent, but it would indeed be a very fine work which would cause me to recommend the operator to buy any electrical works othen than the Hawkins Electrical Guide. I have for some time believed, and do still believe, that my own handbook and the Hawkins Electrical Guide will prove sufficient for any operator, except possibly one who wishes to go very deeply into optics and electrics. The set of Hawkins books is a little expensive, but is very complete and thoroughly understandable.

As to the glass shield, why yes, Vancouver, if you will look on page 72 of the first edition of the Handbook, published in 1910, you will find exactly the same thing in a little different form. However, your way of doing it is interesting, and also excellent as applied to the Power's Six-A. In San Francisco, as described in the department August 23d issue, 1913, the entire light ray is boxed in. In the aforenamed issue I gave a description of this light ray shield as follows:

> "In the first place nearly all San Francisco projectors have a metal chute, extending from the condenser mount to the cooling plate of the mechanism. Some of these are hinged to the condenser mount and swing up and back when it is desired to open the machine gate, while others are attached to the machine gate and are hinged in the middle, the back half swinging up. All are square in shape. In the side and top, near the gate, is set either a green glass or two pieces of mica with green gelatine between it. This chute not only protects the operator's eyes from the glare of the spot and the light ray, but absolutely prevents the film from getting into the light ray should it bunch up below."

Mr. Woods of the Market Street theater, went a step further in this matter. He has, or at that time had two Power's Six machines, and had placed a guard of perforated metal from the lower front edge of the condenser mount to the bottom of the lamphouse, making it bow shape. He had also removed the lower fire guard from the mechanism, so that in case the film should climb the lower sprocket, it would just run out along the top of the table and quietly drop down under the lamphouse to the floor. The argument for this is as follows: The law requires the entire enclosure of the film; all right! We will entirely enclose the light, and render it impossible for the film to touch the lamphouse, or anything else hot, which amounts, in effect, to precisely the same thing, and has the added advantage of allowing the operator to watch the film.

However, my brother, there are continually new men coming into the business, and it does no manner of harm to republish these things occasionally—in fact, it does a lot of good.

Closest Victim 14 Feet Away.

A. Rice, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, writes:

> Have been a reader of the department for the past five years, but this is the first time I have felt called upon to burst into print, and display my ignorance. We are erecting a very fine theater, seating capacity 1,000. The auditorium will be about 53 x 90 feet. The screen will be located approximately 14 feet from the closest victim. Now what I want to know is, can you recommend the mirror screen to be placed in this house, using D. C. through a motor generator? I don't care to have you knock this particular screen, or to praise it; all I want to know is just what is the effect on the audience seated in different places in the theater. (Hum. If I said "its bad"—knock—opposite, praise. Hum.—Ed.) Also what other screen, or screens, can you recommend? Is it true that while seated close to a mirror screen a haze seems to appear before it; also is there too much reflection of light from this screen? Do you know of any combination of spot light and slide machine? If so, where and by whom made? Would you advise the use of a dimmer on stage and indirect lights? What other lights would you control with a dimmer? At present I am working at the Queen theater. We use D. C. through a G. E. mercury arc rectifier, and obtain splendid results with about 30 amperes at the arc. The throw is 105 feet, and we are using two old, but very reliable Kinedrome machines. I own one of latest Handbooks, and certainly would not be without it.

You surely are not at all bashful about putting me up against a hard proposition, Neighbor Rice. What do you want to do? Have me recommend one screen, and thus cause all the other screen manufacturers to lie in ambush with two bricks, a club and a variety of verbal language? Well here goes. The mirror screen is a high class proposition, which has the peculiarity that the farther you get away from the screen the more brilliant and clear cut the picture appears. Now don't jump to the conclusion that you won't get a good picture reasonably close to it, for you will. The screen represents a large initial cash outlay, but it is in the nature of a permanent investment, since the screen is practically indestructible, except through highly improbable accident. There is no haze in front of a mirror screen, the reflection being entirely diffuse. Within fourteen feet of this surface, however, I think you would find the definition not to be quite as sharp as on some other type of surface—plaster, for instance. Off considerably to one side, and near the screen, the effect would not be the best, but taking the auditorium width at 53 feet, and its length at 90, my judgment is by selecting the coarsest possible mirror screen surface you will get good results. You should, however, have the manufacturer guarantee that the definition will be satisfactory from the entire seating area of the auditorium. I have no doubt but that the manufacturer will be willing to give this guarantee. If he is not, then he evidently would not have that confidence in his own product which would justify others in making heavy money investment therein. You see the question is a hard one. Perhaps I could best illustrate the matter this way. Your picture, for a given amperage consumption, will be very measurably better beyond a distance of 25 feet than any surface I know of, but, on the other hand, closer to the screen, or at heavy angle thereto it will not be, I think, quite as good as some other surfaces, but will, nevertheless, be at least passably fair. This is as fair a way as I can place the matter before you.

As to the other patent screen surfaces, why they all have points of excellence, and I cannot, in this department, make recommendation of any one of them. The Simpson Solar screen has stood the test of time, as has also the Mirroroid; the Minusa is a newer product; its manufacturers make large claims. Most all these surfaces are guaranteed by their manufacturers for a period of five years. The Day & Night Screen is, I understand, going out of business.

No, I don't know of a combination spot light and stereopticon. Yes, I would advise the use of a dimmer, and would advise a carefully installed indirect lighting system; it is the best there is, but should be installed by one who thoroughly understands his business. The proper installation of an indirect lighting system is a very nice problem.

I would advise the handling of all the lights which are to be extinguished when the picture is on by dimmers. The effect is very much better.

Remember that in installing an indirect lighting system, great damage may be done the projection by wrongly placed fixtures, or fixtures containing too much light; that is to say, too much light burning when the picture is on; also remember that the decorative color scheme of the auditorium cuts a big figure when dealing with indirect lighting. I would not have any side lights at all, except possible low c. p. lights behind some sort of opalescent or translucent glass design, which will merely serve as an ornament.

A Treat to the Eye.

G. M. Huston, Marion, Ohio, says:

> Though an operator, I am working in another line just at present. Recently I stopped off in Marion, Ohio, for a few hours, and visited the Columbia theater. An exceedingly fine picture, "The Island of Regeneration," was on, and the projection was a treat to the eye. Speed was well handled and the light perfect, not a fault to be found during the entire show of six reels. I did not have the pleasure of meeting the operator, but desire to congratulate him on the excellence of his work. By-the-way, Brother Richardson, how is the two-wheeled go-devil? Have you run any more races with limousines lately? I am greatly interested in the light ray matter. When will it be ready?

Well, I'm going to shoot the light ray dope at you right away, so get out your hammers and tune up for the anvil chorus. Nope. No more races. I had to make an awful swear to the wiff, with one hand on the Good Book, my eyes pointed toward the starry vault, and a copy of the New Testament in my inside vest pocket, that I would not do any more racing of that variety—particularly with skirts in the limousine—before she would let me go again. I wish you had gotten the name of the operator at the Columbia theater. A man who is really doing fine work deserves to have full credit therefor.

THOSE LIGHT RAY EXPERIMENTS*

Some Interesting Data Worthy of Further Study.

Part IV.

THE SPOT itself is actually an image or picture of the crater. It therefore follows that any attempt to use both craters with A. C. will set up difficulty, since it will, in the very nature of things, be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to get the images properly superimposed upon each other.

The foregoing, however, does not by any manner of means represent the full difficulties encountered in a condenser system, nor have we dealt with the relative value of the plano-convex condenser, and the meniscus-bi-convex condenser.

As a matter of fact the plano-convex condenser system presents certain difficulties which seem to be to some extent insurmountable.

First: The source of illumination (crater) varies in size in direct proportion to the number of amperes used.

Second: The size of the spot should always be approximately the same.

Third: The size of the aperture and the diameter of the condenser being fixed quantities, the angle at which the incident light will enter the objective lens is determined by the distance between the aperture and the condenser.

For example: To illustrate the deficiencies of the plano-convex system we will assume the diameter of the objective to be the maximum of 2½ inches and still to call for a distance of 21 inches between the aperture and condensers; that our picture is a large one, hence requires heavy amperage, which, of course, in turn, means a large crater. Now if we are to work with a standard sized spot it follows that, the spot being an image of the crater, the crater cannot be magnified many times at the spot. We will assume the spot to be three times the diameter of the crater, then if it be 21 inches from the curved surface of the front condenser to the aperture it will be 21÷3=7 inches from the curved surface of the rear condenser lens to the arc (the distance from the apex of the curved surface of the front condenser to the aperture, in inches, divided by the number of times the crater is magnified in the spot, equals the distance of the crater from the apex of the curved surface of the rear lens) which is altogether too far away, since that distance would involve enormous light loss. The logical thing to do to bring the arc nearer the condenser, and thus reduce light loss, would be to use shorter focal length condensing lenses. We will assume this to have been done, and that the arc has thus been brought 2 inches nearer the rear lens, or 5 inches from the apex of its curved surface, which would mean approximately 4 inches from its plano surface. This, of course, is a much better position for the arc, but with a plano-convex condensing system the spot would then be 21 inches divided by 5 equals 4.20 times the diameter of the crater, and, assuming the crater to be ½ inch in diameter, this would mean a spot 2¼ inches across, which is too large. Well, you say, draw your arc back a little, and thus reduce the spot diameter, but it must be remembered that with short focal length condensers and the condenser 21 inches from the aperture the spot cannot be made very small, because the instant you begin to pull the arc back you get into the "back focus," or, in other words, beyond the point where the crater is in focus at the spot.

Some operators have gotten splendid results from meniscus-bi-convex condensers, whereas others have reported no perceptible advantage in their use. It is all a matter of local conditions. Operators who have difficulty in getting their arc near enough to the condenser are the ones who will get best results with the meniscus-bi-convex combination, by reason of the fact that they gain at least half an inch between the arc and the condenser, owing to the fact that the planes from which the conjugate foci are measured are changed—that is to say, they are not the same with the meniscus-bi-convex as they are with two plano-convex. This is owing to the introduction of two more curved surfaces. The result is less enlargement of the crater. On the other hand, the operator who can get near the condenser with his arc and still have a small spot will find but little benefit in the use of the meniscus-bi-convex set, provided the meniscus-bi-convex and plano convex lenses be of the same quality. As will be seen from the foregoing, the system we use for condensing the light is far from perfect.

Brother Griffiths has suggested a possible remedy for this condition, but it will require time to test out his plan. As soon as it can be done, however, it will be reported on in this department, and if found of value will be added to the material already in hand. Briefly the suggestion consists of the following: Use a 6½ inch meniscus lens next to the arc, and a number of very thin bi-convex lenses, say lenses from 30 to 60 inches focal length, in front of the meniscus, as per Fig. 12. The idea is to use as many of these thin lenses as may be necessary to accomplish the desired result. The thing looks reasonable, and may work out in practice, but it is a matter for practical experiment, and since it involves the making of special condenser mounts, I do not care to hold up this whole series of articles until the matter is definitely settled. The one thing against it appears to me to be the probable high loss through reflection from so many polished surfaces.

Personally it appears to me that, within reasonable limits, the thing can be taken care of with the ordinary condenser combinations by increasing the diameter of the objective, which will enable us to bring the condenser closer to the aperture, but that is a matter which will have to be determined by careful experiment, and worked out that way it will presume the use of objective lenses selected very carefully with reference to their diameter.

*Copyright, 1915, by the Chalmers Publishing Co.

The theory upon which Brother Griffiths based these experiments is that there are two distinct sets of rays operating through the lens system of a projector. Light ray action is one of the most difficult things imaginable to describe intelligently, by reason of the fact that in drawing diagrams one is limited to the examination of the action of one, two or possibly a dozen rays, out of literally millions, and as a rule, the novice has difficulty in considering the single ray shown in a diagram as being representative of the action of the countless number of rays which accompany it, but are not shown.

In fact a peculiar thing happened in this connection. Brother Griffiths had for two weeks tried to get me to understand his theory of double-ray action, with but indifferent success. He illustrated it by means of the drawing shown at Fig. 13, in which A 1-2, B 1-2, and C 1-2 represent diverging rays of light emanating from a pin point on the crater and forming a cone, the base of which is 1-2 on condenser lens, the rays of these cones crossing at the plane of the back condenser lens, and converging respectively at points A1, B1, C1 at the machine aperture; that was one "set of rays." The other set was presumed to have as its base the whole of the crater, A-C, and its apex point at 1 and 2 on the rear condenser, beyond which it became a diverging ray, forming cone C-A 1 and C-A 2.

Now, I simply could not see the point in this. I could not grasp the idea of the whole crater being projected to a point on the lens, and there I stuck. Brother Griffiths had finished his experimental work, and while I was dictating this article, a letter came from Friend La Grow, from whom I had not heard in quite some time. In this letter he said: "I have been following the Griffiths-Armstrong-Arkin dope on light rays, making some tests of my own, and the tests have finally convinced me that, when it is all said and done, light ray action through a projection system, as explained in the "little, old Handbook," second edition, pages 346-356, is absolutely right. I did not know just what La Grow referred to, so I turned to page 346, and on the page facing it, 347, in Fig. 135, found the solution of Brother Griffiths' ideas, which appears in this article as Fig. 14.

In Fig. 14, at A, we see a diagramic representation of pin hole photography, in which rays by the millions go in every direction from every point of arrow B-C, but only those rays striking pin hole D can pass through and form an image on the screen at E-F. That is the idea Griffiths had in mind in saying that one set of rays projected the whole crater. To get his point of view, you must consider each minute point on the back plane of the condenser as being a pin hole, and as a matter of fact it does act in exactly that way, therefore each minute pin-hole point of the condenser will receive one ray from each pin-point of the crater and will therefore project an image of the crater, as a whole, to the aperture of the machine. This same thing is shown photographically in Fig. 15 in which A is the machine aperture, covered by a plate in which are two pin holes, and B the back factor of an objective, covered with a plate containing one pin hole. The action is that rays from the lower half of upper cone X pass through as ray Y, whereas from the upper half of cone X' pass through as ray Y'. The photo is a poor one, as it is extremely difficult to get a good picture of such weak rays. A comparison will reveal the fact that the action in A, Fig. 14 and in Fig. 15, is identical.

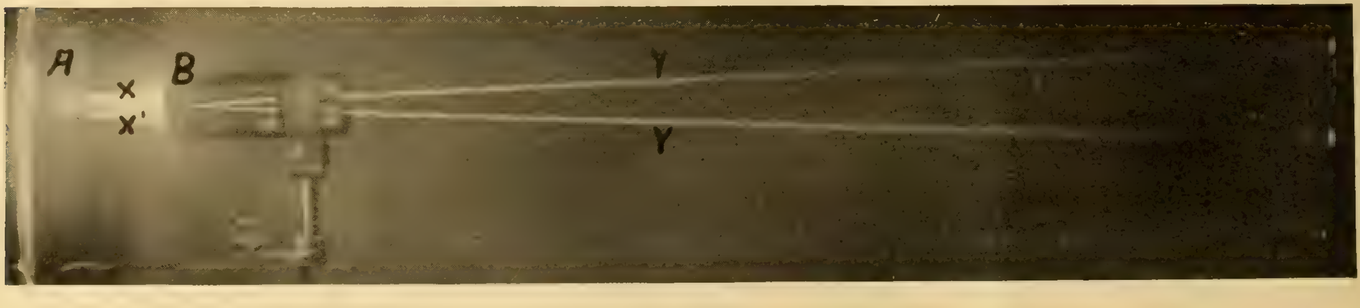

Fig. 15.

The second set of rays, viz.: those emanating from a point point on the crater, represented by cones A 1-2, and B 1-2, and C 1-2, Fig. 13, project to the same aperture, in converging lines, rays from every infinitesimal portion of the crater, and that is the real explanation of Brother Griffiths' theory, which he designates as "two sets of rays."

Now, I think Griffiths' theory is perfectly correct, but I don't like his "two sets of rays" way of expressing it. That part is not right. There are not two sets of rays. It is, instead, the same identical rays doing two different things, or acting in two different ways.

The foregoing theory is not altogether coincided in by Armstrong, but the fact, nevertheless, remains that Griffiths' theory is the only one by means of which we can explain one phenomenon, viz.: why the beam of light is round as it emerges from the objective, and continues so for a distance varying with the focal length of the lens, and thence to the screen is rectangular. And now comes the difficult part to explain.

In Fig. 13 we see a diagramic representation of Griffiths' theory, as applied to the condenser system. In Fig. 16 we see, in photography, precisely the same thing as applied to the objective lens. Always bear in mind one fact, viz.: these experiments have absolutely proven that the optical action of the objective lens and the optical action of the condensing lens is in every respect identical.

Now viewing Fig. 13, we see, at A, a point on the crater from which rays diverge to the plane of the condenser; at B we see another similar cone and at C a third similar cone. Remember, gentlemen, this is is only a diagramic representation. As a matter of fact each one of the millions of points on the crater surface forms the apex of not only one, but countless other similar cones, which diverge to the plane of the condenser, at which plane the rays from different points on the crater cross, passing on through the lens about as shown, and become converging rays. The effect of this crossing is that, since each ray carries the image of the point from which it emanates, there is an inverted image of the crater at the machine aperture, provided it, the aperture, be at the point of focus, or apex of cones A-A, B-B, C-C, Fig. 13. And right here is one point where Armstrong and Griffiths differ. But I agree with Griffiths. Armstrong claims the rays cross at the front plane of the front condenser. This, however, is, I think, impossible. They must, of necessity, it seems to me, cross at the first surface they strike. It could not possibly, in my opinion, be otherwise.

Now in considering this set of rays, remember that there are cones similar to A-A, B-B, C-C, Fig. 13, from the crater to the condenser covering each infinitesimal particle of the surface of the crater, so that while only the cones covering three pin points are shown in the diagram, we must imagine the whole crater to be thus covered. So much for the first set of rays. It is difficult to understand, I know, but it is the best I can do by way of explanation.

Now you will have to have a mighty clear head to differentiate between what I have already said, and what I am going to say. Brother Griffiths' idea is that not only is each pin point of the crater, as, A, B, C, Fig. 13, sending diverging rays to the condenser, but, also the crater, as a whole, is sending converging rays to each infinitesimal portion of the condenser, as A-C-I, Fig. 13. We therefore have the condition in which one set of rays, for instance, A-1-2, reach the condenser diverging, and another set of rays as, for instance, A-C-1, reach the lens in converging form. Or, put it another way, one set of rays have for their base 1-2 and for their apex A, B, or C, whereas another set of rays have for their base A-C, and their apex either 1 or 2. Now in tracing this second set of rays, we find that, whereas the first set go forward from the condenser as converging rays, for instance, C-C, B-B, A-A, Fig. 13, and reach a point at A', B', or C,' the second set goes forward from point 1 on the lens as diverging rays, for instance A-C. In other words, the second set of rays form a cone, having as its apex point 1 or 2, the lens, and its base A', C'.

Motion Picture Photography Stereoscopic Effect.

Berthel Carlson, Minneapolis, Minn., writes:

> I have read every article of Motion Picture Photography. My work has been mostly experimental; but, however, I intend to take educational pictures and so take a great interest in your department.
>
> The following question is not important, but it presents an interesting idea seldom thought of, and not always clear. In viewing an object the eyes are adjusted at an angle, the apex of which rests on the object viewed. If the object is close the angle is large; if it is far away the angle is small. In stereoscope photography there is no angle in the camera lenses and the angle of the eyes remain fixed when viewing the picture. Now how is the illusion of depth secured?
> Where can I secure a description of the mechanisms of the following cameras: Moy, Pathe Model No. 1, and the Kinemacolor?

In articles treating on the subject of stereoscopic vision the theory is often advanced, as you have stated, that the illusion or idea of solidity gained by binocular vision is in great part given by the angle of the axes of the eyes as they are directed at objects at a greater or less distance. The fact that the lenses of the eyes are turned more toward each other the closer the object is to the eyes have very little to do with stereoscopic effect. The reason that the eyes turn is because there is only one very small spot on the retina of the eye that is able to focus an object clearly and for the eye to convey an accurate impression to the brain it is necessary for the eye to turn until the object viewed is focused directly upon this spot. We can see indistinctly through an angle of nearly 180° from side to side, but if we endeavor to pick out detail even at a very small angle away from any object that the eye is regarding we find that we cannot do so without allowing the eyes to turn directly toward that object. The most generally accepted theory of stereoscopic vision is that the two slightly dissimilar images, dissimilar because each eye sees from a different position, are blended in the brain to produce a single stereoscopic image. Since a camera lens focuses with approximate accuracy all over the plate instead of in one spot only as on the retina, it is not necessary to incline the two lenses toward one another in taking a stereoscopic picture. When the stereoscopic pictures are placed in the stereoscope it is so arranged that the image made by the left hand lens reaches the left eye only and the one made by the right hand lens reaches the right eye only and the brain blends these two views into a picture of apparent depth and solidity.

Numerous attempts to produce stereoscopic motion pictures have been made but there are many reasons that still prevent their accomplishment without the aid of some viewing instrument.

The subject of stereoscopic effect and binocular vision will come up later for more extended consideration.

Illustrated articles on the mechanism of all the leading makes of motion picture cameras are now in preparation and will appear in this department very soon.

Elimination of Static.

George W. Lawrence, Oakland, California, writes a letter of very great interest. I have tried a great many "infallible" cures for static, among them a metal chain and heavy wire stake for grounding the metal parts of the camera, but the vageries of high tension electrical discharges are so little understood even by the deepest students of electricity that it is rather risky to assert that any method of getting rid of static is infallible. Mr. Lawrence does not make this assertion, of course, but the method he gives looks feasible and is certainly simple and well worth trying. Let us by all means have some reports from other camera men on this extremely important trouble.

There are very few companies who do not lose many thousands of dollars each year by retakes occasioned by these troublesome electrical markings. Although the X back "non-static" stock produced by the Eastman Company has undoubtedly been a great aid, the soft gelatine backing used, has proven a great inconvenience in many ways and is no more "infallible" than many of the numerous remedies heretofore suggested. Get busy, boys, and get metal handles made before the crisp autumn days set the tiny blue flames crackling through your cameras.

> Your department in the World has proved very interesting to me, and I know to many other camera men, who have long looked for recognition both on the screen and off. It has been practically impossible to obtain any work that gives authentic authority on motion photography, and having been through the mill from the bottom up, I can appreciate the feeling of some of the aspirants who write you. The case of Frank E. Art in this week's World, is typical of several I know of, but I would say to him as I have said to them, start at the bottom with any company that they can get in with, then prove their worth and they will be given recognition.
> Going back a couple of years I wish to give credit for an unexpected turn in my work, to one who thus far has been in ignorance of the good he has done. I was having considerable trouble with static, as I had to travel around to different sections of the state, and in various climates, from the warm coast to the high snows. I noticed an article by David Horsley in the Billboard on static and describing a peculiar experience that he had had. He suggested a brass or metal handle for the camera, thus allowing the body to draw off the surplus electricity generated by various kinds of friction in the camera, thus preventing any part from getting supercharged and causing jumping. I tried this immediately, and since then have not had a single foot of static. Last spring when I made the "Deathlock," a five-reel drama coming out on Paramount as a special, I took ten thousand feet of film up at Truckee, at an average elevation of 7,000 ft. and in varying temperatures around 10 degrees above, and always in snow, without a single foot of static, with a Pathe camera. Recently I took out a new Pathe, put a brass handle on, and went up into the northern part of the state and worked from the snow into the hot valley, without any static. I persuaded a number of the boys around here to use this handle and now static is practically unknown here. While making "Rule G," Paramount, March 4th, I had to work around the railroad shops a great deal, jumping from interiors to exteriors, from hot sun to cold storerooms, to hot furnace and forge rooms, and got out without a foot of static in the 16,000 feet that I made. You may know more about this than I do, but this has been my experience, and I am more than grateful to Mr. Horsley for his generosity in publishing what at that time was considered vitally secret information.

Wants to Buy a Camera.

Robt. E. Hussey, St. Louis, Mo., says:

> I am a young man with an income from some money left me. I am able to live on this without working, but that is not to my liking, and consequently would like to do something to keep me occupied and also, of course, make more money. I travel quite a bit and in the course of my trips take a lot of pictures. Therefore the idea occurred to me that possibly I might study a motion picture camera, take it along with me on my trips and take pictures of interesting scenes and news events, and sell them to the film companies. Then after several years of this work I figured on getting a position with a film company as camera man. I intended to first buy a cheap camera and practice with it around this section.
> Therefore in this connection I would appreciate it very much if you would advise me what are good cameras to buy, titles of books and where I could buy them regarding this subject, and also what you think of the possibilities of this plan.

You set me to speculating, Robert, on what I would do about buying a camera if I were the fortunate possessor of that income thing—but I think I would; anyway, that is where practically all my spare cash goes, for cameras and lenses and tripods and "et cetery," as Artemus Ward says.

Lists of books on cinematography have been published in the last few issue of this department.

The Universal Camera Company, whose advertisements may be found in the advertising columns of this paper, manufacture the best moderately priced camera that I have seen. Any of the following makes are good, but some of them are short on the market on account of the war: Pathe, Moy, Prestwich, Delbrie, Gillon, Urban, Erneman, Bell-Howell, etc.

After all, there is only one moving picture paper that you really need, and this is IT. Conducted by the largest and most experienced staff of editors and correspondents.

Comments on the Films

General Film Company.

BEHIND THE MASK (Biograph), Sept. 20.—A masked ball furnishes a pair of crooks an excellent oportunity to gather in a rich haul during the progress of this one-reel drama. Mistaken identity leads to most of the complications, and the interest is cleverly sustained. Isabel Rea, Claire McDowell, Edward Cecil, Herbert Barrington and Hector V. Sarno are members of the well-chosen cast.

THE SILENT ACCUSER (Lubin), Sept. 20.—The story of a man falsely accused of robbery and how pencil marks on a collar lead to the discovery of the real culprit. A fair plot was adequately treated by Director Joseph Kaufman. Richard Wangemann, Mary Charleson and Francis Joyner are in the cast.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 75, 1915 (Selig), Sept. 20. —The parade at the San Diego Fair, on Admission Day, leads the list Other items are: Colonial Dance at Massachusetts State Building, Panama-Pacific Exposition; big blast at Fort Spring, Va.; Greek Pageant, Portland, Me.; opening day of school, New York City; Labor Day at the San Francisco Fair; Anglo-French Commission at New York; manufacturing cannon at the French arsenal; launching the Nevada, at Manitowoc, Wis.; accident to army aviator, at Brownsville, Tex.; United States and Mexican soldiers on the border; the warships Columbia and Minnesota leaving Philadelphia.

WILLIE STAYED SINGLE (Vitagraph), Sept. 20.—This burlesque comedy, written by Otto Beneger, is a generously filled reel of diverting nonsense. George Stanley is broadly comic as the tramp, and Gretchen Lederer, Anne Schaefer and George Holt help along the fun.

DOUBLE-CROSSING MARMADUKE (Kalem), Sept. 21.—Rube Miller is the author and producer of this one-reel burlesque comedy, which pokes a lot of good-natured fun at the ever-present "crook" drama. Bud Duncan, Dave Morris, L. Trembly, Margaret Keyes and Ethel Teare supply an excellent quality of acting.

THE CARELESS ANARCHIST (Lubin), Sept. 21.—A comedy release comprising two burlesques by Epes Winthrop Sargent and a cartoon entitled "Monty and the Missionary." "The Careless Anarchist" is acted with spirit and makes passable entertainment, as does "That Brute," the second of the Sargent subjects.

THE RANGE GIRL AND THE COWBOY (Selig), Sept. 21.—"A slice of life" best describes this one-reel western drama, written, produced and acted in by Tom Mix. It is natural, dramatic and wholly entertaining. Tom is a prince of cowboys, and is given the proper support by Victoria Forde, Leo Maloney and Sid Jordan.

CARTOONS IN THE SEMINARY (Edison), Sept. 22.—Three of Raoul Barre's clever cartoon comedies, "Silas Bunkum's Boarder's Picnic," "Kid Kelly Krusoe" and "Mr. Hicks in Nightmareland" are found in this number of the Animated Grouch Chaser. They are all up to the standard. Caroline Rankin, Gladys Leslie and Yale Boss are in the live cast.

THE FABLE OF "THE THROUGH TRAIN" (Essanay), Sept. 22.—Once more has George Ade, in this one-reel comedy, turned the searchlight of his keenly quizzical humor on human existence, and shown us that Wealth hasn't a monopoly of Happiness. This fable belongs in the front rank of his sermons in slang, and is neatly acted by Anna May Walthall, Anzinette Moore, Willie Belmont and Eugene Acker.

GETTING RID OF AUNT KATE (Vitagraph), Sept. 22.—A one-reel farce, written by William Addison Lathrop, this photoplay gives Kate Price and a lively Scotch terrier a chance to create considerable uproarious fun. Jewel Hunt, Mary Anderson and Harry Fisher are also members of the cast.

A KENTUCKY EPISODE (Biograph), Sept. 23.—Strenuous action marks the progress of this one-reel drama, in which Charles Perley, Jack Mulhall and Augusta Anderson carry the weight of the acting. Tom Theron kills the judge who passes sentence on his father, and Jack Benson, the sweetheart of the murdered man's daughter, is a witness of the crime. Theron tries to put Benson out of the way and a desperate battle ensues. The drama is well produced.

SNAKEVILLE'S HEN MEDIC (Essanay), Sept. 23.—Victor Potel, Harry Todd, Margaret Joslin, Ben Turpin, Carrie Turpin and Robert McKenzie constitute a big "Comedy Six" in this one-reel farce, and keep the broadly humorous fun continually on the boil.

WHEN HUSBANDS GO TO WAR (MinA), Sept. 23.—A "rube" comedy, the leading characters being a trio of farmers, who tell their wives that they have enlisted, and then sneak off to the city to see a burlesque show. The reel has little claim to novelty, but is spirited and reasonably amusing.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 76, 1915 (Selig), Sept. 23. —The turning of the first spadeful of dirt for Philadelphia subway is the most interesting item in this number. Other features are: Meetings of Elks at Atlantic City and at Saugus, Mass.; State Fair, Syracuse, N. Y.; new bridge over the Chicago River; Children's Day at the Selig Zoo, Los Angeles; review of New York police recruits; Harvard football squad at practice, Cambridge, and camp life of U. S. Regulars at Harlington, Tex.

THE LESSON OF THE NARROW STREET (Vitagraph), Sept. 23.—There is no love story connected with this one-reel drama, but it is extremely interesting, nevertheless. The character of Sheldon, a Wall Street Money King, is skilfully drawn, and convincingly played by Edward Elkas. S. Rankin Drew, Mary Maurice, J. H. Lewis and Harold Foshay add strength to the cast.

AN UNSEEN ENEMY (Biograph), Sept. 24.—Lillian and Dorothy Gish are featured in this one-reel Griffith reissue. The plot is not a novel one, but is worked out in an unconventional and decidedly thrilling manner. Elmer Booth, Robert Harron and Harry Carey are in the cast.

AN UNEXPECTED ROMANCE (Essanay), Sept. 24.—G. M. Anderson and Marguerite Clayton have the principal roles in this one-reel drama, which tells an appealing story and affords the entire cast excellent opportunities for vigorous acting.

A DAUGHTER'S SACRIFICE (Kalem), Sept. 24.—An Alice Joyce reissue, this one-reel drama has all the elements that make for popularity. George Middleton, Tom Moore, Stuart Holmes and Hazel Neason are in the cast.

THE LEVEL (Lubin), Sept. 24.—No doubt this plot read well enough in scenario form, but as developed on the screen it makes a rather unconvincing picture. The idea is to show how a very haughty young woman becomes tolerant of less fortunate members of society. L. C. Shumway, Melvin Mayo and Dorothy Barrett act the principal roles.

BACK TO THE PRIMITIVE (Vitagraph), Sept. 24.—Agnes C. Johnson has given Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew a very funny one-reel farce in which to display their well-proven comic abilities in the art of pantomime. A limited experience with Simple Life convinces them both that: Better a cold bottle, a hot bird—and indigestion—than the raw meat and bare shanks of Primitive Man.

CAPTAIN KIDD AND DITTO (Lubin), Sept. 25.—Billie Ritchie is the chief funmaker in the character of a would-be imitator of Captain Kidd. His partner in crime is Charlie Griffith. Together they take possession of a sailing craft and make the most of the frights of the party of summer vacationists. A well produced picture.

THE GIRL WHO DIDN'T FORGET (Biograph), Sept. 25.—Helen Bray has the leading role in this one-reel drama, which deals, incidentally, with stage life. The plot is interesting and has been transferred to the screen under the direction of Walter Coyle. Jack Mulhall and Alan Hale complete an efficient cast.

WHEN CONSCIENCE SLEEPS (Edison), Sept. 25.—The dramatic qualities of this one-reel photoplay are cleverly adapted to the screen. The story is without padding and illustrated certain phases of life in a truthful manner. Bessie Learn, Robert Walker, Margaret O'Meara and Sally Crute have congenial roles.

A MATTER OF SECONDS (Episode No. 46 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), Sept. 25.—A fleet horse and a lariat are used by Helen, in this one-reel drama, in boarding a moving freight train. The series of incidents which lead up to this situation are full of excitement, but the lady telegrapher again defeats the villain by her exhibition of nerve and skill.

THE AUCTION SALE OF RUN-DOWN RANCH (Selig), Sept. 25.—There is more comedy than drama in this one-reel photoplay, written by Cornelius Shea and produced by Tom Mix. The humor is of the true western brand and makes merry at the expense of a certain Isaac Goldplate, who is made to buy a "salted" oil well. Tom Mix plays the enterprising cow-puncher who put up the job on Isaac. A thoroughly amusing comedy reel.

General Film Company Specials.

THE CIRCULAR PATH (Essanay), Sept. 20.—H. S. Sheldon is the author of "The Circular Path," an emotional drama in three reels, which shows a minister's fall from grace when tempted by love for an unworthy woman. Like all Mr. Sheldon's work, the play gets beneath the surface of things, and tells a strong and appealing story. Henry B. Walthall plays the Rev. Darwin Kirby with deep feeling and artistic skill, and is finely supported by Warda Howard, Edmund F. Cobb and Camille D'Arcy.

THE CALL OF THE DANCE (Kalem), Sept. 20.—An excellent four-part picture featuring Yancsi Dolly and released in Kalem's "Broadway Favories" series. A review will be found on page 1843 issue of September 11.

THE ETERNAL FEMININE (Selig), Sept. 20.—The Suffrage cause is easily defeated by Cupid in this two-reel drama, written and produced by George O. Nicholls. Mr. Nicholls works out his problem with neatness and by unexpected means, going back to the Stone Age for proof of his contention. Vivian Reed, Al Filson, Joe King, Earle Foxe and Viola Alberti are prominent members of the cast.

AND BY THESE DEEDS (Biograph), Sept. 21.—Reviewed by George Blaisdell on page 1846 issue of September 11.

THE CALL OF THE SEA (Essanay), Sept. 21.—This highly romantic three-reel photoplay is concerned with the love affair of a young fisherman and a wealthy society girl. The incidents, for the most part, are plausible, but Joseph A. Roach, the author, has occasionally sacrificed probability to theatric effect. The scenes on the water and along the shore are picturesque, and the acting of a good company, headed by Darwin Karr, and including Howard Lang, Betty Brown and Thomas Harper makes the drama thoroughly enjoyable. Joseph Byron Totten directed the picture.

DOROTHY (Vitagraph), Sept. 21.—William Addison Lathrop discloses no new thing in his two-reel drama of modern life, but the story he tells is strong of motive and well put together. Van Dyke Brooke, who made the production, has treated his subject with sympathy and intelligence, the work of the cast, which includes Maurice Costello, Leah Baird, George Stevens, Mary Maurice and Mr. Brooke, is along the same lines.

THE WOLF'S PREY (Kalem), Sept. 22.—Episode No. 10 of the "Mysteries of the Grand Hotel" keeps pace with the other numbers of the series. The efforts of a clever "crook" to blackmail one of the guests of the hotel gives the lady house detective a chance to measure wits with him. Hamilton Smith is the author of the drama, which is acted by William H. West, Ollie Kirkby, Frank Jonasson and Marin Sais.

A DESERT HONEYMOON (Lubin), Sept. 22.—An excellent three-reel western drama produced by Romaine Fielding. A review may be found in October 2 issue of Moving Picture World, page 92.

THE LAST REBEL (Lubin), Sept. 23.—About on a par with the average run of Civil War dramas, this two-part production is acted in the principal roles by Ormi Hawley, Earle Metcalfe, Kempton Greene and Herbert Fortier. Settings are appropriately picturesque, costumes are all that the period demands and the plot works up to a few dramatic scenes.

THE BLOOD SEEDLING (Selig), Sept. 23.—The late John Hay is the author of the story from which this three-reel drama was picturized. The plot is a tragic one and is laid in the '50's. Its motives are strong and consistent, and present an excellent picture of the men and women of a past generation. Thomas Santschi, Leo Pierson, Thomas Bates, George Larkin, Lafayette McKee and Marion Warner are members of the thoroughly competent cast.

HER HAPPINESS (Edison), Sept. 24.—In this three-reel drama, written by Harry Beaumont, the author has had Viola Dana in view and has succeeded admirably in fitting her with a winsome and intensely human role. The story is a simple one and never reaches any great dramatic heights, but Miss Dana puts so much real feeling and charm into the little country heroine, her career is followed with deepest interest. The range of emotion, and the consummate skill of its expression, possessed by this young actress, is extraordinary. Excellent support is afforded the star by Charles Sutton, Nellie Grant, Johnnie Walker, Glady Leslie and Helen Strickland.

AFFINITIES (Essanay), Sept. 25—Mary Roberts Rinehart wrote the scenario of this two-reel drama and, as usual, infused it with her sprightly humor and keen insight for comic situations. The comedy is acted in the proper spirit by Richard C. Travers, Betty Scott, E. H. Calvert and Lillian Drew. Mr. Travers directed the play.

FROM OUT OF THE BIG SNOWS (Vitagraph), Sept. 25.—A great deal of the strength and primitive passion that Rex Beach and Jack London put into their stories of the Northwest, are to be found in this three-reel photoplay, written by Ben Cohn. The exterior scenes in the snow-covered forests are the real thing, and Theodore Marston, the producer, has given realistic treatment to the entire drama. A superior grade of acting is contributed by James Morrison, George Cooper, Dorothy Kelly and Donald Hall.

Mutual Film Corporat'on.

THE LILLIPUTIAN COURTSHIP (Novelty), Sept. 20.—Mrs. Gen. Tom Thumb is one of the members of the cast of this picture. The offering is somewhat of a novelty, and must be treated as such. It is founded on a comedy subject, and is fairly entertaining.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 38, 1915 (Mutual), Sept. 23.—Interesting items of this issue are the Elks' State union at Atlantic City; hunting scenes in Kent, England; Count Von Bernstorff calling on Secretary Lansing; birthday celebration of the State of California; Miss Ida Elionski swimming with feet and hands tied, and the latest war pictures.

KIDNAPPED AT THE CHURCH (Mutual Comedy), Sept. 26.—An eccentric comedy number beginning with the kidnapping of a bride by her unwilling father. The subsequent events are a series of improbable occurrences. There is no effort to make the plot hold water and such laughter as it brings is from the absurdity of the entire performance.

THE MIRACLE (Thanhouser), Sept. 26.—A simple story, yet quite effective. It pictures an old woman, lonely and crippled, who loves children. They do not care for her until she saves a little girl from being run over by a train. The averted accident was very realistic.

GUSTAV GEBHARD'S GUTTER BAND (Falstaff), Sept. 27.—A comedy number, showing the adventures of a little German band. The photography is good and some of the incidents are quite amusing, though the humor is entirely confined to small happenings and there is no particular plot. The leader finally marries an apple woman. An average number.

LOVE, MUMPS, AND BUMPS (Beauty), Sept. 28.—A farce comedy of medium merit, in which a young woman goes away to a quiet country place to escape an unwelcome suitor. He follows her, however, and takes an attack of mumps while at her cottage. He is supposed at first to have smallpox, and the cottage is quarantined.

SEE AMERICA FIRST (Gaumont), Sept. 28.—This half-reel shows some comprehensive views of Niagara Falls and vicinity. It gives a very good idea of the famous locality.

KEEPING UP WITH THE JONES'S (Gaumont), Sept. 28.—Another series of animated drawings, by Harry Palmer. This pictures the Reelem Moving Picture company filming the Garden of Allah. The drawings are clever and amusing. On same reel with above.

THE AMATEUR CAMERA MAN (Novelty), Sept. 27.—In this comedy a man anxious to know how to manipulate a motion picture camera tries to learn through a correspondence school. The plot of the comedy is not worked out very well. With this exception the subject makes a good semi-farce-comedy offering.

LOVE'S STRATEGY (Mutual-Comedy), Sept. 29.—This comedy number, written by Claude L. Barker, tells of the way in which two fathers conspire to keep their children from marrying. The young couple then fix up a scheme which makes the fathers very anxious to have them marry. This is simply a variation of an old theme, but is handled cleverly and makes a pleasing number.

A PERPLEXING PICKLE PUZZLE (Falstaff), Sept. 30.—The woman in the grocery store misses a great number of pickles from her barrel and employs a detective to trace the thief. The latter turns out to be her son, who has tapped the barrel through the floor. The settings and types are good; the plot is only fairly strong.

HEARTS IN SHADOW (American), Sept. 30.—This is a story of simple elements and not a great amount of plot. Vivian Rich appears as a poor mother out of work. She is arrested for theft, but later when the facts become known and her child is found, she is released. A fair subject.

MIXED MALES (Beauty), Oct. 2.—A "rube" comedy number in which father and son love a girl and her mother, respectively. An elopement is planned in which the couples become mixed up. The picturing is good but the plot familiar and the ending weak.

HIS LORDSHIP'S DILEMMA (Gaumont All Star), Oct. 3.—This is rather a novel sort of comedy, and is scheduled for a good many laughs. A young lord down on his luck decides to try once anything he can get to do. He starts in as a waiter, is sent on the street to advertise the restaurant, falls asleep and dreams an amusing dream about a game of golf.

A CHANGE OF LUCK (Cub), Oct. 8.—This is a very good farce comedy with George Ovey in the lead. An amusing situation takes place when the comedian pursued for back rent by his landlady gets into the room of one for whom the police are looking. His change of luck comes when, brought into police headquarters by a bandit, he turns the tables and gains the reward for the capture of the bandit.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

THE HOUSE OF A THOUSAND SCANDALS (Mutual Masterpicture No. 39) (American), Sept. 23.—A four-part production with Harold Lockwood and May Allison in the leading roles. Some of the scenes of the picture, taken separately are very beautiful, especially those portraiting life at the home of the teacher of classic dances and Greek philosophy. Unfortunately, however, the play does not come within the category of the drama. In other words, viewing it from the constructive standpoint, it is not up to the mark. Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison in the issue of October 2 on page 93.

MERELY PLAYERS (Reliance), Sept. 26.—A two-part production with Billy West in the feminine lead. The story is rather a peculiar one, treating of how the leading lady of a theatrical company was induced to marry the leading man for business reasons. Her real sweetheart is afterward met with in a New York company, and considerable commotion is caused by the actions of the pair. The plot is not always clear, but at some places reaches a point of merit.

THE TERROR OF TWIN MOUNTAINS (American), Sept. 27.—A two-reel western number which handles a familiar theme in a very entertaining manner. E. Forrest Taylor, Helen Rosson and Roy Stewart appear. The latter appears as the perennially interesting bad man, who robs stage coaches and terrorizes the entire vicinity. When he steals the hero's wife, however, he brings matters to a crisis and pays the penalty with his life. The photography and scenic effects are good and the number on the whole puts new life in an old type of story.

THE ROAD TO FAME (Thanhouser), Sept. 28.—A theatrical story in two reels, demonstrating the old theory that a girl must suffer and know life before she can act. The young actress falls down in the part of Camille. She marries a man whose parents do not like her. The experience so deepens her sensibilities that she flees back to the old part and makes a success of it. The story is well enacted by a capable cast and makes a pleasing departure from the average stage offering.

THE PROTEST (Centaur), Sept. 29.—This is the first of the three-reel Horsley releases for the Mutual program. Crane Wilbur is featured in the production, with Margaret Gibson playing opposite him. The story of the picture is a good one, full of interesting detail, and developed with considerable skill. The production may be classed as a well-constructed melodrama, and gives the Centaur three-reel feature program a good start. Others of the cast are P. O. Tabler, Ella Oswald, Leona Hutton, Donald O'Brien, John E. Brennan and Joseph Von Meter.

THE PRICE OF HER SILENCE (Mutual Masterpicture—Thanhouser), Sept. 30.—This is one of the Mutual Masterpictures with Florence La Badie and Mignon Anderson playing roles equally important. The masculine portion of the cast is filled by Arthur Bauer, Harris Goodwin and Thomas Curran. It is a pity that this picture has not been developed in a more professional way. The first two reels of the picture seem to be carelessly done, while the latter portion of the production makes us realize that it really has a plot worth while. Four reels instead of five, and more care in the treatment of the plot throughout might have made the picture one truly worth while.

THE FOOL'S HEART (Eclair), Oct. 1.—A two-reel number, adapted from a story of Eugene Manlove Rhodes, with Lindsley J. Hall, Edna Payne and others in the cast. This has the rough Western atmosphere but the construction is very vague and uncertain. There is a double murder, in which each criminal tries to place the blame on the other, with apparent success. It is unfortunate this did not work out clearly, as there is every evidence of a good, dramatic story in the offering.

JUST AS IT HAPPENED (American), Oct. 4.—Here is a two-reel drama of more than ordinary excellence. The story is a simple one, with a human appeal. It is the story of a young man who left the farm and tried to succeed in the city because his sweetheart did not like the appearance of his "bumpy" hands. He lives to rue the move, and comes back to the country to finish his days. The story has been developed very nicely.

BRED IN THE BONE (Mutual Masterpicture, No. 41) (Reliance), Oct. 7.—A four-reel number, by Frank Kinsella. Dorothy Gish, Wm. Hinckley and W. E. Lawrence are in the cast. The plot follows very familiar lines, but is full of interesting complications and well constructed. An actress deserts her child, leaving it on the doorsteps of a Quaker couple. They raise the girl as a little Quaker, but in due time she feels the lure of the stage and goes to the city. Some of the woodland scenes in the opening are very attractive. The girl is loved by the leading man and the manager. The former shoots the latter and the hero comes in the midst of a dramatic scene and takes her home. A stock plot, well developed.

North American Film Corporation

THE ROSE IN THE DUST (American), Sept. 27.—Chapter XXII of "The Diamond from the Sky." This opens with a graphic picturing of the exciting events at the circus, following the tragedy in the last number. A circus hand makes away with the diamond and hides it in a haymow. It is thrown down into the manger and so remains till the close of the instalment. Arthur, or Powell, again gets sight of Esther, who is strolling with Quabba as a gyspy singer. He throws her a rose from the coach in which he is riding. The instalment is full of interesting scenes and splendidly directed throughout.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

PEER GYNT (Morosco), Sept. 16.—Cyril Maude plays Ibsen's hero in Oscar C. Apfel's adaptation of the dramatic poem. While the picture fails to convey much of the meaning of the original work it has good points in an artistic production and the impressive performance given by Mr. Maude. A review may be found on page 89 of the Moving Picture World of October 2.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS NO. 74, 1915 (Sept. 15).—In this issue can be seen Bernstorff arriving at the office of the Secretary of State; cavalry maneuvers at San Francisco; a venison barbecue in Riddle, Oregon; burial of the victims of the E Submarine 3; closeup of John Burroughs; motor cycle race at Chicago, and an excellent animated cartoon from the Bray studios.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

A MORTGAGE ON HIS DAUGHTER (L-Ko), Oct. 3.—This features Peggy Pearce and Hank Mann and contains some lively and quite amusing scenes of a nonsensical character. The reverse of the runaway picture gives a laughable effect.

WHEN A MAN'S FICKLE (Nestor), Oct. 4.—This comedy, by L. J. Pouliot, has an original plot. Neal Burns, who has developed remarkably in such parts, plays the lead, assisted by Billie Rhodes and Dolly Ohnet. This is bright, well presented and well above the average.

THE UNNECESSARY SEX (Imp), Oct. 5.—A slight but pleasing comedy number featuring Wm. Garwood and Violet Mersereau. The crusty young bachelor finds a baby on his doorstep and has to call in a neighboring girl to help care for it. This leads to love and marrage. The scenes are well taken.

EDDIE'S LITTLE LOVE AFFAIR (Nestor), Oct. 8.—An Al E. Christie number, featuring Eddie Lyons. Lee Moran and Elsie Greeson. The boys appear as rival professors at a girls' school. The plot has a pleasing juvenile flavor and is very enjoyable.

Universal Film Mfg. Company, Specials.

THE BROKEN COIN (Universal Special), Sept. 27.—This fifteenth episode, in two reels, brings to a close the warfare between the two kingdoms. The threatened drowning of the enemy officers in the palace cellars made a good scene. A new development occurs when Count Sachio discovers a paper affecting King Michael's right to the throne. Roleaux turns up unexpectedly and gains possession of this document. Later he is made prisoner by Count Sachio. An interesting instalment.

AN ALL AROUND MISTAKE (Imp), Sept. 29.—A two-reel comedy number, featuring King Baggot. He visits his friend, a young dentist impersonated by Ned Reardon, and while under the influence of gas has a strange dream. He sees himself and the dentist out for a time together. They accumulate a "jag" and have various adventures, winding up finally in jail. The plot is not at all strong but contains some amusing moments. The mixup with their wives in the second reel makes the best feature, though this is not particularly novel.

FATHERHOOD (Broadway-Universal Features), Oct. 4.—A four-reel western feature, with Hobart Bosworth, Helen Wolcott and Lydia Yeamans Titus in the leads. The story is one of the big out doors and has a plot that works out naturally and rounds up with a delightful climax. It tells of a ranch owner who has reached middle age without thought of woman. Then he brings home a young bride. She is happy for a time, but at length becomes restless and each thinks the other's love has cooled. She goes home to her mother and when things look darkest the baby appears. The ranch owner, wild with joy, rushes to his wife and child. This is such a thoroughly human story that it gets a strong hold on the sympathies.

THE BROKEN COIN (Universal Special), Oct. 4.—This instalment, No. 16, brings out the weak character of King Michael and suggests interesting developments regarding the manner in which he came to the throne. A mysterious trip on a steamer by Count Sachio and King Phillips is undertaken, Count Frederick and his friends following in a smaller vessel. The broken coin has dropped completely out of the story in the last three numbers, but it is likely the ocean trip just undertaken will bring further developments regarding it.

THE FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLAR JEWEL THEFT (Big U), Oct. 7.—A two-reel number, featuring Murdock MacQuarrie as Tom Sparks, an aged detective. The story was written by George Edwards Hall and is based on a real jewel theft which took place in California. The settings are pleasing, and while the plot contains no unusual complications, it goes ahead in an interesting way, picturing the manner in which the old detective brings the gang to justice. Adele Farrington, Edna Payne and Arthur Moon are also in the cast.

QUEEN OF THE JUNGLELAND (Bison), Oct. 9.—A three-reel production, based on a story by James Oliver Curwood. The jungle settings and wild animal features are very pleasing. The plot itself, in which the hero discovers a white girl in the cannibal country, has strong features. The closing scenes, however, are of a very sanguinary nature; the killing of the chief by Wambi is too brutal and repulsive. The cast includes Wellington Playter, Rexde Roselli, Edyth Sterling, Lule Warrentown and Sherman Bainbridge.

World Film Corporation.

THE LITTLE MADEMOISELLE (Shubert), Sept. 27.—A pleasing picture exceedingly well suited to the personality of Vivian Martin, who appears in the title role. A review may be found on page 93 of the Moving Picture World of October 2.

Miscellaneous.

THE REGENERATION (Fox), Sept. 13.—Excellent views of slum life and a sensational fire aboard an excursion boat are found in this very sympathetic version of Owen Kildare's play. A review may be found on page 94 of the Moving Picture World of October 2.

RICHARD STANTON JOINS UNIVERSAL.

Richard Stanton is the latest adition to the Universal City producing staff. He is a native of Philadelphia. So well did athletics fit in with his idea of things and so well did he fit in with athletics that when he left school he was immediately signed by one of the eastern league teams. He eventually took up theatrical work.

After playing for six months with the Melies Company he was for two and a half years with the New York Motion Picture Corporation. At the end of that time he was given his own company to direct and in which to play leading roles. Playing leads opposite the new director is Myrtle Gonzales.

ALICE HOLLISTER ON VACATION.

After four years of steady work, Alice Hollister is now enjoying that long-looked-for vacation, and has buried herself in the heart of the Blue Ridge Mountains, five miles from Brevard, North Carolina. When Miss Hollister left Jacksonville she was escorted to the Union Station by not only her co-workers of the Kalem Company, but also those of the Berges Players, who endeavored to give her a royal send-off, and as her destination was a secret, they all tried to guess, but failed. Miss Hollister will return to the Jacksonville studio about October 15 to continue her work under Director Vignola.

McINTYRE PROMOTED.

G. D. McIntyre, formerly general manager of the Sales Company, has been appointed assistant director to Barry O'Neill, now making "Bought" at the World Film studios. Mr. McIntyre was on the staff of William A. Brady and thus combines both motion picture and stage experience.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

ONE of the local newspapers recently published a column account of how a young man deserted a lucrative position in his wealthy father's office in this city for motion picture work. The idea of the write-up was evidently to show the opportunities motion pictures offer to young men of ambition and talent, but many people engaged in the business have not accepted it in that light. They have taken the story as a strong argument in support of a recently suggested movement against the admission of visitors to studios while pictures are in the course of production. A manager advocated the movement in a communication to the press, claiming that visitors not only seriously distracted the attention of the players, but also, by mental transmission, conveyed to the minds of the players a conception of parts in conflict with that the director wished to have carried out.

There is no question as to the truth of the first claim, especially when the visitors are guests of the players. It may be true that professionals of long experience can proceed with their work entirely oblivious to the presence of strangers, but it is not the case with all of them, and but few of others who have not had the benefit of experience on the stage can ignore the presence of spectators. The writer knows of one professional who, after more than forty years of stage experience, positively refused to do work in the motion picture studios when others than those having a direct interest in the scene were present. He claimed the same right to privacy as that which attends stage rehearsals. "They do not make me nervous," he said, "but their presence interferes with the atmosphere and environments of the work. I live my parts and my success is dependent upon that. I cannot absorb the character when I see before me a curious crowd like that which gathers about some accident or amusing incident upon the streets."

It was some person entertaining the same views who placarded in a prominent motion picture studio the article which appeared in the newspaper about the rich young man, and it was the posting of the article which brought to light the fact that both players and directors entertain strong views in opposition to the admission of visitors to studios while the players are at work. One prominent director said: "I do not attach much importance to the theory that mental impressions may be transmitted to players by visitors, because I have not given much thought to the question of mental transmission and I have a much more plausible reason for opposing the visits. So long as visitors do not distract the attention of my people and myself from the work we have in hand by gestures or remarks they are as far away from me when I am working as they would be if not in the studio at all. To my mind, the most significant point in the story about the rich young man is the fact that he misled the director who helped him to success. Through invitation of a leading actress he gained admission to the studio as a visitor. In the absence of an introduction the director mistook him for one of the players, as he stood near the scene, and asked him why he was not made up. The young man withdrew and consulted his actress friend and she encouraged him to get ready. When he appeared for work the director, who had recovered his composure, challenged him. "You are not in this scene, who are you?" The young man replied that the director had told him to get made up and be ready. He admitted he had not been engaged by the company and was only a visitor to the studio. Up to this point no harm had been done, and if there was any, the director alone was responsible. But when the director said he was just the type he wanted and asked if he had ever played before a camera he falsely answered in the affirmative and went into the scene. He was absolutely without experience. Fortunately for himself, the director and the company paying the bills, the young man went through the part successfully and has since become a prominent player. People of experience in the business may well imagine the result had the scene been spoiled."

"My encouragement goes out to every worthy young person of ambition," continued the director, "and I have the sincerest regard for the young man who laid the foundation stone for his success in the pictures under such peculiar circumstances, but I cannot countenance the misrepresentation and selfishness that placed the scene and director in jeopardy. I shall always bear the incident in mind and take care that in the flurry that so often attends the quick preparations for scenes that I know the people I select. Directors are by no means infallible and when time is limited and an oversight has occurred in the selection of a cast they will often hurriedly select some one to fill in, especially when the type desired is at hand. I am pleased the story of the rich young man came out in the press because it gives an opportunity to express views I have entertained for some time but which I did not express because I feared a charge of professional selfishness or jealousy might be made against me. I have often been told that much very excellent talent is going to waste because directors refuse to give opportunity for its development. Conditions in motion picture work will not permit directors to spend time in breaking in beginners, and those who spend time along that line are taking a big chance, as shown by the experience of a friend of mine who hurriedly put a woman visitor in a scene. She was a stunning-looking and handsomely attired woman and just the type he wanted. The scene was killed. Her sole thought was to get in the picture just where her friends would recognize her upon the screen, and just where the director did not wish her to be. It is said that had the rich young man told the truth when asked if he had experience, his career as a photo player might have ended where it started. That may be so. But in the case of the woman I speak of that was not the result. Although she spoiled the scene she did not give up the work. She took her place in the ranks of the 'extras' and today is one of the best paid.

A well-known studio manager in speaking of the question of entertaining visitors at studios said it was a very trying one. Some managers claim they allow no visitors in the studios, but all of them make exceptions. It is a practice that has become recognized as a very valuable advertising medium. Photoplay patrons have their favorites in both makes of plays and the players and when they travel long distances one of the most enjoyable features of their trips is to be able to visit the studio, get a glimpse of their screen favorites and, if possible, see them work. Upon return home their talk of what they have seen naturally tends to increase publicity for the companies and players. Although they may not have enjoyed the honor, or pleasure (call it what you will) of personal introduction to their favorite players, still the fact that they have been enabled to see them in life and see them at work creates a feeling of intimacy and makes them seek those players upon the screen after the return home."

A canvass of sentiment on the part of players on the question shows that most of them are opposed to visitors. All of them recognize that courtesy is a valuable asset in the art of diplomacy and they exercise it. The dread of personal contact with visitors is especially strong on the part of very many members of the profession. It has been a trait of the professional in all times. Unfortunately the outside world does not look upon it with favor. It is not self-consciousness and pride that creates this reserve on the part of the players. When asked why she avoided introductions to non-professional visitors a prominent woman in the business said: "I do not resent them through any improper spirit. The good will of the public is as essential to me as anything I depend upon for my success, but I have a horror for the gaze of the curious. Aside from having the awful feeling that I am in the position of a freak in some side show, I have a dread that a look in life may take from me some part of the illusion that helped me to success upon the screen. I want them to know me as I am in my work. That is a part of my stock in trade. Some players dispute it, but I maintain that personal appearances before audiences are not conducive to the continuance of a player's popularity. I think the same regarding visits to studios. When visitors see how scenes are laid out the illusion created by the screen is removed to such an extent that they fail to appreciate the real work of producer and players when the pictures are projected. If I am correct in my theory, then visiting to the studios should be curtailed as I curtail as much as possible my meeting with those whose admiration I wish to retain."

Blue Ribbon Vitagraphs

Varied Program of Notable Feature Subjects Scheduled for Release During October, November and December.

NO MORE varied program of Blue Ribbon Feature releases has ever been announced than that arranged by the Vitagraph Company for the three months of the closing year. The pictures selected unite the best authors with the flower of the Vitagraph Stock Company in addition to stars from the legitimate stage whose reputations have established them as favorites with playgoers all over the world. The subjects include drama, comedy-drama, and comedy, and represent the Vitagraph Company's best efforts in feature photoplay production.

Scene from "The Dust of Egypt" (Vitagraph).

For October, the first picture will be the six-part comedy, "The Dust of Egypt," from the well-known English farce, by Alan Campbell. The story is unique in that it tells of the awakening of an Egyptian Princess after a sleep of three thousand years. The comedy element centers in this reincarnated being of a former age, whose wonderment at the comforts and conveniences of modern civilization and her endeavor to transplant the manners, customs and religious rites of her native Egypt into the household of a twentieth century family is the basis of many ludicrous situations. "The Dust of Egypt" was produced under the direction of George D. Baker, with a cast that included Edith Storey, Antonio Moreno, Hughie Mack, Naomi Childers, Charles Brown, Edward Elkas, Frank Currier and Cissy FitzGerald.

Scene from "The Turn of the Road" (Vitagraph).

The latter part of October, Maurice Costello will be seen in "The Man Who Couldn't Beat God," the second prize winner in the Sun scenario contest. It was written by Harold Gilmore Calhoun and tells a vivid story of a man who believed he could erase the scar of the murder of his master from his soul. He succeeds in quieting his conscience for a time, but retribution finally overtakes him, and it is this losing fight that makes a story of exceptional interest. "The Man Who Couldn't Beat God" is a vital, effective, modern five-part drama, in which Mr. Costello is seen at his best. He is ably assisted in its enactment by Charles Eldridge, Thomas Mills, Robert Gaillord, Naomi Childers, Edwina Robbins, Estelle Mardo and Gladden James.

Three releases are announced for November and are remarkable examples of photoplay constrution and production. "The Turn of the Road," a five-part feature produced by Tefft Johnson, in which Virginia Pearson, Joseph Kilgour, Bobby Connelly, Naomi Childers and Robert Gaillord will be seen in the portrayal of the principal roles, is the first. "The Turn of the Road" tells a story of a man who has a loving, companionable wife, who falls into the clutches of a vampire. He becomes blind to the entreaties of his wife, his child and his friends, until fate intervenes and he awakens to a realization of his wrong-doing. It is a story that grips the heartstrings like a band of steel and palpitates and throbs with the very essence of human emotions.

A Cyrus Townsend Brady story, "Heights of Hazard," that contains every known thrill, will add additional interest to the month's program. "Heights of Hazard" is also a five-part feature and will introduce Charles Richman, Eleanor Woodruff and Charles Kent in the leading characterizations, the production being made under the direction of Capt. Harry Lambart. An automobile elopement, an escape from an aeroplane, a sabre duel, an African lion hunt and thrilling motor boat races, keep the interest at fever heat during the entire length of the picture.

Robert Edeson, Fay Wallace, Lillian Burns, Charles Eldridge, John T. Kelly and a special cast of Vitagraph Players will be seen in "The Cave Man," the last week of the month, produced under the direction of Theodore Marston. Haulick Snagg, the character in which Mr. Edeson will be seen on the screen, was created by him in the play of the same name in September, 1911, and served the distinguished actor as a starring vehicle for several seasons. "The Cave Man," originally written by Gelett Burgess, was picturized by Marguerite Bertsch, and will be released in six parts. The story tells of a coal heaver introduced into the society of the four hundred, who becomes a social lion. A transition from a laborer to a polished man of the world, his reversion to his original self and steady climb to a position of substantial wealth and place, make a screen story of undeniable charm.

Scene from "The Heights of Hazards" (Vitagraph).

December will be ushered in by the release of "A Price for Folly," one of the strongest dramas on the Vitagraph program. It was written by George P. Dillenbeck and produced in five parts by George D. Baker, with Edith Storey, Antonio Moreno, Harry Morey, Charles Kent, Louise Beaudet, Ethel Corcoran and Arthur Cozine. The scenes of "A Price for Folly" are laid in Paris and special care has been taken to depict in all the splendor of wealth and detail the handsome home of a French nobleman. The story deals with the son of this nobleman, who sows his wild oats with a lavish hand. The son dreams and sees in a vision the harvesting of his crop, including the death of his parents, the loss of his fortune, and the snubs of his former friends. His awakening to the realization of what he has been doing, turns his footsteps back into the straight and narrow path. The drama is one of strong human appeal, a story that, while teaching a lesson, does so under cover of an interest that is undeniable.

Frank Daniels, the inimitable King of Comedy, whose first Vitagraph release, "Crooky," established him as a screen comedian in a class by himself, will round out the year's Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Features in "What Happened to Father," written especially for him by Mary Roberts Rinehart. It is a story of the theater; a story of that region known as "back stage," that has always been a mystery to the uninitiated. It is a story that gives Mr. Daniels opportunity for the exercise of his inimitable talents. A strong Vitagraph cast supported Mr. Daniels in the enactment of the comedy, which was produced in five parts by C. Jay Williams.

William Roselle

THERE are any number of reasons why a good many interesting words might be written about William Roselle. He is good looking. He is clever. He has been a well-known Broadway actor for five years.

But the chief reason at present is that he, too, is going to be a star in one of the great Rialto Star Features made by the Gaumont Company for release in the Mutual's program. Mr. Roselle will play the lead in a three-reel picture entitled "The Card Players," which is at present under way at the Flushing studios.

William Roselle.

Mr. Roselle was born in New York City. He is 28 years old. Twenty-eight years is a pretty short time to have lived, and yet have 845 performances of "Brown of Harvard," a two years' career on the Shakespearean stage, besides the leading parts in "At Cost," "The Fortune Hunter," "Brother Masons," "Our Wives," and many other plays to one's credit.

In "The Card Players," the talented young actor is cast for an exceedingly dramatic role.

He studied civil engineering and started in to make a name for himself in that profession. The engineering business, however was full of ups and downs, principally downs he thought, as he was engaged in surveying a line for a proposed railroad through a rocky, mountainous country and experienced many painful tumbles. One day "Hairline Billy," as he had been nicknamed by the other boys in the camp because of his accuracy with the transit, was having some trouble with his rodman. A party of tourists happened along, and among them was a prominent actor. They stopped to see what the row was about, and watched the proceedings with great interest. Billy was waving his arms and his language was full of personality, "Up a hair; down a hair; you —— —— idiot, I didn't say two hairs, etc." The actor was visibly impressed. Finally he walked over to Billy and tapped him on the shoulder, "Young man, you should be an actor."

That was not all, but it started Billy thinking, with the result that the following year found him playing a small part in Shakespearean repertoire with Ada Rehan and Otis Skinner. He stayed with them for two years and attributes a large part of his success to the valuable training received at the hands of these two masters of stagecraft.

The last time Mr. Roselle appeared before a New York audience was in "She's in Again," which had such a successful run at the Gaiety theater last Spring. He has the distinction of having played in every performance of "Brown of Harvard," 845 in all. When Henry Woodruff left the cast, Mr. Roselle played the lead. Among other productions in which he has been featured are: "The Cost," "The Lottery Man," "The Fortune Hunter," "Brother Masons," "Our Wives," etc. For several seasons Mr. Roselle was leading man for Lulu Glaser and Sam Bernard. His first appearance under the Gaumont banner will be in the three-reel Rialto Star Feature release of October 20, "The Card Players."

George Ridgwell

EDISON has augmented its force of directors by the appointment of George Ridgwell, and the advancement to that position of Frank McGlynn, the well-known Edison character man, both of whom are busily at work, Director Ridgwell on a four-act feature, "The Mystery of Room 13," in which Marc MacDermott will be featured, supported by an actress new to Edison films.

George Ridgwell.

Director Ridgwell is a good representation of that curious versatility that goes into the make-up of a good director. Soldier, featured instrumental soloist, then vocal soloist, comic opera, dramatic actor, scenario editor, appears a roundabout road to travel to directorship, as has Mr. Ridgwell, but it goes without saying that, in that varied career, he has collected views and visions of life through which he will enrich his films.

Born in a suburb of London, he was educated in a military school, his father having served through the Crimean war. Twelve years were then spent as soldier and in the regiment band, in the oldest regiment in the British army, the Coldstream Guards. Following this, the versatile Mr. Ridgwell played in every well-known orchestra in London. Dropping the cornet he took up the career of vocal soloist, which led him soon into the opera. He has appeared in some thirty English operas, in leads, appearing in all the well-known concert halls as well.

His first American engagement was "The Dollar Princess." He appeared later in "Dolly Varden" and opposite Kitty Gorden in "The Enchantress." Then followed a successful vaudeville engagement and stock work, when he entered motion pictures, at the Vitagraph, as writer, becoming in a few months the scenario editor where, during two years as editor, and later as director, he wrote a number of that company's most successful dramas and comedies. His first Edison picture was "The Butler," in which William Wadsworth and Richard Tucker are featured.

SELIG SECURES INJUNCTION.

The application of the Selig Polyscope Company for an injunction against the Mutual Film Corporation and the American Film Manufacturing Company pending the issue of a suit for damages to the amount of $25,000 has been granted. The plaintiff company alleges that the picture entitled "A House of a Thousand Scandals" produced by the defendant companies is an invasion of its rights to the story "The House of a Thousand Candles," produced in pictures by the plaintiff and for which it owns exclusive rights.

W. C. DeMille Talks on the Drama

Scenario Editor of Lasky Company Says the Screen Ultimately Will Have Far-Reaching Effect on the Stage.

By George Blaisdell.

WILLIAM C. DE MILLE, chief of the scenario department of the Lasky Company, is in New York on a bit of a vacation after a year of hard work at the company's studio in Hollywood, Cal. In a talk with a World writer the man who after fifteen years' experience as a playwright turned his abilities over to the motion picture, expressed views that not alone are interesting. They are illuminating as indicating the viewpoint of a man who has studied the stage and its clientele, who knows the American drama and the limitations by which those who write for it are restricted. Mr. DeMille tells why in his opinion the American drama will have a new birth; how the screen, through the simultaneous initial public exhibition of a subject all over the country, will free the drama from the domination of Broadway. He points out, too, among other things, how the motion picture is educating the multitude in what is best in dramatic form, in good construction and in the proper telling of a story. He denies that the picture has hurt the drama; he declares that the disease was in the theater before the motion picture took advantage of its difficulties.

William C. DeMille.

"Out at the Lasky studio we have an ideal that we are working toward gradually," said Mr. DeMille. "We are trying to find a way to attain it. We are pushing into a jungle where no one has preceded us. We are trying to do our share in creating this new art and to give it artistic form so that it can stand upon its own feet as an art, not as an imitation of the theater; not as a photograph of a stage performance, but as a story told in action to the eye alone. Of course, the stage play is told in action to the eye and to the ear. It seems to me the photodrama is no more an imitation of the stage than the written novel is an imitation of a spoken conversation. In the novel we visualize the picture but hear no words. I don't think we should miss the absence of sound on the screen.

"It is particularly fascinating when you are breaking ground for a new art, when you are making grow an art where no art grew before. Nobody can show you the way, there are no old masters. We are just as apt to be the old masters as anybody else. That is one of the things that fascinates me. Another is the thought of the wonderful audience. I thought as a dramatist of fifteen years' experience that I knew something about the American people, that I was to a certain extent in touch with them, but I realize now that I have hardly scratched the surface of the American people. If I wrote a play that was seen by a million and a half persons in a year it was a phenomenal success. Our worst picture has been seen by 40,000,000 in two years. Our best pictures, like 'Carmen,' for instance, will be seen by over a hundred million in two years.

"These figures are inspiring. A friend of mine asked me how I had the nerve to desert the theater after fifteen years. I told him it was because I didn't have the nerve to desert the audience. My dramatic religion always has been that the theater is the people and not the house. It is the audience that means the theater to me, not the proscenium arch. Now for the first time in history a new art is being born that is more democratic than the drama—and the drama always has been the fundamental democrat of the arts.

"In giving form to this new art we are reaching millions of people in the little backwoods towns of the country who might not otherwise have a theater in their neighborhood for fifty years to come. Consequently we are making the theatrical audiences of the future by taking the great mass who are not theatergoers and giving them a sense of dramatic form, of good art, and good construction in the telling of a story through action. I think this is a big justification for the new art.

"Many people are saying that the motion picture is hurting the drama. It is not; but the disease of the theater has been the opportunity of the motion picture. The disease was in the theater before the motion picture took advantage of it to draw most of its audiences away, but the audiences were looking for an alternative. The American drama will be reborn again when the best seat on Broadway sells for a dollar, and not until then—and I am glad to note that the movement is under way.

"Anything in the nature of a dramatic story, of the dramatic art, depends for its strength and its power on its ability to express the mass of the people to themselves. To the extent that physical conditions make it difficult for a people as a whole to support an art to that extent is the strength of that art diminished; and to the extent it is made easy for them to patronize an art to that extent is the art strengthened. The people have been very tired paying $2 for 75 cents worth of amusement; they would much rather pay 25 cents for 25 cents worth of amusement—so that the moment the motion picture began to show signs of being an art, and it is only just beginning to show those signs, the people began to flock to it in numbers that are simply amazing.

"Do you know that last year the people of the United States paid $292,000,000 to see motion pictures? That represents about 2,900,000,000 admissions. That represents a sum of attendance at motion picture theaters of about twenty-nine times for ever man, woman and child in the United States. There is an audience that makes the audience of the theater look like an afternoon reading of Browning at the Astor. Therefore I have gone heart and soul into this work because I am a believer in the necessity for democracy in all dramatic art.

"Mind you, I don't believe the motion picture can or should displace the spoken drama because nothing can ever take the place of the written and spoken word. But it is going to be the alternative that forces the drama to be good. And the motion picture is going to be the means of putting the drama back in the hands of the American people. When that time comes you will find an audience of twenty million or more in the United States who have learned to appreciate certain standards of artistic form and who will constitute a much more intelligent theatrical audience than the audiences of the past, taken as a whole.

"You see, the motion picture audience is an audience of experts. All who go to picture theaters go so frequently that they become experts on the art they are patronizing—and that is the reason the more artistic pictures make such big hits. You can't fool the public. That in turn reacts upon the producer, and he has to use more and more care, take more and more time, in the making of his picture. Through this action and reaction of expert audiences and artistic producer will come the new art of photodramaturgy."

The writer looked up. He suggested that in its particular form it was the first time he had heard that last word. "Well," said Mr. DeMille, who had been slowly walking about one of the offices in the Lasky headquarters, "I guess it is the first time I have heard it." The conversation turned to the ultimate influence of the picture on the stage.

"The pictures will have this effect on the stage," continued Mr. DeMille. "They will have two big, distinct effects. The first will be that the action of the drama itself is going to be quicker, cleaner cut and elementally clearer. The second effect will be that in the setting and the treatment the theater will become more suggestive and less imitative. The necessity for physical realism is going to disappear from the theater because that function will be taken care of in a better way by the photoplay."

We spoke of the demands of exhibitors for strong pictures, for the subjects that appeal to the mass and of the difficulties confronting the producer who aims to give the best. "In order to get at these results and to realize some of these ideals we feel that the fundamental thing is the scenario, the story itself," said the playwright. "We have come to the conclusion that the fine production with a bad scenario is a waste of good effort. We are doing everything possible to get the highest calibre of brains creating stories for the screen.

"The future of the photodrama is going to lie in the quality of the stories. You will see inside of a very few years a certain screen literature, in which the author will begin to come into his own, in the creation of which there will be photodramatists of equal ability and much greater renown than the dramatists of the theater, because where the play of the popular dramatist is seen by ten million the play of the popular photodramatist will be seen by a hundred million. The public is just beginning to have a glimmering of this. The managers have not yet had that glimmering; that is, most of them have not. You may spend $25,000 on a bad scenario and when the subject is finished find a bad picture. If you spend $10,000 on a good scenario you will be much more apt to have a great picture—but not inevitably so. Our greatest pictures are not our most expensive ones. We have found our greatest successes have been with the simple, powerful dramatic story told with the same dramatic simplicity it is on the stage.

"If you could look in on our little council table after the first showing of a subject and could hear us tear a picture to shreds you would think it must be one of the rottenest things ever perpetrated by man. That is because we are always looking at a picture with an eye to future possibilities. The day when we are pleased with our work will mark the beginning of our decline.

"One of the striking features about a motion picture audience is its independence of the opinions of any other audience," continued Mr. DeMille. "Each one makes up its own mind as to whether it likes a picture or not. Consequently the manufacturer gets a real expression of opinion. On the stage we get the expression of New York City's opinion reflected through the different colors of other cities and always highly tinged by Broadway.

"That is one of the factors that makes the condition of the drama so unhealthy. The American people will not make up its mind as to a play until it has heard the opinion of Broadway. It has been so taught to accept that opinion that it demands a guarantee before paying its money. So it comes about that the least American city on the continent is dominating the form of American drama.

"The metropolitan district, as we describe it in New York, means to us about 7 per cent. of our American audience. If New York does not like our pictures we have 93 per cent. of our audience still to hear from. That 93 per cent. is unaffected by the opinion of the 7 per cent.; they will express the real opinion of the American people. I had to go three thousand miles from New York before I saw where America was. After being in New York for thirty-odd years, I discovered I had to a certain extent the Broadway point of view, which of course is interesting and exhilarating, but not particularly healthy."

"What in time to come will be the function of the director of pictures—do you think there will be a continuance of the policy that has so generally prevailed in the past of giving him the story and letting him put it on as he sees fit or will he be handed a script with instructions to adhere to it?" we asked.

"The function of the director will be to interpret, not to create," was the reply. "But interpretation is so important that it may immeasurably add to the value of the finished product. Has the Lasky company received from the outside any scenarios which it could use? No, it has not. We would be perfectly willing to buy scenarios from outside sources if the story were right for us. We would then rewrite it ourselves with our own technique. No, I am not now doing any script writing. I am too busy working with my associates who are doing the writing—I am with them all the way through a story."

Mr. DeMille had just returned from a four days' visit to his country home. He left New York for Los Angeles last Monday.

IT'S MISS VAN BUREN—NOT STEDMAN.

Through a misunderstanding, a telegram from the Los Angeles studios of David Horsley to his New York office, it was announced recently that Myrtle Stedman had been engaged to appear in Horsley Productions. Miss Van Buren is the star who was really referred to in the telegram. Miss Van Buren has been signed to appear in Centaur productions, and Miss Stedman, it is understood, will remain with her present employers.

BERT ADLER CELEBRATES.

Bert Adler, manager of the Universal Coytesville studio, is sending his friends a neat card in commemoration of the anniversary of his first year with Universal. Bert was five years with Thanhouser, and states that if the Big U's satisfaction with him is as profound as his satisfaction with its treatment of him—five years will look like a short stretch!

Snitz Edwards with Kleine

THE first of the eccentric German character comedians to popularize the style of German dialect so prevalent today in musical comedies and shows of a like nature was Snitz Edwards, whose engagement with the Kleine forces marks his first appearance in pictures after an active stage career of many years.

Snitz Edwards.

Edwards is recognized as a straight light comedian of exceptional ability, and the "light" may apply with equal force to his odd physical weight, which is just 102 pounds. Years ago at a rehearsal of the "Seven Suabians" he was overheard by the stage manager telling a story in dialect. As the part that Snitz was cast for was not a particularly good one, the stage manager asked him if he could elaborate upon it so that it would stand out more prominently. Snitz at first demurred, feeling that his dignity as an exponent of light comedy was being assailed; however, the stage manager's suggestion finally prevailed and the result was that Snitz carried the play by storm and was acclaimed the creator of a new idea in Teutonic comedy. This happy chance did more to establish Edwards as a comedian of national fame than any other single influence.

Several years ago Edwards decided to retire from the stage, and, with that end in view, purchased a farm in Orange County, N. Y., but the managerial inducements proved more potent than the quiet of the country. He "came back" in the part of Schmaltz, a Viennese wig-maker in "The Rollicking Girl."

Snitz Edwards boasts more than thirty years of actual stage experience. In that time he saw the birth of the musical comedy and aided vastly in adding the mirth thereto. He will be remembered for his work in "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge," "The Silver Slipper," "The Woman Haters," "The Man Who Stood Still," "High Jinks" and many others.

WILLIAM COPLEY, PURCHASING AGENT FOR WORLD FILM.

World Film Corporation has appointed William Copley to the position of the purchasing agent of the company. Mr. Copley, at the early part of his career was a newspaper man, gaining his experience on the New York Press. Entering commercial life, a position was offered to him in a large New York mercantile establishment. He held this for several years, during which he took a Civil Service examination for an appointment in the purchasing department of New York City. Mr. Copley passed this examination with very high honors, and as a consequence received an appointment in the Department of the Board of Water Supply, where he had charge of the store room as well as the purchase of supplies.

The experience so gained was extremely valuable to him, his knowledge of detail and the requirements of a large business demanding care and judgment in the ordering of supplies being of great value to him in his new post.

Mr. Copley therefore comes to World Film with an excellent reputation for just that kind of ability and experience which are required in the service of a corporation of the magnitude and ramification of World Film.

KATE CLAXTON SUES WILLIAM FOX.

Alleging that she owns the rights to the old-time play "The Two Orphans," Kate E. Stevenson, better known as Kate Claxton, has brought suit against William Fox to compel the latter to suppress the picture produced by him from her play and to pay $100,000 damages. It is alleged that Selig owns the picture rights to the play.

Metro Pictures Magazine Makes Bow

Handsome Publication Designed for General Readers Placed on Sale on October 2.

A PUBLICATION of the "different" sort entered the motion picture field on October 2, when the first number of Metro Pictures Magazine made its bow to the public. The magazine will be published weekly by the Metro Pictures Corporation. It is under the personal direction of Arthur James, as editor, with an executive staff which includes Merritt Crawford, as managing editor; Henry James, as business manager, and George W. Herbst, as advertising manager.

The first number is of twenty pages, with a cover in colors. A full-page picture of little Mary Miles Minter, starring in "Emmy of Stork's Nest," a Columbia Pictures Corporation feature, scheduled for early release on the Metro program. In its pages, profusely illustrated, are leading articles by Mme. Petrova, William Faversham, Emily Stevens, Edfrid A. Bingham, Hamilton Revelle, Tom J. Geraghty and others. It will be sold at 5 cents and its distribution will include the news stands.

The Metro may well be proud of its new journal. Its typography is unique and of a high standard.

Kalem's New "Helen"

THERE may be more daring misses in motion pictures than Kalem's new Helen, but after having witnessed the feats performed by her in "A Test of Courage," and "A Mile a Minute," two October releases, it would be difficult indeed to convince us of that fact.

Helen Rose Gibson.

Her full name is Helen Rose Gibson, and because she is the daughter of an engineer and has spent all her life in a railroad atmosphere, the most recent addition to the Kalem forces is well qualified to assume the central role in the "Hazards of Helen Railroad Series." It is Miss Gibson's face, by the way, which smiles from the accompanying illustration.

Although Miss Gibson is a newcomer to motion pictures, she has taken to the screen as a duck takes to water. She loves motion picture work, and as a consequence her work shows it.

Miss Gibson's father boasts of the fact that his daughter is just as much at home in the cab of a locomtive as any engineer. By the same token, the chief dispatcher of one of the roads running out of Los Angeles pronounces her one of the best telegraph operators that ever pounded a key.

Nevertheless, Kalem's new Helen regards her accomplishments modestly, and since they aid her in imbuing her characterizations with realism, is glad she possesses them. Right now, Miss Gibson is filled with a determination to become one of the screen's foremost stars and inasmuch as she possesses ability and personality, in addition to ambition, it is safe to predict that she will eventually attain her goal.

BESSIE BANNON LEAVES EDISON STUDIO.

Those who have had business relations with the Edison Studio in the Bronx, New York, will remember with delight the bright and illuminating presence thereat of Miss Bessie Bannon, who, for the past seven years, was confidential secretary to Manager Plimpton. There was little that transpired in and about the big studio that Miss Bannon was not thoroughly familiar with and as a source of real information she was the animated intelligence bureau. But Miss Bannon has followed the example of her brother, Frank Bannon, and has resigned and gone away from there. However, she is not to leave the motion picture business, for there are rumors that she has already made a new connection and will soon be in the harness again.

William H. Tooker

WILLIAM H. TOOKER, who for the past fourteen months has played the leading male parts in all the productions of the Life Photo Film Corporation, is an actor of long standing on the legitimate stage, having appeared under the management of David Belasco, Klaw & Erlanger and under the personal management of the late Charles Frohman for over seven years. Supporting such stars as Fanny Davenport, Clara Bloodgood, John Mason, Emma Dunn, Emmett Corrigan and many other stars of note, Mr. Tooker was well schooled in all phases of dramatic art and this no doubt accounts for his finished work in the motion pictures. Mr. Tooker began his theatrical career as a singer in the old Tiffany theater in San Francisco and from there he went into grand opera, where he performed with many of the leading singers of the day. Mr. Tooker also had considerable experience in stock theatricals, and for over four consecutive years he appeared in one theater in Minneapolis, Minn. His advent into the field of the silent drama was with Laura Nelson Hall in the feature picture "Dope," which attracted much attention throughout the world and Mr. Tooker's work in this picture resulted in an offer to star with the Life Photo Company, which he accepted and with whom he remained until the firm ceased producing. The "Ordeal," one of the pictures in which Mr. Tooker played the leading character, was ordered shown before the King and Queen of England. His work has been pronounced by the critics as being the highest form of dramatic acting they have ever been privileged to witness.

William H. Tooker.

GRIFFITH FIRST PRODUCER IN TRADE BOARD.

The Motion Picture Board of Trade is settled in its temporary offices at 18 E. 41st street. The board has taken but a four-months' lease in anticipation of removal later to the Broadway structure to be especially devoted to motion picture enterprises.

J. W. Binder, executive secretary of the board, sent a telegram to David W. Griffith, inviting the producer to join the new organization. A reply was promptly forthcoming, stating that Mr. Griffith was heartily in accord with the principles and objects of the Board of Trade and that his check for initiation and dues was on the way to New York.

Mr. Binder reports the affairs of the board to be progressing most favorably.

NEW RIALTO THEATER PROJECTION PLANS.

S. L. Rothapfel, former manager of the Strand theater and now vice-president and managing director of the new Rialto theater, being constructed on the site of the old Hammerstein vaudeville house on 42d street, in New York, has engaged J. H. Hallberg, with whom most of our readers are familiar, in a consulting capacity, to prepare plans and specifications for the entire machine booth and projection equipment and ventilation of the booth. Mr. Hallberg will instal the moving picture machines and lense system, special dissolving stereopticons, specially constructed spot-lights with dissolving effect attachments, new and novel emergency rheostat equipment for the Edison 110-220 volt D. C. system and a complete motor generator equipment for the control of the projector arcs with a capacity of 125 amperes for each machine.

J. H. Hallberg.

Spiegel Outlines Equitable Plans

Chicago Business Man Who Is Head of Film Corporation Brings to New Connection Experience Gained in Other Lines.

ALTHOUGH he is the president and general manager of a large mail order house in Chicago, Arthur H. Spiegel, president of the Equitable Motion Picture Corporation, is now spending three-quarters of his time in New York. He is interested in the affairs of the Equitable to such an extent that he is making it his chief concern. Mr. Spiegel has built up a large business in Chicago. One of the important factors contributing to his success has been his knowledge of applied advertising. Another is the attention he has given to satisfying his customers and keeping in touch with them. He is endeavoring to apply these same general principles to the conduct of the Equitable.

Arthur H. Spiegel.

Mr. Spiegel, in a talk with a World man Tuesday, said he had had no connection with the moving picture industry prior to six months ago. For a long time he had been an attendant at picture theaters and had formulated in his own mind many plans he believed would be of value to the maker of pictures. He had large ideas as to the future of the industry and of its possibilities, and to the heads of a large banking house in New York, with which he had a close business acquaintance, he communicated these ideas. Mr. Spiegel was a believer in going slow, in feeling the way, and not trying to create a company over night—to have behind a project capital in such abundance there would be no necessity for haste in putting a subject on the market, to be able absolutely to throw away a picture that did not come up to a high standard and to be in a position to have on hand such a variety of productions as would insure desirable contrast in releasing sequence. So the Equitable came to be formed.

"When 'Trilby,' the first Equitable subject, was released to exhibitors on September 20," said Mr. Spiegel, "we had eight others on the shelf. This was in line with our policy. It may interest you to know that two pictures have been 'junked' outright. They were not actually bad, perhaps, but were not up to the standard we have established. We want good pictures. We have engaged the very best talent we could find. We now have at work seven directors, and we will put others on when we can get the men we want.

"Our second release—and of course you know our pictures go to the public through the World Film offices—was Julius Steger in 'The Master of the House.' Following in order will be Helen Ware in 'The Price' and Tom Wise in 'Blue Grass.' We are trying to get as near 100 per cent. subjects as we possibly can—in stories, casts, sets and sites and photography.

"We are also rendering service to the exhibitor in the way of personal advice, in suggesting advertising aids, in doing everything we can to increase the business of the theater owner. We realize if we accomplish our aim in this particular direction other manufacturers will reap benefit from it as well as ourselves, but we feel also that if we give substantial help to exhibitors we will be making fast friends. We are, too, going to give much attention to advertising our productions. In telling the public what we have to sell I have had some experience—in fact, all of my Chicago business is done through advertising. That side of the picture industry is one with which I am pretty well acquainted. We have in mind a number of publicity plans which will be worked out in due time."

Mr. Spiegel has a likable personality. He is aggressive without being pushful. On first acquaintance he impresses as being a believer in the strength of modest statements; his manner is convincing.

Otis Harlan in "A Black Sheep"

OTIS HARLAN, known the country over as "the king of American comedians," will make his initial bow in motion pictures on October 18, when he appears in the leading role in "A Black Sheep," a five-reel Selig Red Seal Play released through V-L-S-E. Picture theater patrons are to be treated to a new style of comedy when they see Mr. Harlan in action. He has coupled his knowledge of "what the public wants" with the possibilities of the camera, as he has learned them in the Selig studios, and the result is a delightful brand of comedy which is distinctly of the Harlan variety. He has carefully avoided all that has become trite in the screen farce and has also evaded the stiffness which marks all straight stage comedy brought before the motion picture camera. Mr. Harlan's fun-making antics may be described as being a happy medium between the farce of the screen and the straight comedy of the stage. It is thoroughly enjoyable to all and offensive to none.

Mr. Harlan's recent decision that he has given up the stage is of no little importance, since he has trod the boards since 1887. He has appeared in most of the Hoyt farces on the stage and has created the original roles in many of them. In addition to these plays he has appeared in company with such stars as Thomas Seabrook, Edna May, Annette Kellermann and Anna Held. He is also a manager and producer of note, having charge of the Bijou Circuit for three years and having staged the original production of "Baby Mine." Some of the most notable stage productions in which he appeared and those which old-time theater-goers are most likely to remember are "The Isle of Champaign," "Tabasco," "Broadway to Tokio," "The Girl from Up There," "The Vanderbilt Cup," "A Parisian Model" and "A Model Maid." The Hoyt plays in which he appeared were "A Black Sheep," the play which has been filmed by Selig; "A Hole in the Ground," "A Brass Monkey," "A Texas Steer," which has also been filmed by Selig, and several of the other famous Hoyt plays.

The new office at San Antonio, Texas, will be a subsidiary branch of the Dallas office. This address will be 228 Prudential Building. M. M. Lindheim will be the manager.

PEERLESS CONTRACT WITH FIELDS UPHELD.

In a lengthy opinion Judge Hough, of the United States District Court, has decided that the contract between the Peerless Feature Producing Company and Lew Fields is a valid contract and can be enforced. The court decided that Fields should file a bond in the sum of $12,000 before Friday, September 24, or that an injunction against him would become operative. The bond was filed.

Metro to Release News Weekly

Expert Cameramen in Every Exchange Center Will Work in Conjunction with Staff of Prominent Newspaper.

METRO this week announced that President Richard A. Rowland has executed a contract with H. P. Wayman, president and general manager of the National News Weekly, under the terms of which the Metro Pictures Corporation in co-operation with more than a score of the leading daily newspapers in the most important cities of the United States will release 1,000 feet of news film each week. Under this arrangement, Metro at once takes over the entire output of a great organization of associated newspapers and cameramen which, since the middle of summer, has been releasing its product through the World Film Corporation.

To give an idea of the importance and high calibre of the newspapers associated in the conduct of this enterprise it is only necessary to name the Philadelphia Public Ledger, St. Louis Times, New York World, Milwaukee Journal, Buffalo Enquirer, Chicago Evening Post, Atlanta Constitution, Cleveland Leader, Omaha Bee, Cincinnati Enquirer, Dallas News, Baltimore News, Washington Times, New Orleans Times-Picayune, Detroit Times, Minneapolis Journal and Pittsburgh Dispatch. Several other important dailies in cities where the National News Weekly has representatives are at present completing arrangements looking toward affiliation with Metro and the big organization of which Mr. Wayman is the head.

The new "Weekly" will be released regularly in the Metro program in conjunction with the feature pictures of Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., Popular Plays and Players, Quality Pictures Corporation, Columbia Pictures Corporation and other producing companies who distribute their output through Metro.

A portion of the weekly will be devoted to a picture review of the local events in the city and surrounding territory where it is shown. The remainder will be given over to subjects of national interest from the twenty large cities of the country where Metro exchanges are located and in which the National News Weekly has clients. Each film will be known by the name of the newspaper in that territory that is affiliated with Metro and the National News Weekly, in conjunction with the words "Metro Weekly."

An expert cameraman will work under the direction of the city or managing editor of each newspaper affiliated with Metro in his territory.

Helen Gardner

HELEN GARDNER has joined the forces of the Universal, where she will play leads in a number of large productions. After being educated in a French convent and traveling abroad, Miss Gardner studied for professional work at the Sargent Dramatic School and joined the classes of that mistress of pantomime, Madam Alberti, in New York. The Vitagraph Company engaged her to play for the camera and her biggest success while with that company was as Becky Sharp in "Vanity Fair."

Helen Gardner.

Miss Gardner's film company at Tappan produced "Cleopatra," "A Daughter of Pan," "Fleur de Lys," "Olga Treskoff," "A Prince of Bagdad," "A Sister to Carmen" and "The Wife of Cain."

After her work at the Tappan studio, Miss Gardner returned to the Vitagraph, only recently signing with the Universal. Miss Gardner plays all sorts of parts, and is an extremely capable actress. She is widely read, has individual ideas on every subject.

Marjorie Daw Has Her Chance at Last

WHEN the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company releases on October 18, through the Paramount Picture Corporation, its all-star production of "The Chorus Lady," a young woman who has been coming fast to the forefront of photoplay stars will then have her greatest opportunity to score a public success. The girl is Miss Marjorie Daw, the fourteen-year-old protegee of Geraldine Farrar and one of the prettiest young women on the screen.

Marjorie Daw.

Miss Daw was selected from more than a score of young women at the Lasky studios last summer by Geraldine Farrar as a girl who possessed exceptional acting talent. Cecil B. DeMille, director general of the company, appreciating the value of Miss Farrar's opinion, immediately gave Miss Daw her chance and she has scored a great success as the little worker in "Out of Darkness," with Charlotte Walker.

But "The Chorus Lady," which is based on James Forbes' popular and successful play of the same name, is Miss Daw's first real big chance and she has accepted it, so it is said at the studio, with enthusisatic cleverness. In this production she appears as Nora, the little sister, about whom the action of the play revolves.

"The Chorus Lady" is a glimpse behind the scenes where the wheels of musical comedy turn. Some of the scenes of the photoplay show a real rehearsal of a chorus for a musical production. The incidents about which the drama turn are founded on true events. "The Chorus Lady," with Rose Stahl as the star, ran for more than a season in New York and for several seasons on tour.

Miss Cleo Ridgeley, who did splendid work in "The Puppet Crown," "The Fighting Hope," "The Secret Orchard" and "The Marriage of Kitty" and other Lasky productions will have the title role in "The Chorus Lady." It is a part that suits excellently her attractiveness and charm. Wallace Reid, who appears as Don Jose in "Carmen," will be the hero of "The Chorus Lady."

VITAGRAPHERS TO DANCE TO OLD-TIME TUNES.

A radical departure from the modern fox-trot, one-step, and other later-day dances, will be inaugurated by A. Victor Smith, chairman of the committee for the Vitagraph Benevolent Association Dance, to be held at McLoughlin's Bayside Casino, Shepshead Bay, on Thursday, October 27, 1915. Mr. Smith announces that the Vitagraphers and their friends will dance to the music of the old-time songs that were popular twenty years ago. The strains of "Maggie Murphy's Home," "Annie Rooney," "Comrades," "Throw Him Down, McClusky," "On the Bowery," "My Sweetheart's the Man in the Moon," and other of the old favorites will inspire the dancers to enjoy the almost forgotten lanciers, old-fashioned waltz, barn and round dances.

John T. Kelly and Harry Fisher, who for years were with the old team of Harrigan and Hart, will play host to Mrs. Edward Harrigan and surviving members of the old Harrigan and Hart companies, who have received special invitations. A feature will be the introduction of an unpublished song by Mr. Kelly, "She's My Annie," a song he made popular during the last few seasons of the late Edward Harrigan's activities.

The Vitagraph players, especially the older members, are enthusiastic over the prospect of reviving the dances they enjoyed years ago, and it is safe to predict the largest audience ever assembled under the Casino roof will be in attendance.

Manufacturers Move Against "Dupers"

A. George Levi and Philip Lewis Indicted in Federal Court on Charges of Violating Copyright Law.

THE first arrest and indictment under Section 28 of the copyright law, making unlawful the willful infringement of copyright photoplays, was handed down on September 29 by the Grand Jurors of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. The persons indicted were A. George Levi, doing business at 145 West Forty-fifth street, and Philip Lewis, of Lewis Pennant Features, doing business at 110 West Fortieth street.

This is the culmination of a series of activities carried on for several months by Jacob Schechter, of the firm of Schechter & Lotsch, attorneys. Mr. Schechter has been specially retained both by the Keystone and Essanay companies for the purpose of running down the various "dupers" throughout the country of copyrighted productions featuring Charlie Chaplin. In these matters he has acted for Walter N. Seligsberg, attorney for the Keystone Company, and LeRoy D. Ball, attorney for the Essanay Company.

Many civil suits have been instituted by Mr. Schechter on behalf of these companies. A writ of seizure authorizing attachment by the United States Marshal of any infringing film accompanied the institution of each suit with the following result:

In the suit brought against Levi several pieces of "duped" positive film were seized. At the same time there was found in the possession of Levi "duped" positives of the Essanay productions "The Champion" and "A Night Out."

In the suit instituted against the Mount Vernon Motion Picture Company, there were seized several pieces of "duped" negative, and the company admitted having burned the "duped" negative of "The Champion" just prior to the seizure.

At the Pierson Film Laboratories, in Ossining, N. Y., three complete reels of "duped" negative Keystone productions were seized.

In the suit instituted against the Exclusive Features, Inc., Harry A. Samwick, Isaac E. Chadwick and Joseph M. Goldstein, three positive reels were seized.

In the suit instituted against the Modern Film Laboratories, Morris Medove, Isaac Picker and Boris Medove, of 199 Newell street, Brooklyn, there were seized from ten to twelve reels of "duped" Keystone copyrighted productions. Among these were "Dough and Dynamite," "His Musical Career," "Getting Acquainted" and "His Trysting Place."

Levi, acting with Lewis as a silent partner, was, it is charged, very brazen and daring. The two were not content, it is alleged, with "duping" Chaplin films owned and copyrighted by the Keystone and Essanay companies, but carried on business under the name of "Chaplin Film Company," and, it is claimed, generally informed the public they were duly authorized by the Keystone company to carry on business under that name and to sell Chaplin productions.

The arrest and indictment of Levi and Lewis is perhaps only the beginning of the crusade against the "dupers." There are others imminent.

Mr. Schechter is well known in the film business. He has acted as attorney for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and many other large film companies for years. He is especially well versed in the copyright law. Seen at his office, 10 Wall street, New York City, he stated:

"The copyright law as now in effect is sufficiently comprehensive in both the criminal and civil aspects to protect the manufacturers of film against the unlawful 'duping' and infringement of copyright productions, if only the manufacturers will seek the protection the law affords them.

"The actions begun will be prosecuted with vigor, and this will probably stop once and for all the 'duping' which constituted such an evil in the early days of the film business, and of which recently there has been such a pernicious revival."

Mr. Schechter further states that the law of unfair competition will protect the manufacturer against "duping," even though the procuring of copyright protection may in some way have been overlooked; that the common law right of property attaches to all productions, and this will be safeguarded by the courts throughout the country. He believes the sum involved in the illegal making and marketing of films in the past few months approximates half a million dollars.

Mr. Schechter says "duping" is the greatest evil the manufacturers have to contend with; that they ought to get together and prosecute every infringer to the full extent of the law. It is only when the "dupers" and infringers realize that no quarter will be shown them will the moving picture business be rid of them, and that the manufacturers ought to join forces by giving information one to the other and following up each alleged violation promptly and efficiently.

Miles Welch

MILES WELCH, who played opposite "Little Mary" Miles Minter in "Emmy, of Stork's Nest," a five-part photoplay just completed by the Columbia Picture Corporation for the Metro program, scored so notably in the part assigned to him that arrangements were at once made for Mr. Welch to play similar parts in future productions in which Miss Minter will be featured.

Miles Welch.

Mr. Welch is by no means a newcomer in motion pictures. His first work was with the Vitagraph stock company where he was engaged for a year. Later he joined the Kalem stock, playing lead juvenile roles for four months. His first work with Metro was in a small part in "Always in the Way." He made so much of the role that William Nigh, the director of the production, wrote him a part in "A Royal Family," which was being produced at that time. From that he stepped in the lead male part in "Emmy, of Stork's Nest."

Mr. Welch is a graduate of Columbia University, and before entering that institution took a special course at Yale. He is an enthusiastic college man in every sense of the word, and an all-around athlete of considerable ability. He made his "theatrical debut" while a freshman at Columbia, playing the leading role in the annual Varsity show.

GEORGE PROBERT STARRED IN TWO GOLD ROOSTER PLAYS.

George Probert, whose portrayal of Oskar Von Guggen in "Innocent" and the cadet in "The Lure" caused such favorable comment by the press and public, and who has been featured in Pathe's forthcoming Gold Rooster play, "The Spender," has been engaged to take the principal role in "Nedra," another Gold Rooster play, now being produced for Pathe by Edward Jose. Probert will be ably supported by Fania Marinoff, who played opposite Clifton Crawford in Pathe's five-reel comedy, "The Galloper," and by Margaret Greene and Craufurd Kent, all three screen celebrities.

"Nedra" on the screen is an adaptation by George Brackett Seitz of the famous and popular novel of the same name by George Barr McCutcheon, and the swift action of the story makes it eminently suitable for the pictures. Edward Jose, in whose care Pathe has intrusted this Gold Rooster play, has already made for the Pathe feature program "The Beloved Vagabond" and "Simon the Jester," both by Wm. J. Locke, and "The Closing Net," a Seitz adaptation of Henry C. Rowland's great story. Mr. Jose says there are opportunities for thrills in "Nedra" that it is not often the good fortune of a producer to have handed him.

MUTUAL WEEKLY'S QUICK WORK.

A terrible cave-in of the new subway construction work at Seventh avenue and Twenty-fourth street, New York City, occurred Wednesday, September 22, about eight a. m. The Mutual Weekly's cameraman received word of this about nine a. m., and that same afternoon this subject was shown as a "Mutual Special Release" in the New York theaters, as well as copies dispatched to all points throughout the country. The Mutual Weekly is produced by the Gaumont Company at Flushing, N. Y.

John Mackenzie, Cameraman I.

Veteran Photographer, Writer, Globe-Trotter, All-Around Interesting Personality, Returns from Visit to Old Home in Scotland.

STOPPING over in New York on his way back to resume his duties at the Balboa studio in Long Beach, Cal., John Mackenzie favored the staff of The Moving Picture World with a call on Tuesday. With him was his second son, Ian (Jack) Mackenzie, Biograph cameraman. His older son, Gerald, is a cameraman at the Selig Edendale studio at Los Angeles. Mr. Mackenzie had just returned from a visit to his old home in Scotland. His stay in the British Isles lasted five weeks.

It is a many-sided personality, that of Mr. Mackenzie's, and an all-around interesting one. For twenty years he has operated a motion picture camera—for fourteen of these in the continuous employ of Charles Urban—in the course of his professional work he has traveled all over the world; he has met men of all kinds and in all conditions. He has been a keen observer. Added to the gift of observation he is blessed with a wide vocabulary, a "fine pick" of descriptive language. He has written of his experiences in books and in magazines. Among the former is "Rambles in Many Lands."

It was twenty years ago, when Mr. Mackenzie was in business in Inverness as an optician and a photographer, that a juggler came to the Scotch town with one of the primitive "blinkers" showing Loie Fuller in a skirt dance. Mr. Mackenzie admitted he was hopelessly inoculated with the cinematographic virus on the first contact. Undeterred by the possession of a growing family and uninfluenced by the ominous shaking of heads of his older relatives he raised what funds he could and started out to secure a projector. In his search he went as far as Brussels. Finally in London he purchased what he was after. When he returned to Inverness he caused it to be known he was going to give a show. His fellow-townsmen rallied around him with a unanimity that bespoke their pride in a pioneer. On his first night's exhibition he took in a sum sufficient to recoup him for his outlay in London. On his second night he was money ahead.

At that time there was but one concern in London—Fuerst Brothers—that sold film. The lengths were in sizes of 53 or 54 feet. The same firm also possessed a camera about which it was very secretive. It was used to take local pictures around London. When Mr. Mackenzie inquired about the possibility of purchasing it something was said about £250 and then it was declared £1,000 could not buy it. Mr. Mackenzie was not to be stopped. Being an optician he was an expert mechanic. He had taken medals for artistic photography. He proceeded to build, and did build, a camera, and with it he was the first man in Scotland to take local pictures. His business grew until he was clearing a profit that averaged a thousand pounds a year. Then came the disastrous winter of the belated coronation of King Edward, which ceremony was postponed on account of the sovereign being compelled to undergo an operation.

Mr. Mackenzie had booked for the showing of the coronation the most expensive halls in Scotland. In spite of the falling off in the show business he carried out his schedule, exhibiting at such a loss that at the end of the season he was £3,000 a loser. The cameraman smiled as he referred to the men who, in order to be first in the field, had had photographed in Paris a fake coronation—only to have their labor for their pains—and expense.

Forced by his losses to make a fresh start, Mr. Mackenzie seventeen years ago joined Mr. Urban, at a time when that pioneer manufacturer had but one cameraman. For Mr. Urban he traveled all over Europe, Northern Africa, India, Australia, New Zealand, Tasmania and America. For a year and eight months Mr. Mackenzie was at the Kalem Glendale studio. For the past year he has been at the Balboa—and he speaks with enthusiasm of his associates and his surroundings.

Mr. Mackenzie said his five-weeks' visit to England and Scotland was purely a social one. In London he visited many trade shows. At one of these he had a two-hours' reminiscent chat with Mr. Urban.

Asked if he had noted any striking points of difference between the American and the European producer, Mr. Mackenzie said he believed where the European director was more concerned as to larger results, for the main achievement, he did not possess the keenness for continuity, for smaller details, he was not such a stickler for accuracy in the little things, as his American competitor. One gathered the impression that Mr. Mackenzie considered the American producer in attainments on the whole had the advantage over his European confrere.

Anders Randolf

ANDERS RANDOLF, a Vitagraph stock member, and player of ability, an artist of merit and an all-around athlete, was born near Wiborg, Denmark, December 18, 1875, and is a direct lineal descendant of one of the Viking rulers of early Danish history. He attended the military school in Copenhagen and graduated as Maitre d'Arms. He was the champion swordsman of his native country when he was but nineteen years of age. Later he saw military service in the Royal Hussars of Denmark.

Anders Randolf.

Coming to America when he was in his early twenties, he earned his first money as fencing master in a number of fencing clubs and colleges. But the military spirit inculcated in him in Denmark was still potent, and he became a member of the 17th United States Infantry as first assistant instructor, with Lieutenant Butts, in the making of gymnastics compulsory in the United States Army.

His term of military service ended, a number of Mr. Randolf's friends, who had followed his artistic career induced him to try the stage as a means of expressing his artistry, and although he did not have any special desire to become an actor, he allowed himself to be guided by their judgment and joined the Empire Stock Company, playing in Columbus, Ohio. Once fairly launched in this new profession, however, the tenacity of purpose that won him military honors, and renown as a master swordsman enabled him to overcome the difficulties of stage technique and he became successful as an actor.

In his early youth, Mr. Randolf had an inborn talent for painting, and during his spare time was a tireless student, employing his talent to such advantage he became recognized as a portrait painter of repute. During his career as an actor, he again took up the brush and palette and turned his attention to the painting of theatrical celebrities. Among the most prominent stars who sat for Mr. Randolf are included such well-known players as George Arliss, Theodore Roberts, Tyrone Power, Holbrook Blinn, William Courtenay, William Farnum and many others.

His experience as a motion picture actor before joining the Vitagraph Company included a portrayal of the leading character in a prehistoric picture produced by one of the larger companies. His reputation as an artist had preceded him at the Vitagraph studio, and besides playing leading characters in pictures he was commissioned to paint the portraits of principal Vitagraph stars. The walls of the Vitagraph theater, New York City, are adorned with examples of his handiwork, the late John Bunny, Earle Williams, Maurice Costello, Lillian Walker, Anita Stewart, Mary Maurice, Charles Kent, Harry Morey, Dorothy Kelly, Wally Van, Sidney Drew and others are life-like reproductions of the players, in oil, that added new laurels to his fame as an artist. His most important work before the camera is represented by artistic portrayals of characters in such Vitagraph productions as "The Senator's Brother," "The Wheels of Justice," "From Headquarters," "413," "The Blue Rose," "The Way of the Transgressor," "The Return of Maurice Donnelly," etc.

SCREEN MAN HAS PLEASANT TRIP.

S. H. Jones, president of the Gold King Screen Company of Altus, Okla., and inventor of that famous screen, is again back at his desk after a prolonged visit to the San Francisco Fair. He reports a pleasant and profitable trip to the coast, having secured a large number of orders besides placing a Gold King Screen in the projection room at Universal City, which he considers quite an achievement, considering the fact that nearly every screen manufacturer in the country had a representative on the ground.

The many courtesies extended Mr. Jones by the numerous famous picture stars were greatly appreciated and he hopes to repeat the pleasant trip in the near future.

$13.00 Advertisement Brings Million-Dollar Corporation

Small Ad in the Moving Picture World Brought a Large Concern to Las Vegas, New Mexico.

THERE are no "ifs" or "maybes" or "perhapses" to this story. The headlines state the facts exactly. Some little time ago the Las Vegas Commercial Club of Las Vegas, N. M., conducted an unusual advertising campaign among the moving picture journals of the country. As direct result of this campaign the Selig Polyscope Company of Chicago located one of their companies in the New Mexico city. Now comes the story of the National Bible Play Society, a million-dollar corporation, making its headquarters in Las Vegas, directly through a small ad in the Moving Picture World. The ad was a 5-inch, single column insertion and cost Las Vegas exactly $13.34.

Here's the "how" of it: O. L. Williams, a Texas man, was looking for a location to establish a motion picture company to produce Biblical subjects necessitating Palestine-like topography. He had already visited a number of places, but none suited him. Finally, one day, he happened to be in San Antonio, Texas, and picked up a copy of the Moving Picture World. The Las Vegas ad attracted his attention and he immediately got in touch with Secretary LeNoir, of the Las Vegas Club. Letters flew back thick and fast with the result of Williams visiting Las Vegas. 'Twas enough! A look over that country and Las Vegas was assured that it would be the headquarters of the new company.

As a result the National Bible Play took over the famous Las Vegas Hot Springs property of 1,000 acres from the local Y. M. C. A. and will immediately start to improve it and begin definite operations. In passing it is interesting to note that one of the side issues of that ad in the World is the fact that the local Y. M. C. A. will be relieved of a big debt that has been hanging over its building for a number of years. About 18 months ago progressive citizens of Las Vegas urged the Santa Fe Railway to donate the Springs property to the Y. M. C. A. to hold in trust for the community at large. The Santa Fe generously acquiesced. Since that time the citizens of Las Vegas have tried in a number of ways to dispose of the property to an organization that would operate it in a manner that would benefit that city. Then came the National Bible Play Society, which will pay over to the Y. M. C. A. a sum which will clear that worthy institution of its every debt.

The plans of the National Bible Play Society should be of interest to the moving picture world. In the first place the society will produce plays taken from both the Old and New Testaments. Each story will be supervised and censored by an inter-denominational board of ministers who will pass upon its chronological and historical correctness. Then the film will be released to the churches, Y. M. C. A.'s and similar organizations throughout the country. Also the society will produce bi-ennially a sacred play fashioned somewhat after the Oberammergau spectacle. It will require two weeks to perform, and, unlike the German passion play, each day will tell a separate and distinct story.

The society plans to operate the Las Vegas Hot Springs as a resort particularly for church people. The splendid climate of Las Vegas, the thirty-seven highly mineralized and efficacious hot springs being a magnet that will attract thousands of people to Las Vegas. The National Bible Play Society is "well heeled" financially and is backed morally by the most eminent ministers and theologians of the country.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you," writes Secretary LeNoir, of the Las Vegas Commercial Club, "advertising surely pays —in the Moving Picture World."

HOUSE PETERS WITH LUBIN.

Lubin, of Philadelphia, announces the engagement of House Peters, the famous photoplay star, to act in its feature films. Mr. Peters is considered one of the three most noted men in the photoplay world, and ranks high both as actor and as man. He will be remembered best for his splendid work in "Salomy Jane."

STAGING AFRICAN STORIES.

The first of the series is called "Stanley's Search for the Hidden City," and was released Thursday, September 30. The second picture of the series is called "Stanley's Close Call," and recounts another experience of the adventures. It is released Thursday, October 14. Every two weeks another episode of the "Stanley Series" will be released.

George Kearns Missing

REQUEST has been made of The Moving Picture World by Mrs. George E. Kearns, of San Diego, Cal., that publicity be given through its columns to the singular disappearance of her husband, George E. Kearns, manager of the Casino theater, San Diego, Cal. Mrs. Kearns writes under date of September 8 and encloses a story published in a San Diego newspaper dated August 27. According to the newspaper story Mr. Kearns went to Los Angeles on July 13 to secure a new program for his theater. From that day no word has been heard from him or of his whereabouts.

Reports say that there was no cause for estrangement from his family, but that he was devoted to them at all times. As a result of his disappearance his wife became sick and, for lack of funds, was taken to the County Hospital; his children were placed in charge of a charitable society.

George E. Kearns.

Mrs. Kearns subsequently recovered and has since been making what effort she could to find her husband. With the aid of the police, circulars have been sent broadcast, carrying a description of Kearns, but nothing has been learned regarding him. As Mr. Kearns had been connected with the picture exhibiting business it is believed that those who knew him may have some recollection of seeing him or may have heard of him since his disappearance from San Diego. Any information should be sent to Mrs. George E. Kearns, Casino Theater, 643 Fifth street, San Diego, Cal.

ARLINE HACKETT.

ACTING for motion pictures is more exacting and strenuous than appearing on the legitimate stage, says Miss Arline Hackett, Broadway star, engaged by Essanay especially for the part of Dolores de Mendoza, leading feminine character in the six-act feature photoplay, "In the Palace of the King," from F. Marion Crawford's famous novel.

Miss Hackett's appearance in this film is her second in photoplays, and therefore she is extremely critical of her work before the camera. She was watching a test film of her make-up in Essanay's exhibition room when she made her comparison between photoplay and stage acting.

Arline Hackett.

"On the stage," she said, "one has an opportunity to correct an error in a later performance. This is not the case, however, in photoplays, because once the finished film goes out, any mistake that has been made will be seen by every audience, and there is no chance to right it. Nevertheless, I have enjoyed my 'movie' experience immensely."

Miss Hackett is well known from coast to coast as a strong emotional actress, and as Dolores in "In the Palace of the King," she has ample opportunity to give her talent fullest play. Before her advent on Broadway she appeared in stock on the coast, acting for a time in her own theatre in San Diego and later appearing in Los Angeles under Oliver Morosco.

Why I Went Into Motion Pictures

By Geraldine Farrar.

IT IS the sounding board of the piano that gives roundness and substance to the tone; it is the resistance of the carbon that gives greater brilliancy to the arc, and it is the artistic sympathies of our hearers that inspire us all to redouble our efforts to interest, instruct, or entertain. The orator is more eloquent in proportion to the numbers of his sympathetic hearers; the actor more brilliant as his audience sways to his art.

Frequently, since last spring, when I determined that the time had arrived for me to enter a new field of artistic endeavor, I have been asked the question: "Already you have reached great popularity through the operatic and concert stages. Why motion pictures?" While it is true that to most of these inquiries I have answered, "Why not?" in half jest, I am glad now to tell more fully precisely the reason why I declined a summer of rest and ease for a summer of hard work.

Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen."

When Morris Gest first interested me in motion pictures as a field of work exceptionally suited to those gifts with which I have been endowed as an actress, I was more surprised than amused. The more I thought of the suggestion, however, the more it interested me, and before long I knew that motion pictures really offered a field in which I could only work with great sincerity and happiness, but also through which I would be answering that inner command constantly in the artist's mind, "Broaden yourself; extend your scope, make new friends."

After attending motion picture entertainments in New York and other American cities I saw and understood to what wonderful ends this great medium of dramatic expression was pointed. After discussion with Samuel Goldfish, I found myself within a few weeks thereafter on the way to Hollywood, Cal., where the Lasky studios are situated. Right here I wish to say that in all my experience never were those around me so eager to please, so kind in their attentions.

When I first sang for the talking machine I believed for a moment that I would be unable to overcome the feeling that it was a mechanical contrivance. I was not sure that the best artistic impulses would respond. My experience, however, was that once I started to sing all sense of the mechanical thing in front of me disappeared. I saw in my mind's eye a great throng of people to whom I was singing.

And that was my experience before the motion picture camera. I lost sight of the photographer and his steady turning. I saw only a mighty gathering of men, women and children—thousands and thousands—who were watching my every movement. It was thrilling, and I knew that my sincerity was meeting with response and that my pictures would please.

Never in the world's history of amusements has there been any audience so great, so wonderful, as the motion picture audience. Sight is the medium of the photoplay, and the simple emotions of pantomime are universal to human nature the world over. The South American native, the Chinese, the most highly cultured of Europe and the Asiatic all understand the emotions of comedy, of tragedy, of happiness, joy, sorrow, jealousy and anger.

Clifford Joins Famous Players

WILLIAM H. CLIFFORD, who enjoys the unique distinction of being the only man who ever relinquished the prerogatives of the director for the power of the pen, has resigned from the New York Motion Picture Corporation to assume charge of the scenario department of the Famous Players Film Company. Mr. Clifford is already in New York, where he has begun work on the preparation of several important scripts for immediate picturization.

Though previously a member of the theatrical profession, Mr. Clifford has never acted before the camera, his directorial activities marking his initial entry into the film business. It was in the days of the old Imp company when he and Tom Ince presided over the destinies of Mary Pickford and King Baggot in a studio which would be considered too small for a single set to-day. Mr. Clifford's first picture was "In the Sultan's Garden," of which Mary Pickford was the star.

W. H. Clifford.

When, after several years devoted to the writing of vaudeville sketches for numerous well known artists, including Emmet Corrigan, Charlotte Parry, William Gill and Harry Brooks, Mr. Clifford returned to the motion picture, he wrote two scripts a week for three years for Tom Ince, among them the famous "Wrath of the Gods."

Mr. Clifford's activities have by no means been confined to the writing of vaudeville sketches and scenarios. For the so-called legitimate stage he has to his credit the writing of such well known dramas as "Fighting the Flames," and the dramatization of "St. Elmo" and "Life's Shop-Window." He has had two successful plays produced on the Coast, and Dustin Farnum is soon to be starred in his latest dramatic work, "Man From God's Country."

STANNER E. V. TAYLOR, DIRECTOR.

Stanner E. V. Taylor, the well-known author-director, has been made director-in-chief of the Knickerbocker Star Features. This announcement is in accord with the company's policy of employing the very best of talent with their three-reel feature releases.

Taylor's rise to success has been a rather swift one, starting with the Biograph Company as playwright for David W. Griffith. Under Griffith's tutelage, Taylor made rapid progress and it was there that he learned the elements of moving picture directing.

The Reliance Company was the next to claim Taylor, and for them he directed his own photoplays, having such notables in his cast as Henry B. Walthall, James Kirkwood, Marion Leonard and Arthur Johnson.

Taylor has also done some notable directing of Rex pictures and, for the past year, has been engaged in producing large, independent features.

Besides possessing a skillful knowledge of technique, Taylor is an advanced student of human nature and his directing shows the hand of one who has a sympathetic understanding of life and people.

His work is made easier by the fact that he is a lover of moving pictures. "Every spare moment I have," says Taylor, "I put in at a picture show. I can watch a picture and forget all around me; I become so interested in its story. Enjoying pictures as I do gives me an additional zest for my work. I love my work, and that's half the battle."

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

Veterans of Balboa

Horkheimer Pays Tribute to the Men Who "Stuck Through Thick and Thin."

FIVE employes who joined H. M. Horkheimer two years ago formed the nucleus of his original organization when he opened the Balboa studio in Long Beach, Cal., are given credit by their employer for the major part of his success in the motion picture industry to date. They are William Beckway, chief cameraman; Robert Brotherton, head chemist; John Wyse, stage manager; May Brotherton, superintendent of the assembly department, and Norman Manning, business manager.

Today the Balboa Amusement Producing Company is one of the largest independent producers of motion pictures, having a weekly capacity of 20,000 feet of negative film. But for the loyalty and splendid support that these people gave him, Mr. Horkheimer says there would be a different story to tell. The vicissitudes that he had to overcome caused many a concern with much greater resources to succumb.

As an evidence of their faith in him, when the clouds were blackest, some of these department heads even loaned their employer money of their hard-earned savings, despite the fact that he was in arrears on salaries to them. Mr. Horkheimer has the faculty of inspiring those associated with him, so that they who really know him believe in him implicitly. A hard situation never causes him to quit. He fights it through to victory, which those who come to know him well understand.

After having met financial reverses in the theatrical business, although he scored a distinct artistic success as a producer, H. M. Horkheimer decided back in 1912 to make a venture into the cinema world. At the time, he did not know what a motion picture camera looked like. Taking stock of his resources, he could count just about $7,000. Those in control of the field then had millions at their command.

Not one whit daunted, Mr. Horkheimer canvassed the situation and started in. If he could surround himself with the right people, he was sure that he would win out. For six months he investigated in a quiet way who were the unknown workers of the best known picture makers, on whom rested the burden of responsibility. When he ascertained those who had made records for faithfulness, he set about bringing them into his camp.

Most of the initial Balboa force came from the Selig plant. And these five people are still with Mr. Horkheimer. There were many times during the first year of Balboa's operations when any one who had less than heroic faith would have been tempted to fall away. There was even one time when Mr. Horkheimer owed his workers $11,000, yet they stood by him, despite the fact that all sorts of stories were told of his insolvency, and the sheriff camped in the office. What is more, they refused to desert him when offered more money to join other companies.

They stuck, and finally the clouds dispersed. The market turned in favor of Balboa, so that Mr. Horkheimer could pay every cent he owed, and it goes without saying that he discharged a part of his obligation to the faithful ones, in so far as that is possible in a material way. That they have a life job with him is a matter of course. As soon as it is feasible, they will be rewarded with a working interest in the business, which they have contributed so much to build up by their whole-hearted interest and unselfish devotion.

Besides the five already named, there are on Balboa's roster today more than forty people who have been with the company in its various departments the greater part of the two years since it began. This is an unusual condition in the motion picture business, for there is much shifting from one studio to another. It is doubtful if any other organization can make a similar showing of permanence in the list of its employees.

Considering that all of these remained with Balboa when it was supposed to be on the rocks and breaking up, bespeaks volumes for their loyalty and is an evidence of the high regard they have for the head of the concern; because for eleven weeks they had nothing more than his promise that they would ultimately get their pay. They believed and their belief was not betrayed.

At the Balboa studio, these men and women are all on the roll of honor. The names on the list, in addition to the five already mentioned, are Bertram Bracken, Joe Brotherton, Jackie Saunders, Henry Stanley, Millie McConnell, Frank Erlanger, Daniel Gilfether, Charles Dudley, Fred Whitman, Gordon Sackville, Bruce Randall, Harry Harvey, Bruce Smith, Sherwood MacDonald, Roland Groom, William Reed, Frank Kearns, William Kearns, Gene Kearns, James Loy, Guy Ward, Mrs. B. Ahrens, Grace Scott, Nettie Clark, Edgar Moore, R. R. Rockett, Irma Mendenhall, Richard Johnson, Roy Freichett, D. Willey, John Cunnard, Percy Dewey, George Crane, Marguerite Nichols and Madeleine Pardee.

"Surrounded with men and women like these," says Mr. Horkheimer, "I couldn't fail. Of course, we have had many others who dropped out, for one reason or another. Then, my brother, Elwood D. Horkheimer, joined the company and gave valuable assistance in putting it on its feet. We have other splendid people who came with us recently. But all in all, it is principally the loyalty of our original working force that has made Balboa what it is today."

CALVERT REMAINS WITH ESSANAY.

E. H. Calvert, who has been with the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company four years, and who is engaged for a long term to direct pictures for the Chicago concern, denies that he is to go to another firm.

"There is absolutely no truth in the story circulated from Los Angeles that I had been engaged by a coast company," said Mr. Calvert. "At no time have I contemplated leaving Essanay. I consider Mr. George K. Spoor the greatest photoplay manufacturer in the country, and I have thoroughly enjoyed my association with him and have been highly satisfied with my relations with the company. For these reasons I have never had a thought of making any change from the Indian Head banner. I am now under a long-term contract and fully expect to remain with Essanay until it expires and hope to continue with the company indefinitely."

HARRY MYERS IN COMEDY.

Alice in Wonderland or the Campbell Kids on a soup spree might expect to find the strange and delightfully unique effect of a bungalow exterior constructed by Harry Myers for use in two comedies he is at present producing at the Victor-Universal studio. The palings, mail box, gate latch, flowerbeds, etc., were devised by Mr. Myers, who also wrote the comedies. When he and Rosemary Theby play the parents of the youngster in "Baby's Two Toofs" and "Father's Child" their admirers are hereby warned of a surprise.

Motion Pictures in Scandinavia

By Oscar Kartoschinsky.

THE hand of fate endowed Scandinavia with such wonderfully picturesque natural conditions that they readily lend themselves to the kinematographic camera. Denmark in bloom with idyllic villages exquisitely colored by a rich variety of flowers; Sweden full of dense forests and awe-inspiring cliffs hugging her shores and Norway dotted with majestic snow-covered peaks and violet fjords—how can one help but long to preserve these on the kinematographic film. These natural beauties have permanently established the moving picture industry in Scandinavia. Here, naturally, they began by taking scenic pictures, well-known French firms like Pathe Freres and Gaumont were the first to do it. Then they undertook characteristic pictures, portraying the life of the masses which in Scandinavia is almost as picturesque as her enticing surroundings.

All who have had the good fortune to visit Scandinavia admire the beautiful colorings of her peasant costumes and dances and marvel at the characteristic individuality of her customs. These characteristic pictures were followed by ones based on real plots—scenarios—and were the main foundation of the development of the motion picture industry here. This step was taken by the natives, who formerly were engaged in film rental and exchange and met with tremendous success.

The capitol of Denmark, Copenhagen, the most populated and enterprising of all Scandinavian cities, naturallv became the center of this movement. Motion picture factories sprung up like mushrooms, improved in size and quality and grew financially. The Scandinavian actors contributed largely toward this end, their wonderful ability and natural talents lent themselves marvelously to the film. At present there are so many good actors in Scandinavia that lack of space prevents me from naming them. It is sufficient to mention the celebrated name, Asta Nielsen, to awaken respect in the eyes of all theater lovers. Films presenting her not only met with enormous success within the realms of Scandinavia, but all through civilized Europe. In European kinematographic circles she is regarded as the queen of motion pictures. She is featured exclusively in scenarios written by her husband, Urban Gad, whose pictures are full of untold interest pulsating with the wonders of the underworld. But as I already said she is not the only well-known actress in Scandinavia. There are many. In fact, posing for moving pictures has become such a fad that rich young members of select circles indulge in it as a pastime.

In every Scandinavian city there are a number of motion picture theaters. Copenhagen, however, is still in the lead, where the theaters are limited in number and to a certain extent are under municipal control. Most of these theaters are modest and small in seating capacity, but are among the best in Europe. The entrance fee is small, only 5 to 15 cents. This makes it possible for all classes to frequent them, so that they are always full to capacity. It is worth while mentioning that the entrance is never used as the exit, but that upon the renewal of a program both doors are swung open to let the people in and out simultaneously.

Following the example of other European centers, Copenhagen has recently built an extremely large wonderfully equipped theater seating three thousand people and charging from fifteen to sixty cents admission. Here only feature films are presented, and being the only theater of its kind in Scandinavia, of course, it is an extremely popular institution.

It is curious that the best Scandinavian writers, following the example of the Russians, considered it below their dignity to write for the camera, holding the art of scenario writing in utter contempt. Only after the French, German and English authors battered the wall of silly journalistic vanity have the Scandinavians realized the futility of fighting against time. Lately a great deal has been done for the achievement of the Scandinavian film industry through the entrance into the field of the famous Danish author, Peter Nansen, the former husband of Betty Nansen, now of the Fox forces in this country. The Nordisk is Scandinavia's greatest Film Co. (known in the United States as the Great Northern), whose productions excel such pictures as the Atlantis by Hauptman. Mr. Björnson, the son of the great Norwegian writer, is also taking a very prominent part in the Scandinavian motion picture industry. It will be most interesting to note that well-known works of such immortal writers as Ibsen and Björnson have been adopted into scenarios and enjoy the greatest possible success.

Following the Scandinavian productions, the French films, as a matter of course, are the next in favor. Recently German films have been quite popular, while Russian productions, are slowly gaining recognition. Of the American film companies the best-known in Scandinavia are the Universal, Vitagraph, Lubin, Kalem, Biograph and some of the productions of more recent companies. There is no doubt that American film productions have not gained a third part of the recognition which they deserve and which they could easily win through a more efficient propaganda for publicity and popular approval in all the Scandinavian countries. In this connection it should be said that only the better class of American made films reach Scandinavia because buyers in that territory are very discriminating, consequently the public in these countries have a favorable impression of American made films. A large part of the population of Norway and Sweden especially have been emigrating to this country for many years, and they are naturally interested in the States and Canada.

British Notes

THE EFFECT of a warm week end upon a certain evening newspaper in London is never disappointing. Consequently when film fans in the Metropolis had the other evening bounced at them in shrill crescendo and ultra superfatted type vivid details of German films from America; thrilling accounts of how in the backwoods of Brooklyn, German agents were sending films to this country under well-known American trade marks and a hysterical exhortation to picture-goers in all its ghastly unreality to see only British films and prevent huge profits from reaching Germany via America, it was only to be expected there would be no panic in the trade but a huge laugh exceedingly long and loud. I do not for one moment purpose to repeat or even quote from the windy indictment which went to the extent of giving a list of Teutonic sounding names of persons identified with the motion picture business in the States beyond mentioning that certain American manufacturers were libelously stigmatized as having engineered the exhibition of faked German war films, a circumstance the greatest novice in the industry here knows to be untrue. But amid all the stage thunder of its fantastic accusations the paper in question most discreetly omits to name either the films it complains of, the manufacturers, or their British agents, and under intoxication of its remarkable discovery wildly implores the government to tax American motion picture films forthwith. The painful poverty of intellect of any paper foolish enough to imagine that American manufacturers, particularly under the present stringent surveillance of imports, would jeopardize their future by sending out stock of alien origin under their own cherished trade marks is indeed pitiable. But perhaps from a group of papers traitorous enough to attack their own great military leader we might reflect deeper and ask which American film company refuses to give them an advertising contract. Considering the source of its emanation it is wholly excusable, and trade opinion here avers that fanatical outbursts of this kind may not inconceivably inspire the authorities, rather than tax something without which thousands of exhibitors in England could not keep open their doors, to tax newspaper scares and incidentally help one in particular to terminate its scavenging career.

Following close upon the above, comes one or two declarations from Continental houses. It will be remembered that a week or two ago some concern was occasioned by a statement alleging the fusion of the well-known Nordisk Company of Copenhagen with the Union Vitascope Company of Berlin. Apparently there was a certain amount of truth in the rumor, for overtures towards an amalgamation were actually opened but the German parties dissented to all proposals. In a manifesto issued to film renters this week the Nordisk Company say that owing to the disorganization of the industry in Germany their Berlin office manager was approached by the Union Vitascope Company with a proposal to handle the German Company's products. The proviso of the arrangement was for the Danish Company to deal with the German Company's films only in Germany and the promotion of their sales were to be confined to that country. Negotiations, however, were broken off abruptly and the two companies now stand exactly as they were.

A number of scenario writers in England are to make a bold bid for proper recognition of their work upon the screen. The idea, which is to secure the name of the author on the frontispiece of the film, is for each to make it a provisional clause in the acceptance of each script that the manufacturer shall fully undertake to accord the author his place in the limelight. ### Mental Short-Sightedness and Sunday Picture Theaters.

THE Bloomington Pantagraph is a bitter opponent of Sunday exhibitions of moving pictures. Indeed, it is more: it is the willing mouthpiece of every one in that staid old Illinois city, who favors "thumbs down" in this respect. In a recent issue the Pantagraph had this to say about Sunday theaters:

"The Oregon supreme court has held that it is unlawful to keep open on Sunday any institution save theaters, drug stores, physicians' offices, livery stables, meat markets, bakeries and undertaking establishments. Some of the exceptions have the appearance of special legislation. The claim of the court, for example, that Sunday theaters are necessary for "mental diversion" might have some reason if the people were permitted to witness the legitimate drama. But it is straining a point to speak of most Sunday theatricals as having any favorable bearing whatever on the mentality of those who witness them. Mental dissipation would be a more fitting term."

Mark how "Sunday theaters" are picked out by the writer of this editorial from all the other exceptions mentioned, as the special bone for editorial gnawing, and how the "legitimate drama" is exempted from the editorial incisors. Even at that, "most Sunday theatricals" are barred, because they favor "mental dissipation" instead of "mental diversion," in the ultimate of the writer. Not a word is said about moving pictures in the diatribe, unless they are included among "Sunday theatricals."

The writer knows full well that the "legitimate drama" has been hounded for hundreds of years by men of his stamp, and that even to this day, where church influence is paramount, the legitimate drama is not allowed freedom on Sundays. Legitimate drama just now is a rare event in Bloomington, even on secular days of the week, and very rarely in the history of that city, took a chance on Sundays. The managers knew better. And now, when the Sunday picture theater offers the only mental diversion that hard working men and women can avail themselves of, they are not only warned that such exhibitions favor mental dissipation, but they are autocratically deprived of the right to view them.

By what right and on what reasonable grounds does the writer of the Pantagraph editorial assume that photoplays fail to create mental diversions? Has he ever seen "Quo Vadis," "A Tale of Two Cities," "The Life of Moses," or any of the thousands of other great photoplay productions on the screen?

"Mental," forsooth! It will employ all the finest imagination and perception and earning that he may possess to view some of them intelligently and with full comprehension.

Most of the well known contemporaneous artists, men and women, in the legitimate drama, who can appear before the moving picture camera to photographic advantage, have already appeared in moving pictures. And every one of these talented men and women has acknowledged that there is high art in photodramatic acting, just as there is in the dramatic. The world-wide success of the moving picture, in its appeal to humanity, has been far greater than that of Christianity in only a small fractional part of the time which it has taken the latter to win, but a fractional portion of the people of the earth.

Be assured of one thing, ye ministers of Bloomington. You may try to throttle the moving picture in your home city on Sundays, in order to fill your churches, but it is abreast of the great forward advance movements of civilization. It is a handmaiden even of the gospel, and its intelligent utilization by men of your cloth will work miracles before your very eyes. Its onward progress may be retarded for a moment, but it can never be stopped until it has accomplished its full mission. It is the favored child of science and art and, if rightly used, will exalt humanity.

Chicago Film Brevities.

J. B. Rielly, owner and manager of the New Princess, Kankakee, Ill., called at the office Tuesday, Sept. 21. This theater was formerly called the Princess, and has been thoroughly remodelled, enlarged and rechristened. The seating capacity is now 450. Mr. Rielly stated that it is modern in every respect, and that no expense was spared to give it the finest ventilation possible and to make it absolutely safe against fire. "Perfect projection is assured at this house," Mr. Rielly was particular to emphasize. Frank L. Hough, manager of the Kleine Optical Co., visited the theater specially to install the projecting apparatus, and two engineers from the Westinghouse Company's office, this city, made a special visit to install a Westinghouse motor generator of 7½ H.-P. Two Powers 6-A machines, motor-driven, with an extra 6-A head, were placed under Mr. Hough's supervision. Mr. Rielly hails from New York City and moved to Kankakee about three weeks ago. He has had experience in the film business in various capacities, including the positions of actor in photoplays, traveling salesman for distributing concerns and manager of the Colonial theater in Joliet for two years. He is now sole owner of the New Princess in Kankakee. Mr. Rielly was traveling salesman with J. J. Pearce, of New Orleans, for a year, and with the Renfax Film Co., of New York City, for a year, during which time he appeared in numerous photoplays, playing straight leads. He is enthused over the success of his Kankakee house. The S. R. O. sign has been out every night since it was opened. He uses General Film programs and features handled by the Celebrated Players Film Co. etc. Programs of four reels are offered at ten cents. Mr. Rielly has strong opposition, in the Majestic theater, which seats 1,200; the Gaiety, with 1,000 seats; the La Petite, with 500, and the Cort, with 500. To the credit of all the exhibitors in Kankakee it can be said that the program in all the theaters offer no more than four reels for ten cents.

Arthur Searles Kane, at one time district manager in Chicago for the General Film Co., and general manager of branches for Eclectic, stopped over last week on his way to New York City, after enjoying a four months' vacation on the Pacific Coast with his family. During his trip Mr. Kane visited Kansas City, Omaha, Denver, Minneapolis, Winnipeg, Vancouver, Victoria, Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, Los Angeles, San Diego and other towns in the Middle West and on the Coast. He reported that larger moving picture theaters are being built right along in the cities mentioned.

The Reelplays Corporation, of Chicago, with offices in the Unity Building, announces that "The Cowpuncher," an adaptation of Hal Reid's popular Western melodrama of that name, has been filmed in eight reels and is now being booked in dramatic theaters on a percentage basis at popular prices. An advance agent, with a full line of paper, precedes the presentation in each city, and an operator and business manager follow. The company announces that this feature will not be released to moving picture houses. It is said that, in addition to the regular company employed in the roles of the photoplay, several hundred people were employed, including real Indians, real cowboys and cowgirls and real soldiers. Some of the scenes have been taken in Idaho, Wyoming and Texas in order to secure the required atmosphere.

Harry T. Nolan, manager of the Swanson & Nolan Supply

Co., in Denver, and general manager of the Swanson circuit of moving picture theaters, passed through the city Tuesday, Sept. 21, on his way to New York to consult with William H. Swanson on business matters. Mr. Nolan was manager of the Universal Exchange in Denver since January last, and recently resigned that position to accept those now held by him. Previous to his connection with Universal he was manager of Swanson's Denver exchange for six years. Mr. Nolan reported excellent business in the Swanson chain of houses.

The Merrill theater, a new moving picture theater now in course of erection in Milwaukee, which will be opened about Nov. 1, will seat 1,400 people. It is owned by the proprietors of the Merrill Building, a fourteen-story office structure which is now being remodelled so as to include the theater mentioned. The lobby will be 80 feet deep and 50 feet wide, and will be finished in Italian marble. H. D. Graham, who formerly managed the Butterfly theater in Milwaukee, will be the manager. Frank L. Hough, manager of the Kleine Optical Co., was in Milwaukee last week and closed the contract for a complete projecting equipment.

H. A. Spanuth, general manager of the Central Film Co., this city, informs me that his company has opened up an office in New York City, at 220 W. 42d street, where the Tribune German and Russian War Pictures, and the Tribune Animated Weekly will be booked for the New England States and New York State. The German war pictures have opened at the following theaters in the Middle West for indefinite runs: Princess theater, St. Louis; Empress theater, Kansas City; Berchel theater, Des Moines, and the Burtis theater, Davenport. After the films have finished at these theaters, exhibitors can arrange for bookings with the various offices of the Central Film Co. in their territory. Mr. Spanuth reports that a vast throng of men, women and children crowded into Shubert's 44th Street theater, New York City, to see "The German Side of the War." For fully twelve hours the theater was jammed to the doors, while thousands waited patiently in line. The police were called out soon after the theater opened to keep the eager throngs in line. The German pictures will be on exhibition in the Shubert for two weeks, when they will be followed by the Tribune pictures of "The Russian Side of the War," which will be shown for one week.

Great Britain Taxes American Film.

Wm. N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Co., received a cablegram from London, Thursday, Sept. 23d, informing him of the recent raise in duties of raw film stock and on negatives and positives in Great Britain, as follows: On raw stock the duty is 1 cent per foot, on positive films the duty is 2 cents per foot, and on negative films, 16 cents per foot. Contrasted with these figures, the import duty on developed negative films brought into America is 25 per cent. of 25 cents per foot, or 6¼ cents; for exposed, but undeveloped negatives, 2 cents per foot; for positive prints, 1 cent per foot. It has been figured that about 60,000,000 feet of films, positive and negative, are impotred from America alone. In many cases American manufacturers import negatives entirely, and have the positive prints made in Europe. If the exact figures could be secured, giving the number of feet of negative and positive films sent into London, it would be shown that John Bull will add considerably to the receipts of his treasury by imposing the new duties. One thing is almost certain, the people in Great Britain who view pictures will, in the long run, pay the increased duties.

"Just Out of College" Premier.

The premier of "Just Out of College" at the Fine Arts theater, on Saturday, Sept. 25, gave great satisfaction to all who attended, and their number was quite gratifying to the management, and to F. O. Nielson, who owns the rights to this five-reel comedy feature in Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan and Wisconsin. The city press, without exception, gave the photo comedy a fine sendoff. Kitty Kelly of the Tribune wrote of it: "It is film humor of good sort, rippingly easy, with something of a musical comedy swing to it, clearly photographed and well acted in most parts." "It is a refreshing sort of a comedy, too, and there is a pleasant scarcity of slapsticks, which is much in its favor. It is sprightly, wholesome and entertaining, three necessary elements to a successful photocomedy," was the tribute paid by Louella O. Parsons of the Herald. George Ade, the author, was present and expressed himself as being much pleased with the showing on the screen. After finishing its run at the Fine Arts theater, "Just Out of College" will be shown at all the houses on the Hamburger circuit. The admissions at the Fine Arts are 25 and 50 cents and $1. Mr. Nielson tells me that he expects to have sold, by the end of the week, the few remaining state rights to "Guarding Old Glory."

The Harper Amusement Company purchased last week the 99 year lease to the property on which the Harper theater is built and also the structure itself and the office and store buildings connected with it. The Harper was in the limelight a long time owing to the strife between its owners and the trustees of the Hyde Park Presbyteran church, nearby, who objected to its being opened. The theater won out and its backing is now stronger than ever.

"The Ivory Snuff Box," a feature film revealing the work of the German and French secret service, was refused a permit by Chief Healey, head of the Chicago police department, last week. The Rev. Dr. William T. McElween of the First Congregational Church, in Evanston, a suburb of this city, stated recently that moving pictures are one of the foremost organs of modern expression and should be used in the work of religion without narrow protest from those who consider all theatrical things the devil's own. Dr. McElween has arranged for the exhibition of selected moving pictures every Sunday evening in his church. The plan has the sanction of his congregation, and a projecting machine has already been installed. We would again invite the attention of the ministers of Bloomington, Ill., to this additional evidence of the good that is in moving pictures. Why don't they write Dr. McElween and receive from him the actual results of his use of moving pictures in church work? It is sad to record, however, that not a single picture theater is permitted to open its doors in Evanston on Sundays. If the film is good in the church on Sundays, why not in the theaters? The exhibitors of Evanston should get busy. What do you think, Mr. Hamburger?

The Tombstone, Ariz., newspapers are giving much publicity to "A Black Sheep," soon to be released by the Selig Polyscope Co. The opening scenes of the comedy are laid in the Arizona city, and the inhabitants realize the value of the wide publicity given their burgh by the Selig Red Seal comedy. One editor writes: "Naturally, we are in for anything that's a boost for old Tombstone, and we appreciate the fact that an advertising medium of this kind is hard to beat."

Number 72, a recent release of the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, created much extra interest owing to the fact that it shows a trans-continental telephone conversation between Wm. N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Co., and Wm. Randolph Hearst. Mr. Hearst is shown at his summer home in California, conversing with Mr. Selig, who, in turn, is shown in his private offices in Chicago. The Hearst-Selig News Pictorial has received many compliments for its success in inducing Mr. Selig to appear in pictures, a feat that has never before been accomplished.

Anita King Reaches Chicago.

Anita King, the Famous Players' actress who drove her own auto all the way from the Pacific Coast to Chicago, arrived in the city Sunday, Sept. 26, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. She was met at Aurora by a number of relatives and friends, for she is a Chicago girl, and on arrival in the city drove directly to Orchestra Hall, where she was immediately taken to the stage and introduced to the large audience, which she entertained by describing some of her experiences on the trip. Miss King left San Francisco Sept. 1, and came all the way to Chicago alone, which means that she drove the car herself, a wonderful feat for a man, not to speak of a girl Miss King had some hair-raising experiences which have been thrillingly described by the Chicago press. She left for New York Wednesday morning, Sept. 29, and will make 42 stops on the way, appearing at that number of Paramount theaters.

The Selig Polyscope Company was notified by telegram, Monday evening, Sept. 27, that a temporary injunction had been granted the company in its suit, recently filed, in New York City, against the Mutual Film Corporation and the American Film Company, Inc. The Selig Company seeks to restrain the above named companies from distributing a play entitled "House of a Thousand Scandals," which the Selig Company alleges is an infringement on the Selig Red Seal Play, "The House of a Thousand Candles," written by Meredith Nicholson.

Nielson's "Old Glory" Going Well

But Four Territories Remain Unsold on a Cash State's Right Basis and Negotiations Pending for These.

THERE remain but four unsold territories for F. O. Nielson's patriotic subject, "Guarding Old Glory," N. H. Rudolph, Eastern representative for Mr. Nielson, reported this week when seen at his office in the Candler Building. These territories are the New England States, Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, Iowa and Nebraska, and Minnesota and North and South Dakota. Negotiations for the sale of these are now in progress, and Mr. Rudolph believes they will be completed within the next few days. Mr. Nielson's representative says the quick work has emphasized what may be accomplished in the film field by judicious advertising. Although the subject has been on the market but a few weeks the entire country, with the exception of the sections named, has been sold on a state's rights basis for cash.

Mr. Nielson is one of the big buyers of the West. His special field is Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan and Wisconsin. He has just bought the Frohman Amusement Corporation's "Just Out of College" for this territory and reports good business.

The Strand of New York is showing "Guarding Old Glory" in installments of one reel each week. The orchestra accompanies the exhibition with patriotic music, and the innovation has been highly popular.

CAMERAMEN BUSY AT MANOEUVERS.

There were a dozen motion picture cameramen present at the mobilization of the New York City National Guard on Saturday, September 25, at Van Cortlandt Park. Every branch of the army department was represented in the ten thousand troops on the field. Just for instance, there were thirty-two field guns in the review before the governor in the afternoon. In comparison with New York State's possessions in the way of field artillery the statement is made that the United States Government owns but twelve of these stationed east of the Mississippi River. The cameramen got their fill of military stuff, and the weeklies and possibly later some of the dramatic subjects should contain interesting material.

DEATH OF MOTHER OF "SPIKE" ROBINSON.

Mrs. Emma J. Robinson, mother of Walter Charles ("Spike") Robinson, one of the veterans of the Biograph Company and known especially for his Indian characterizations, died this week after a year's illness. Mrs. Robinson was born in Leeds, Yorkshire, sixty-five years ago. She leaves, besides Mr. Robinson, a son and two daughters.

Fashion Show in Pictures

Stunning Girls in Gorgeous Gowns Pose in Fort Lee Studio for World Film Production.

JACOB WILK, of the World Film Corporation, entertained at a Beauty Fashion Show in the Peerless Fort Lee studio last Sunday morning. His guests, the representatives of sundry publications, saw a number of striking young woman in Parisian costumes and learned that they came all the way from Stamford, Conn., that morning to pose for a World Film picture. It is going to be the most ultra-fashionable picture that ever moved across a screen.

The gowns were created by Worth, Paquin, Jenny, Georgette and Cheruit, with a few made in American designs to encourage home duties. The girls, under the wing of Mrs. Belle Armstrong Whitney, were a select assortment of models gathered for a whirlwind tour of the country in Mrs. Whitney's Fashion Show, staged at the Casino theater, New York, on three afternoons of last week.

The show will be seen in many cities, but not everywhere, and in order to fill the gaps, the World Film is putting it into pictures. In the film there will be the girls and the gowns, just as they appear on the stage, and there will be a story in the bargain. An innocent miss fears that her fiance is being captivated by an Indian princess, so quite sensibly she decides to enhance her charms by wearing the most becoming costumes that money can buy. In this way her uncertain lover is to be held. Visiting a society modiste she watches a parade of beautiful women in beautiful gowns and takes her pick She picks so wisely that her fiance forgets all about his Indian princess Moral: Clothes make the woman.

Joseph Smiley directed Mrs. Whitney's models, who answer to the names of Anna Gerould-Schulz, Theodora de-Combe, Barbara Russell, Pauline Merriam, Dorothy Richardson and Florence Peterson.

NOTES OF NEW YORK'S STRAND.

The interior of the Strand theater has been changed for the winter and presents a luxurious appearance. The white hangings at the boxes have been removed and replaced with rich red velvet, heavily embroidered with gold, and the light striped slip covers have been removed from the red velvet orchestra chairs. The uniformed staff appears in cadet gray, embroidered with gold, instead of the gray and white summer uniform.

Fred Cruise, chief usher at the Strand theater, has been appointed hospital steward and first assistant to the house physician. So efficient has Mr. Cruise proved himself in first aid to the injured and in taking care of cases of illness that unexpectedly have presented themselves that he has been given charge of the sick room.

U. S. THEATERS COMPANY ENLARGES CIRCUIT.

The United States Theaters Company of New Jersey, with principal offices in Hoboken, of which Frank C. Hall is president, began its fall season Labor Day by adding two new houses to its circuit. The chain, which includes some of the largest theaters devoted to feature films in the state, now comprises seven houses.

The new theaters are the U. S. Strand and U. S. Playhouse, both in Passaic, the former devoted to pictures and the latter to refined vaudeville and pictures. The other theaters are the U. S. Astor, Plainfield; U. S. Garden, Elizabeth; U. S. Temple, Union Hill; U. S. Palace, Orange; U. S. Theater, Hoboken, and plans are being made for the erection of a new theater in the Bergen section of Jersey City.

Frank C. Hall, president and general manager of the company, is one of the best-known exhibitors in New Jersey. Hyatt H. Daab, a newspaper man, has been engaged as director of publicity.

POGGENPOHL BUILDING NEW THEATER.

Gordon, Neb., is to have a new theater which will measure 25x100 ft. in dimensions. P. Poggenpohl, manager of the Empress theater, that city, and who will manage the new structure, is taking great pains to have the house modern in every respect. Care is taken in the heating and ventilating systems. An operating room, built along the lines described by F. H. Richardson, in his "Motion Picture Hand Book," will be installed. The house will seat 400, and will have a balcony. The cost of the theater is estimated at $8,000.

ARMORY THEATER, TWO RIVERS, REOPENS.

The Armory theater, at Two Rivers, Wis., which had been closed for a few months, has been remodeled and reopened to the public under the management of Sam Nelson. The house is running three nights a week.

INCE TO MOVE TO CULVER CITY.

Will Build Large Plant There—Santa Monica Ranch, Known as Inceville, to Be Retained.

As a real surprise this week comes the announcement that Thomas H. Ince has decided to move from Inceville and purchase 11½ acres of ground in Culver City, to be used as the site of a new plant and headquarters for the New York Motion Picture Corporation. We are informed that Mr. Ince has been contemplating this move for some time, as the present location of the company's plant in the Santa Monica mountains is too far out of the way, and to a certain extent inadequate for the large feature plays he is now producing for the Triangle. Culver City is the progressive embryo of a town, born a couple of years ago, situated half way between Los Angeles and the Santa Monica beach resorts, and has many advantages for motion picture producing. The new Ince plant is to be of very large proportions. It will include six stages, each measuring 60 x 150 feet; a handsome administration building 80 x 50 feet; factory and cutting rooms; property rooms; carpenter shops; plumbing shops; restaurant, commissary, garages, power plant, 300 dressing rooms and many other structures. The property has direct frontage on Washington boulevard, one of the most beautiful thoroughfares in Southern California, and is only a block from the Venice Short Line station. It can be easily reached by automobiles or street cars in less than half an hour from Los Angeles or the Santa Monica beaches. Construction work on the buildings will begin at once. It is the intention of Mr. Ince to have this new plant ready by Christmas and the contractors have been instructed to employ a large extra force of men to make this possible. Producer Ince will personally supervise all the work with assistance of his stage manager, Tom Briely.

Although the headquarters and principal buildings of the New York Motion Picture Corporation hereafter will be permanently located in Culver City, it is not Mr. Ince's intention to give up Inceville and the Santa Monica ranch altogether. The Inceville plant will be maintained by the company as before, except on a smaller scale. This highly picturesque property was leased by Thomas H. Ince as an individual in October, 1911, from Miller Bros., of 101 Ranch fame. It is located four miles north of Santa Monica by the shore road and covers an area of 18,000 acres. Inceville, the capital of this picture domain, is situated on the slopes of the entrance to the Santa Ynez canyon. Like many of the Western studios, the establishment is made up of a confusion of frame buildings, small and large, each additional structure marking the expansion of the company's business. It has a main stage 175 x 220 feet; a new glass stage 360 x 160 and two auxiliary stages 50 x 80 feet; an administration building, a restaurant, a commissary, a wardrobe building, a property building, a scene building, 200 dressing rooms, an arsenal where weapons, ammunition and explosives are kept, a power house furnishing light for stages and buildings, a reservoir furnishing fresh water, six stables and corrals and a number of other structures. In addition to the inexhaustible supply of natural settings for exteriors, Inceville has a Spanish Mission, a Dutch village with a genuine canal, old windmill, etc.; a Japanese village with jinrikishas; an Irish village; a Canadian village; an East Indian street and a Sioux camp.

Inceville has about 520 inhabitants; that is, there are that many names on the weekly payroll. With two such studio establishments as Inceville and the new plant in Culver City, Producer Ince will have facilities to turn out productions of any magnitude for the Triangle Film Corporation.

LUBIN VISITS LOS ANGELES.

Calls on Griffith—San Diego Confers Unusual Honors on the Philadelphia Manufacturer.

Rip Van Winkle was the most surprised man on earth when he returned to his home town from the heights of the Catskill Mountains, where he had slept for 20 long years. Old Rip had nothing on Siegmund Lubin, the Philadelphia optician, moving picture magnate, pioneer producer, inventor of cinema apparatus, and, above all, gentleman and sterling friend, for when Mr. Lubin stepped from the train in Los Angeles he looked about him at the great city of nearly half a million which lay at his very feet, he expressed probably the same remarks as Rip did when he came home and found a city where once had been but a hamlet. In fact, Mr. Lubin was the one who compared himself with the character that Irving immortalized. Only his absence was not a sleep, and it was for forty years, instead of twenty. Mr. Lubin said that he had been here before, when Los Angeles was but a scattering of low wooden buildings, with farms surrounding it on all sides. He said that the last five years of its growth, he was positive, had been proportionately increased by the presence of the various moving picture firms who operate here. Among the twenty or more studios is one which belongs to this pioneer film man. It is managed by Captain Wilbert Melville, and is one of the largest and most modern of moving picture studios.

It is a great action for one of the foremost of the pioneer men of the great industry, which he claims is fourth largest, to speak so highly as he did of David W. Griffith. Mr. Lubin, while speaking of the well-known Triangle producer, said that he considered him all alone in his sphere. He said there was a Shakespeare and a Dickens; an Edison and a few other names of celebrities, but that in the moving picture business there was but one Griffith.

Mr. Lubin arrived in Los Angeles on Tuesday. Wednesday morning he went out to the Griffith plant and thoroughly inspected it. He was met by the big director and escorted through the place. He was taken across the street, where Mr. Griffith is putting on a picture which is laid in the Far East. The sets are worth seeing, and Mr. Lubin expressed much surprise at the greatness of them.

"Yes," smiled the genial manufacturer from Philadelphia, "they call me Pop, but I'm not old, and since I came to California I feel younger than ever." Mr. Lubin is traveling with his family, and Thursday they enjoyed taking in the sights and scenes of Los Angeles. That evening they left for San Diego.

Friday was programmed to be the formal opening day of the new Lubin studios in Coronado. Captain Wilbert Melville, general manager of the Western branch, had done his best to prepare for the chief, and when Mr. Lubin sees the studio he will be more surprised than ever. During the afternoon the studio will be open to inspection of the invited guests. The city of San Diego is deeply interested in the plant and its mayor and city officials and prominent citizens will be present to welcome the master. That evening there will be a ball, followed by a supper.

D. W. Griffith and Siegmund Lubin.

Saturday is the banner day for the Lubin interests and the exposition officials. This day has been set aside as Lubin Day, and the well-known pioneer will be officially escorted to the Fair Grounds, where he will be honored by many maneuvers. The first will be a military parade for his benefit. After several details of the program have been carried out a luncheon will be given in honor of Mr. Lubin. The afternoon will be spent in going about the Fair Grounds. While in San Diego the guest of honor will be escorted about by Captain Rifenberick, military aid to the president of the exposition, Mr. Davidson. In the evening Mr. Lubin will be honored at a sumptuous dinner given by the exposition officials.

WEBER AND FIELDS HAVE NARROW ESCAPE.

Weber and Fields, the well-known comedians, also met with an accident this week at the Keystone Studios, and narrowly escaped being killed or at least seriously hurt. A scene had been arranged in which the two comedy stars were to be seated in a taxi and a racing car was to collide with them. Mack Sennett's 120-horsepower Fiat was loaned for the occasion and after several rehearsals it was decided to photograph the scene. The driver of the racing car had been instructed to miss the taxi about 12 inches, and during the rehearsals had been reprimanded for not coming close enough. Bearing this in mind, the driver tried to do better and when Director Griffin shouted "camera" the big Fiat at a speed of 58 miles an hour, instead of missing Weber and Fields' taxi, struck it a grazing smash in one of the front fenders, overturning the vehicle and dashing the occupants to the ground. Dazed and bruised, Weber and Fields were picked up and taken to the studio hospital. The chauffeur of the taxi was unconscious and the camera partly demolished, as the big racing car had skidded into it, hurling the camera man to the ground. Fortunately, nobody got seriously hurt, which certainly was a miracle. The camera magazine also escaped serious damage, so the whole incident is clearly registered on the film.

QUINN FORMALLY RE-OPENS SUPERBA.

Somewhere around a year ago we recorded the building and opening of one of the finest of Broadway theaters, Quinn's Superba, run by J. A. Quinn. Las week Mr. Quinn regained control of the popular playhouse and with his return came many old-timers who liked the way he ran the show. On Monday night he held the formal re-opening of his house. The place was packed all the time and every patron was patient enough to wait until he could be ushered into the pretty house where "The Chalice of Courage" was being screened. Myrtle Gonzalez, the featured star, was present at the initial performance, as were a number of Vitagraph blue ribboners who took part in Sturgeon's big production.

Mr. Quinn has played the picture game right from the start and his many satisfied patrons look to him for continued amusement. And what's more, they get it at his hands. Next week he will present "The Climbers," with Gladys Hanson in the leading role. He has booked "Mortmain" and his advertising campaign has already been launched for this big picture. Mr. Quinn is a regular fellow, a gentleman, and a business-like man. He is a truly progressive exhibitor who is lending all his efforts to the advance of the moving picture industry in every branch.

MADAME MELBA VISITS UNIVERSAL CITY.

Nellie Melba, the great Australian singer, was a guest at Universal City this week. The prima donna was taken all over the big plant and became so interested in the manufacturing of celluloid drama that she stayed for several hours. Like her confrere, Shumann-Heink, Madame Melba also posed with a "ferocious" denizen of the Universal zoo.

Mme. Melba at Universal City.

In this "jungle drama," which will be released in the Animated Weekly, she is ably supported by Lois Weber and Hobart Henley. Madame Melba was quite delighted with her thrilling experience and laughingly said that if her voice ever failed her she now knew that she could qualify as a picture actress.

SLATER'S OVERLAND TRIP.

Driving his big automobile through overland from Oklahoma City is the interesting stunt that C. W. Slater did, arriving in Los Angeles this week. Mr. Slater is here for the winter with his wife. He has been manager of the Mutual Exchanges in Oklahoma City, and was with the same company in Dallas. He was formerly connected with the Paramount in the same state. Mr. Slater visited the Mutual office here when the World man was there. Otherwise we never would have seen him. He will be here for the winter positively, and may connect with some company and remain for good. Newton E. Levi, of the Los Angeles office, has been touring the outlying district for the past week in the interests of the Mutual headquarters.

MABEL NORMAND SERIOUSLY ILL.

Mabel Normand, the popular Keystone girl, has been dangerously ill during the week past—in fact, her condition was so alarming that for several days she was not expected to live.

Mabel Normand.

Her illness is the result of injuries sustained while working in a Triangle comedy picture. She was accidentally struck by a heavy shoe in a burlesque wedding scene. Roscoe Arbuckle was the bridegroom and the happy pair was given an unusual ovation of rice and shoes. One of the shoes was thrown with considerable force and hit Miss Normand on the head, knocking her senseless. In unconscious condition she was removed to her suite of rooms in the Baltic apartments and a physician called in. He found her suffering with a concussion of the brain. For several days she remained semi-conscious and developed a high fever which made her recovery a matter of doubt. At the time of this writing her condition has improved and, unless new complications arise, she will soon be out of danger. Miss Normand's serious illness has been the source of deep sorrow to her many friends and admirers. Her apartments look like a veritable flower garden and are besieged by anxious inquirers all day. Mabel Normand is one of the most popular comedy actresses in the business today.

RECENT EVENTS AT SELIG ZOO.

Labor Day Festivities, Italian Red Cross Picnic, "The Beginning of the World" and Mexican Independence Day Celebrations at the Popular Resort.

The Selig Jungle-Zoo, at Los Angeles, is one of the most popular resorts on the Pacific Coast. This veritable wonderland, builded by William N. Selig, is the attraction for hundreds of thousands of people. Following a gigantic celebration of Labor Day at the Selig Zoo, the Italian Red Cross picnic was held there on Sunday, Sept. 19, by the Italian colony of Southern California. "The Beginning of the World," a pageant play, was staged at the Selig Zoo on Sept. 24. The cast called for three hundred society people. The pantomime started with the "Beginning," 4,000 years B. C., and continued to the time of Queen Esther. Miss Dorothy Clifford as "Eve" took a very prominent part. The big Southern California Swedish picnic was held at the Selig Jungle-Zoo on Sept. 26.

On last Thursday, hundreds of Mexicans and Americans gathered at the Selig Jungle-Zoo to celebrate the 105th anniversary of Mexico's independence. There was a barbecue and the Mayor of Los Angeles was present and delivered an address.

FILM BREVITIES.

"The Sable Lorcha" has now been completed. "The Sable Lorcha," as has been mentioned in this paper, is a picture adaptation from Horace Hazeltine's popular novel featuring Tully Marshall and Thomas Jefferson. A faithful reproduction of a street in San Francisco's Chinatown was built at the Fine Arts Films studios for a scene in this picture. One hundred Chinament were brought down from San Francisco to give the local atmosphere. They were taken down to Los Angeles in a special train and under the supervision of a government official.

Although "The Sable Lorcha" does not mark the film debut of Tully Marshall and Thomas Jefferson, this picture afforded them their first real opportunity to display on the screen the talent which made them famous on the speaking stage.

Chas. Inslee, of the Kalem "Ham Comedies," sustained a severe sprain to his right ankle when through an accident a barrel of water weighing several hundred pounds fell on his foot, crushing and bruising it badly. This is the second accident in the Kalem Hollywood studios within the last two weeks. Owen Evans is the other victim and is in the Sisters' Hospital with a broken toe, the result of a fall from a swinging scaffold. A broken toe might not be considered a serious accident, but we can imagine that it must be mighty painful.

"Skookum" is the name of a dog from Alaska, the personal property and loving pet of Hobart Bosworth, who is one of the Universal's Features stars. Mr. Bosworth got the puppy in Alaska when he was traveling there same time ago. The dog is an intelligent and a loyal companion to the big moving picture actor.

Bosworth and his company have just returned from Big Bear Valley, where they filmed many scenes for a new picture which is supposed to be laid in the Far North. "Skookum" played an important part in this picture. He has also worked in many other sea and Far North stories in company with Mr. Bosworth. The company had a fine time while in the mountains. Jane Novak was the featured player opposite Mr. Bosworth.

After having finished "Shanghaied," the latest Chaplin comedy, for the Essanay Company, the Los Angeles players are resting a few days before starting work on another big comedy picture. Charlie spends his leisure moments by the sad sea waves writing new stories. He takes a plunge in the ocean every morning, whether it rains or is clear. The cold salt water is a most wonderful bracer after a hard day's work with a night of sound sleep.

Herbert Rawlinson, the popular star who is being featured in special pictures at the Universal, stands a poor chance to commit a crime and get away with it. The other night while strolling along Main street, in company with another man, he stopped and looked into a show window; a large man stepped up to the window, looked in, turned to Rawlinson remarking about the display. Rawlinson made a comment, when the man glanced keenly at his face and said: "Pardon me, sir, but I am a detective," displaying a badge on his vest, "and I make a study of faces. Do you mind giving me a square look at yours? Huh! I got you now. I have seen you on the canvas. How are you, Mr. Sanford Quest?" Rawlinson was fairly surprised. The detective told of having seen Rawlinson in his clever characterization of the film detective and they exchanged a few interesting stories of reel and unreel detective service.

Recently the Balboa players went to San Diego. The company was headed by Jackie Saunders. Sunday the company went across the Mexican border to witness a bull fight. After returning to Los Angeles Miss Saunders made application for membership in the S. P. C. A.

We have heard of people going out into the mountains to throw a line across the waters to hook a fish so they could play with them, but here is a man who plays with a dead fish in the Fine Arts studios. He is Douglas Fairbanks, and the second day he made the director go out and buy a new fish. Can't blame him these hot days.

Recently at the Balboa studio Will M. Ritchey put in a straight twenty-four-hour shift working on a big story which was holding up one company. He finished by nine in the morning, in time for the company to start work, then stole home and did not show up at the plant until the next day. Guess he deserved it.

J. A. Quinn is one of the livest of advertisers. He does not let a chance slip by either. His many patrons almost expect him to give them a thrill, and he does it, too. Since regaining control of the Superba, the neat Broadway playhouse, he has made more friends, and he is going ahead every day.

Herbert Raymond, one of the members of the Raymond Amusement Co., of Ocean Park, who operates the Rosemary theater on the pier and several other attractions, together with his operator, William Stewart, have returned from a pleasant trip to the Exposition at San Francisco, where they took in the city and the fair. They report a good business along the rialto in the northern city. but are well satisfied with the business here.

Even tobacco concerns are soliciting photo actor's opinions on their wares. Recently the Kenohara Tobacco Co. sent little George Stone, of the Fine Arts studio, a box of Prince Somebody or Other cigars, asking him to try them and write his decision on a postal and mail to them. The property men at the studio are now puffing on elegant Prince —— cigars.

Myrtle Gonzalez, who is the featured artist in Vitagraph's Blue Ribbon feature "The Chalice of Courage," is being starred in a three-reel Universal special called "The Pinnacle," by F. McGrew Willis, under the direction of Richard Stanton. This is her first picture here and is a very good film.

Francis X. Bushman, of Metro, under the direction of Fred J. Balshofer, is busily engaged in finishing "Pennington's Choice," under the direction of William J. Bowman. Last week the company returned from Bear Valley, where they secured some fine mountain scenes. Every man had a husky beard when they landed at the studio and looked more like a gang of tramps than photoplay makers.

He may not be heralded to the world on bright posters, but he is a famous man at the Balboa studios. He is Edgar Moore, and the most popular man in the studios. He left this week for a ten days' vacation at the Exposition. The reason for his popularity is that he is the man who makes the ghost walk around every Saturday.

Evidently the Lubin Company likes Coronado, for Tom Gibson, writer of multiple reelers, has taken unto himself a wife. Miss Anna M. Gaylean. They were married this week, and after a short honeymoon will live in Coronado. Some of Gibson's best stories are "Out of the Flotsam" and "The Web of Hate."

Somebody else did it, too. Ed Brady, known by his distinctive portraying of heavy parts for Balboa, was married this week to Lillian West, who also plays heavies. Another romance at the Balboa was the wedding of William Courtleigh, Jr., with Miss Ethel Fleming.

At the Fine Arts Studio, one would think he were in a branch Lambs' Club, for at the present time there are many of that organization on the Coast. The Western contingent is headed by De Wolf Hopper, Douglas Fairbanks, Orrin Johnson, John Emerson, Tully Marshall, Frank Campeau and Paul Gilmore. There are many other members scattered around the different studios. William S. Hart at Inceville is a homesick member.

Mack Sennett pays attention to every detail in his Keystone Studio. He even has a gateman, who certainly is on his job. Not even a spirit could get past him, and he politely stops every one who tries to enter the gates. If he does not remember you and stops you, then recognizes you, his gallantry in apologizing surpasses that of the Knight who spread his coat in the mud for a queen to tread upon.

To be barred from your own plant was the remarkable experience of D. W. Griffith this week. A new night watchman had been engaged at the Fine Arts Films studios and had been given rigid instructions that under no circumstances admit anybody whom he did not recognize. Late in the evening on the first night it happened that Mr. Griffith had to return to the studio for some important papers. To his great surprise he was stopped by the night watchman. "My name is Griffith and I desire to go in my office," says Mr. Griffith. "I don't care what your name is, unless you secure a pass from the business office, you won't get in," replied the watchman, and to emphasize his remark produced a harmful looking caliber forty-five. Mr. Griffith then decided to delay his visit until the next day, and he relates this story with much enjoyment and considerable praise of this vigilant officer.

Mae Marsh, the popular Griffith star, who has been seriously ill during the week past with pleurisy, is now considerably improved and expected to resume her work in a few days. Her bungalow home in Hollywood has been literally decorated with American Beauties, orchids and other flower offerings sent to Miss Marsh by her many friends and admirers.

James Horne has now commenced working on the first episode "Stingaree," the new Kalem serial. This serial consists of twelve stories, each complete in itself. Mr. Horn will leave this week with a big company for the Mojave desert to film scenes for these series. About a hundred horses will be carried and the company will have a special train. Saddles have been brought from Australia, where the story is supposed to take place, as the Australian saddles are different from ours. Special stage coaches have been built to resemble closely the style of carriage used over there. Marin Sais will play the lead with True Bordman opposite. Other members of the cast are Ollie Kirby, Thomas Lingham and Paul Hurst.

Another first class playhouse has been planned by Lowen Brothers, who are at present in the show business to a great extent in this city. Mr. Al Lowen announced this week that they would completely remodel and rebuild the structure which is now used as a storeroom on Main street, between Fifth and Sixth streets. The improvement will cost over $40,000. The new house will have a seating capacity of 784, and will be modern in every respect. A special program will be presented consisting exclusively of late and large feature productions. Mr. Al Lowen is at present managing the Century theater in this city.

May Allison is taking the lead opposite Harold Lockwood in "The Buzzard's Shadow," a five-reel production of the "Flying A" brand. Some of the scenes are made at Monterey and others on the Mojave desert. There is a strong heart interest as well as some stirring military action in this picture and gives Miss Allison an excellent chance to show her undoubted ability.

Lambart Forms New Company

Former Vitagraph Director in Multi-Million Dollar Corporation with New York Capitalists.

CAPTAIN HARRY LAMBART, formerly one of the chief directors of pictures for the Vitagraph Company of America, has come forth as director-general of one of the biggest picture manufacturing concerns yet formed in the industry, under the name of the Mirror Films, Incorporated, with a capital stock of $2,500,000. The company has opened offices in the new building at 16 East Forty-second street.

Capt. Harry Lambart.

Clifford B. Harmon is president and Frank S. Hastings is treasurer. Mr. Harmon is known as one of the largest suburban real estate operators in New York. Mr. Hastings was the executor of the estate of the late President Cleveland, and has been identified with large affairs in politics and business both in the East and the West. William J. Hoggson, president and director of Hoggson Brothers, designers and builders, is second vice-president; Andres de Segurola, a prominent basso of the Metropolitan Opera Company, is art director; Rich G. Hollaman, who was identified with the Eden Musee for many years, is a member of the board of directors. Other directors are John W. Houston, retired lawyer; Joseph Howlans Hunt, of the firm of Hunt & Hunt, architects, and secretary of the Fine Arts Federation of New York; Rufus B. Cowing, Jr., of the firm of Cowing, White & Waite; James King Duffy, president of the Export Oil Company; R. M. Owen, president of the Owen Magnetic Cars Company, and one of the biggest automobile men in the country, and Edward B. Close, of Spaulding, Close & Company.

The corporation is organized with the idea of introducing strict economy in the manufacture of films and is said to have back of it a coterie of men who are well known in the world of business and finance. They are said to be backing Captain Lambart in his ideas on production and distribution.

Captain Lambart had this to say about the venture:

"We art starting out first with the idea that motion pictures are the basis for a commercial project and not a theatrical enterprise. That will be one of the basic things on which the company is founded. We intend to look upon film, when done, as so much canned product, to be sold and distributed by the employment of the most improved methods of salesmanship which obtain in other well regulated businesses.

"We do not claim that we are going to make better pictures than any one else has ever made, but we think, with the talent and facilities at our disposal, that we shall be able to produce film which is worthy of consideration and which the public will want to see. We shall let the picture patrons judge when we have something to put before it on the screen."

"The exhibitor is looked upon by this company as the potential master of the industry and, as such, must be catered to and treated as the retailer in any other industrial line would be treated. We hope to make the exhibitor a real factor in shaping the policy of our company. His wants are going to be looked after as carefully as is humanly possible."

Captain Lambart is an interesting figure in the film world. He comes of a fine Irish family of rank, the history of which has been entangled with that of the highest families of Britain for centuries.

Although he had been a producer of some achievement on the stage, he made his advent into pictures in the most humble way. Twelve years ago he went to Paris and gained admittance to the Gaumont Studio as a spectator. He wanted to know something about the new amusement enterprise. He was not known to the Gaumont management, but he gradually came to be called upon to do bits in the pictures. These things he did for several months all the time, making himself useful in many ways. Before long he had the foresight to see that he was taking a small part in what eventually was to be a gigantic enterprise and he determined then and there to stick to pictures. He has done so from that day to this with an occasional return to the stage for a brief period.

Leaving Paris, he followed the same method of procedure in the Hepworth Studio in England. No one there knew who he was, although he had distinguished himself as a producer on the London stage. In Hepworth's plant he finally was picked to assist in putting on several scenes.

His thorough knowledge of photography and his natural aptitude for the moving picture work soon made him valuable and he began to look for bigger things in the new industry. His advent in pictures in America came about through Commodore Blackton. who, Captain Lambart considers, is one of the cleverest men in photoplay technique in the world. The Captain had been at the Globe theater for a year as stage director for Werba and Leuscher when he was introduced to Commodore Blackton. In 1912, at the Commodore's invitation, he went to the Vitagraph and played parts. After three months of watching Vitagraph methods, he got his first script, a one-reel picture called "The Test." Captain Lambart made two reels of it and was taken on permanently as a leading director for the Vitagraph after the success of this picture. Soon afterward he made a three-reel picture when such pictures were virtually unheard of and from that time was assigned to most of the large productions put out by the Vitagraph.

When the City of New York decided to exhibit motion pictures at the Panama Fair, in San Francisco, showing the workings of various departments, Captain Lambart was chosen to produce them. He was for ten weeks working in conjunction with the heads of the police department, the department of docks and ferries, the department of bridges, and the public service commission. In addition he directed scenes of an historical nature in and around historic buildings.

ARTHUR MAUDE JOINS DAVID HORSLEY.

Arthur Maude has been added to David Horsley's staff of directors at the Los Angeles studios and is now at work on a three-reel feature called "The Blood of Our Brothers," starring Crane Wilbur. This is the second of Mr. Horsley's three-reel subjects and will be released October 27 in the regular service of the Mutual program.

Arthur Maude is a cousin of Cyril Maude, the famous actor, and has a great deal of motion picture experience. Recently he was leading man, playing opposite Bessie Barriscale in "The Devil," "The Reward," "The Cup of Life," and other features.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

HERRINGTON CALLS OHIO CONVENTION.

Says Ohio Branch Has Forfeited Its Charter by Failing to Pay Dues.

REGARDING the affairs of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League in Ohio, National President Herrington has addressed a communication to The Moving Picture World, which reads as follows:

"Some confusion seems to have arisen about the coming state convention of motion picture exhibitors in Cleveland, Ohio.

"The Ohio state league has not paid its per capita tax to the National League. This tax has been due for a period of more than six months. The national constitution provides that whenever a state fails to pay its per capita tax the state secretary should be notified. After the state secretary is notified a period of grace of thirty days is given to the state branch to meet its obligations. In the case of Ohio the state secretary, Mr. W. R. Wilson, has been duly notified by the national president to the effect that Ohio had lapsed in its dues and stood in peril of expulsion. This was done in accordance with the provisions of the National Constitution. The state secretary made no reply to this notice. Unless the per capita tax now long overdue is paid by the 17th of October the Ohio charter issued by the National League will be forfeited and a new organization will be in order. For this reason and in obedience to my duty as national president, I have called a meeting of Ohio exhibitors for October 19 and 20 at Cleveland. If the old state organization lives up to its duties under its charter, the meeting will be held under the auspices of the present organization. If, on the other hand, final default is made in the payment of the per capita tax a new organization will be started immediately. In either event, I hope for the best results for the exhibiting body of Ohio.

"I am confident that Ohio will increase its organized strength and that we will secure at least three hundred applications for membership. I need not say that in my action in the Ohio situation I have been guided solely by considerations for the welfare of the exhibitors of that state. I want every exhibitor in Ohio to attend the meeting in Cleveland. Remember the date, October 19 and 20. I also hope that every exhibitor who attends will become a member of the Ohio state organization. Let our slogan be an injury to one is the concern of all. Fraternally yours,

"F. J. HERRINGTON,
"President M. P. E. L. of America,
"Apollo Bldg., 4th avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa."

In accord with the foregoing, President Herrington has issued the following:

A CALL FOR OHIO CONVENTION.

"An Injury to One Is the Concern of All."

Pittsburgh, Pa., Sept. 27, 1915.

To the Exhibitors of Ohio:

Acting under the authority vested in me as National President, I take great pleasure in inviting you as a practical exhibitor ACTIVELY ENGAGED IN CONDUCTING A MOTION PICTURE THEATER, to attend an open meeting of Ohio Exhibitors to be held at Cleveland, Ohio, on Tuesday and Wednesday, October 19th and 20th, 1915, for the sole purpose of thoroughly organizing Ohio for protective and defense purposes.

I do not need to remind you that the exhibitors of to-day are helpless and unprotected against the attacks of individuals. Any crank or set of cranks can and does cause you trouble and expense with very little effort. WE MUST ORGANIZE FOR OUR OWN PROTECTION. Whether it is necessary to remind you that from political and "officious," vicious attacks, we are constant victims, and single-handed we are DEFENSELESS. WE MUST ORGANIZE FOR OUR OWN DEFENSE. No matter what the feeling may be between ourselves as competitors, WE MUST ORGANIZE TO FIGHT THE COMMON ENEMY.

Not all can be persuaded to unite in one common brotherhood of business men. We propose to try to unite all those whose motto will be "LIVE AND LET LIVE," whose war cry will be "an injury TO ONE IS THE CONCERN OF ALL," and the outsider will be made to feel his loneliness very soon. Majority rule in all things must be insisted upon. The exhibitor has been the "football" too long. Come and help change this. Censorship is no longer the disturbing problem of the exhibitor. That problem is now up to the manufacturer for solution with the proper cooperation of the organized exhibitors.

We shall discontinue the digging up of past history and work for a new and a square deal for the exhibitors, large and small. The changes and developments in the trade recently are gigantic and rapid. As a business man with money invested, your position, single handed and alone, is precarious. Cleveland is headquarters for four-fifths of Ohio releases. Cleveland exhibitors are live wires. It will PAY FOR YOU TO MEET them. The "Sixth City" will entertain you right during the Indian Summer gathering. Think and act quickly by mailing acceptance of invitation that will be mailed to all exhibitors. Inclose postage to secure badges, etc. For particulars see trade papers of coming issues.

Fraternally yours,
FRED J. HERRINGTON,
National President M. P. E. L. of America,
Apollo Building, Fourth Ave., Pittsburgh, Pa.

CITY EXHIBITORS FOR NEW STANDEE LAW.

President Lee A. Ochs Has Started a Campaign to Enact the Old Gaynor Rule for Standees Into a City Ordinance.

LEE A. OCHS, the president of the New York Local, has undertaken a campaign against the present rigid rule which allows no standees in any place of public amusement. This rule bears especially hard on the motion picture exhibitor, whose business in many cases consists of a two-hour rush in the evening. Mr. Ochs will have the following ordinance introduced at the next meeting of the Board of Aldermen:

Be it ordained by the Board of Aldermen of the City of New York, as follows: Subdivision 9, Section 352-D, Article 3, Title 2, Chapter 7 of the Code of Ordinances of the City of New York, is hereby amended to read as follows:

9. Aisles—All aisles in the auditorium and gallery must not be less than three feet wide in the clear. No aisle or passage-way (or space in the rear of) in the auditorium shall be obstructed by any camp stool, chair, sofa or settee, nor shall any person be permitted to stand or sit therein except as follows:

(a) That persons may be permitted to stand in the aisle or passage-way at the rear of the seats on the ground floor of the auditorium provided that an unobstructed passage-way of at least three feet in width is left open and provided that exit facilities, in addition to those herein before provided to the extent of one foot and which lead directly from said aisle or passage-way for every twenty persons permitted to stand shall be provided, and

(b) That one row of persons shall be permitted to stand in the rear of the seats in the balcony.

This ordinance shall take effect immediately.

"The present rule," said Mr. Ochs, "ought to be abolished. If we exhibitors in the city here act in perfect accord we are able to force the adoption of my proposed ordinance. Let us put the Aldermen on record right now. Let every exhibitor go to the Alderman of his district and get a clear answer from him as to where he stands in this matter. We are within a few weeks of election day and this is the time to find out who our friends are. I want to tell the exhibitors of Greater New York to be careful about the slides they put on for candidates running for public office. Only such candidates should be favored as are duly indorsed by the headquarters of the New York Local. We do not want to do any favors for any candidate who is not outspoken in his friendship for the motion picture and the motion picture exhibitor."

NEW YORK LEAGUE TO GET NEW CHARTER.

National President Herrington Advises Exhibitors That Old Charter Has Lapsed—Moving Picture World Campaign Indorsed.

NATIONAL President Frederick J. Herrington during his recent stay in this city attended a meeting of the executive officers of Local No. 1. He had been invited to address the meeting which took place on Friday, September 24, at the headquarters of the New York Local at 110 West Fortieth street.

Mr. Herrington was enthusiastically received and his remarks were frequently punctuated by applause. He said that he hoped for great things in the further development of the league. He expressed his gratification over conditions in the city and state of New York and continued:

"I hope that when I leave here I will carry with me the application of the New York organization for a charter from the National League. You know that the old state organization has utterly failed to pay its per capita tax, hence its automatic expulsion and the automatic loss of its charter. The National League will only be too glad to issue a new charter to the new state organization. I suppose you have seen that other interests in the industry are organizing strongly. That is a hint for us. No one will fight the exhibitor's battle for him, he must fight it himself. I believe in organization for every branch of the industry, but I want to see the exhibitors' league at least as strong as the exchangemen or the producers. In many questions the interests of the producer and the exhibitor are identical and co-operation is absolutely essential. In the business dealings between exhibitor and exchangeman or manufacturer difference may at times arise. These differences can best be adjusted if both sides enjoy the advantages of organization."

Mr. Ochs, as president of the state organization, asked National President Herrington for a charter for New York. Mr. Herrington said he was glad to receive the application and promised that it would be favorably acted upon at once.

Mr. Herrington is in favor of New York as the next convention city. His declaration on the subject aroused considerable enthusiasm.

A resolution was adopted commending The Moving Picture World for its plan to aid the exhibitors in the city and state of New York in an effort to defeat the new constitution the makers of which had shown themselves hostile to the motion picture interests. Exhibitors are advised to accept the offer of The Moving Picture World. The slides with the text made by The Moving Picture World have been ordered and are now ready. The meeting instructed its chairman to get a set of slides.

The position of Mr. Ochs in regard to "standees" in the motion picture theaters in the City of New York was warmly indorsed. The features of Mr. Ochs' proposed campaign will be found in another article in this issue of The Moving Picture World.

George Beban an Originating Genius

"AN ALIEN," a photodrama recently shown on Broadway, New York City, in which his original idea of combining the silent and the spoken drama was most successful, has inspired George Beban with the ambition to do something more original, something bigger and better; something unprecedented and unapproachable; something never hitherto attempted in motion pictures. Prolonged study of existing conditions of the moving picture situation of today, supplemented by close and arduous literary effort has resulted in Mr. Beban being in a position to place on the motion picture screen a production so absolutely unique and absorbing that from the moment of its presentation the motographic art takes a big stride forward in the process of its so rapid development.

George Beban.

George Beban in his career has demonstrated that he is original and thoughtful as well as versatile. His combination of the spoken and silent drama showed this. He has had a brilliantly successful career as an interpreter of French and Italian roles; is a finished artist with a highly developed imagination and unlimited faith in the future possibilities of the silent drama.

His imagination has been very actively employed ever since his success in the filmplay "An Alien" and the result is that he has been enabled to submit for the entertainment of exhibitors and fans a photodrama absolutely of so startlingly original a nature that it will vastly enhance Mr. Beban's reputation and give the appetites of movie fans a piquant fillip

Beginning an Aggressive Campaign

Picture Playhouse Film Co., Inc., Have Ten Feature Releases Ready for Distribution.

AFTER a summer of comparative inactivity the Picture Playhouse Film Co., Inc., of No. 71 West Twenty-third street, New York City, is about to take up an aggressive campaign for rental business in the moving picture industry. Quietly and carefully the distributing company has been garnering a program of feature releases which it is now ready to offer exhibitors the country over with the assurance, not only that these features will be ready for distribution at regular intervals, but also that other big features will be on hand when the supply at hand has been exhausted.

To the Terriss Film Corporation, formed some months ago to exploit the productions made under the personal direction of Tom Terriss, well known on the legitimate stage both in this country and abroad, the Picture Playhouse people are looking for an important share of their pictures. Among the early Terriss releases for the season about to begin will be "The Pearl of the Antilles" and "The Flames of Passion," both of which were made in Jamaica, West Indies. "The Pearl" is now ready for distribution to the Picture Playhouse branch offices and will be on hand for exhibitors when they call for it. This is the big feature which the Terriss company had about completed when the hot weather set in and which has, since that time, been carefully worked over until it has been brought to the highest possible state of perfection. The work on "The Pearl" in this country has been done at the Terriss studios in Yonkers, N. Y., where the company has assembled everything necessary to the turning out of high-class features. The original company which was taken to Jamaica to picture the big story amidst the tropical West Indian splendors has been at work all summer in the Yonkers studios.

Mortimer D. Metcalfe, president of the Picture Playhouse Company, says that the various exchanges operated by the company throughout the country, have been doing quite satisfactory business despite the warm weather and are now manned by experienced men who will give a splendid account of themselves in the future. At the present moment, Mr. Metcalfe says, the company have just ten big features on the shelf ready for release at stated intervals.

HAROLD RENDALL JOINS BENEDICTS.

A prettily staged wedding ceremony was performed at Schary Manor, High street, Newark, at seven o'clock Wednesday evening, when Harold Rendall, well-known among New York film folk through his former connections with the Morning Telegraph and the Motion Picture News, took unto himself a wife. Miss Vera Uhl, of 23 Morton street, Newark, was the fortunate young woman, and was undoubtedly one of the most beautiful brides of the season, arrayed in a simply fashioned wedding gown of white Duchess satin, with the traditional bridal veil and orange blossoms.

After the ceremony, which was embellished by the playing of the "Lohengrin" Wedding March by Miss Emma R. Steiner, a vocal solo appropriate to the occasion beautifully rendered by Miss Helen Crane, and the "Angel Song," a selection from an opera of Miss Steiner's, by Mrs. Edwin E. Haslam, an exceptionally fine interpretation, the bride and groom left for a short honeymoon in Atlantic City, amid showers of rice and the good wishes of their many friends.

V-L-S-E MAKES CINCINNATI BRANCH OFFICE.

The second new branch office to be created within as many weeks has been opened at Cincinnati by the Big Four, with Robert S. Shrader, who has been managing the sub-office of the V-L-S-E in that city, in charge. The new releasing exchange will occupy an entire building at 129 West 7th street, with quarters that are as commodious and as convenient as those of any branch office in the west. A former two story and a half private dwelling, the office of the new branch, will occupy a total floorage of 3,500 square feet.

WEINBERG ON VACATION.

Jake Weinberg, of Weinberg Features, is taking his first vacation in five years. He is spending it at Hunter, N. Y. During the past five years Mr. Weinberg has built up from a very small start one of the biggest independent exchange businesses in New York City.

HARRY SPINGLER IN NEW UNIVERSAL FEATURE.

Harry Spingler, it is said, will have an important role in a new six-reeler the Universal contemplate producing, entitled "Son of the Immortals." The direction of this feature falls to the lot of Harry McRae Webster.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week at the New York Motion Picture Houses.

"Zaza" At the Strand.

PAULINE FREDERICK in the title role of "Zaza" is appearing on the screen this week at the Strand theater. The part has always been associated with Mrs. Leslie Carter and the French actress Rejane; it is, therefore, of more than passing interest to find an actress who is willing to brave comparison with the distinguished women who have made the role famous on the stage. Miss Frederick passes the test with high honors. The Famous Players Film Company, producers of the photo-dramatic version of the play, has given the star an excellent supporting cast, including Julian L'Estrange, Ruth Sinclair, Maude Granger, Blanche Fisher, Helen Sinnott, Mark Smith, Charles Butler and Walter Craven.

Another most interesting feature is the second part of the series of "Guarding Old Glory," a patriotic American theme, illustrating the efficiency of the United States armed service. This picture has been highly praised by the Secretaries of the Army and Navy, Major Gen. Woods, Major Gen. Scott and other high government officials. The Topical Review contains the latest international news pictures and European war subjects. Travel and Educational Studies and a new comedy are also shown. The musical program is, as usual, a brilliant one.

Triangle Program at Knickerbocker Theater.

Commencing Sunday afternoon, October 3, the Triangle program at the Knickerbocker theater will be changed. The list of feature photoplays scheduled include "The Coward," a five-part Ince production featuring Frank Keenan. This is a war picture par excellence. "Old Heidelberg," a five-part Griffith creation in which Dorothy Gish takes a leading part. Eddie Foy will appear in a two-part Keystone entitled "A Favorite Fool" and Hale Hamilton is the feature player in "Her Painted Hero," another two-part Keystone, both from the Sennett studio.

"The Fatal Card" At the Broadway.

The Famous Players Film Company's photo production of "The Fatal Card" is the leading feature this week at the Broadway theater, with John Mason and Hazel Dawn in the cast. The stage version was produced in this country by the late Charles Frohman and was recognized as one of the best melodramas imported from the London theaters. The screen version is equally absorbing. The fine performances given by John Mason and Hazel Dawn is supplemented by the excellent work of the entire supporting company. South American Travel Scenes, the Pathe News, and new cartoons and comedies, are on the program.

The engagements of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty theater, and "The Battle Cry of Peace" at the Vitagraph theater, still continue to crowded houses.

DR. BRADY'S PETITION DENIED.

The effort of Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady to enjoin the Reliance Film Corporation, the Mutual Film Corporation and the Frank H. Munsey Company from producing and distributing phoplays of the author's short story "A Child of God," has fallen by the wayside. Judge Hough, of the United States District Court, after comparing the various affidavits submitted by the litigants indorsed on the motion for a temporary injunction "Motion denied." This brief and pertinent memorandum is all the court had to say on the matter following oral argument.

Dr. Brady contended that when he sold the story to the Munsey Company he expressly reserved book and dramatic rights. Robert H. Davis, of the Munsey editorial staff, who purchased the story, in a long affidavit denied this contention. He set up that he supposed the usual form of receipt sent out by his company had been signed and filed. This receipt shows that Dr. Brady did add thereto the reservation claimed. Last February Dr. Brady wrote Mr. Davis that he had offered the picture rights of this particular story with others to the Vitagraph Company. Davis replied that complications might arise and asked for a conference. Conference followed and it seemed the parties had reached an understanding. Dr. Brady filed counter affidavits, but the court held that he had adequate remedy at law and the case must be tried on the issues raised.

J. R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, on behalf of his concern, filed an affidavit saying the cost of production of the reels, lithographing, etc., had cost $24,826.19 to date; that the concern is responsible, and if Dr. Brady has rights his company is ready and willing to make any accounting deemed right and equitable

CHAPLIN WILL STICK.

Charles Chaplin, Essanay comedian, whose latest comedy, "Shanghaied," has just been completed, denounces the reports that he is planning to leave Essanay as "vain imaginings." It is stated both on the authority of George K. Spoor, president of Essanay and Mr. Chaplin himself, that he will continue with Essanay indefinitely.

"There have been many ridiculous rumors circulated about my leaving Essanay which was news to me," said Mr. Chaplin. "One story I read said I was going into vaudeville on Broadway; another that I was going with other film companies. There is no truth in any of them. I am engaged under a long-term contract with the Essanay company and, as far as I am concerned, I intend to remain with it, and to produce no pictures for any other concern nor go on the stage. Not only am I under contract, but my associations with the Essanay company has been the most cordial and pleasant. Mr. Spoor and myself are in perfect harmony in regard to the work so why should I leave, even if I had no contract?"

ANOTHER CENTAUR COMPANY.

In order to further increase the producing efficiency of Director Frank Montgomery's company making the Centaur Features, in which the Bostock animals are the principal actors, and to alleviate the rush consequent to turning out a two-reel picture every week, David Horsley has organized a second company, under the direction of Carl LeViness, to produce every two weeks a two-reel animal drama of the same type as has been shown in the past Centaur releases.

Mr. LeViness' company is made up of Donald Bowles, a well-known stock favorite; Grace Gibson, Marvell Spencer, Victor Rothman, Susie Hamilton, H. Turner, Chandler House and Betty Anderson. Their first picture is called "Rhoda's Burglar," and is released Friday, October 7, on the Mutual program.

GERTRUDE BONDHILL WITH LARIAT.

The Lariat brand produced by Otis B. Thayer at the Garden of the Gods studio, located at Colorado Springs, Colo., will be released on the Associated Program. In the future Lariat pictures will feature Miss Gertrude Bondhill.

Mr. Thayer is one of the seasoned directors, having had seventeen years of experience on the legitimate stage, and was formerly a director for the Selig Polyscope Company. Miss Bondhill was a favorite on the legitimate stage, and we predict for her a bright future in the movies.

NATIONAL TO RELEASE ON ASSOCIATED.

The National Film Corporation of Baltimore, Md., are the latest producers to join the producing roster of the Associated Film Sales Corporation. The National Film Corporation's affairs are in hands of men who know the game and excellent productions should be received from them. The stars of the National will be announced later.

KLEINE MAKES "CANAVAN" WITH STAR CAST.

"Canavan, the Man Who Had His Way," that delightful story by Rupert Hughes which ran through the Saturday Evening Post, is now in course of filming at the Kleine Studios. Arthur Hoops will be seen in the role of the political boss, Canavan. He will be supported by John Davidson as Cadbury, Frank Belcher, Ruby Hoffman, William Sherwood and Della Connor.

COMEDY THEATER, BROOKLYN, REOPENS.

Fox's Comedy theater at 194 Grand street, Brooklyn, N. Y., has been renovated and is now open to the public. Feature subjects can be seen at this theater which changes its bill on Sunday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday. The house is said to be one of the best amusement places in the Williamsburg district. Emil H. Gerstle, who was formerly the manager of the Strand theater, Newark, N. J., is now the manager of the Comedy. Among the features to be found in the structure are a big Wurlitzer organ and a handsome stage setting. Max Harris is the assistant manager.

VITAGRAPH CHANGES RELEASE DATE.

At the urgent request of the Women's League of America, the release date of the Vitagraph's "The Ruling Power" has been changed from Saturday, October 23, to Saturday, October 16. "The Woman in the Box," scheduled for release on October 16, will now be released October 23.

Will Take Camera Around the World

The Peters Photographic Expedition Which Includes Scientists, As Well As Photographers, to Make Long Trip.

IT IS a long journey for which Thomas Kimmwood Peters, of San Francisco, is now preparing. Mr. Peters is in New York, acompanied by his secretary, T. Clement Bortlam, arranging for his start on November 1 on a trip which may require four or five years for completion. He plans to circle the globe accompanied by scientists and photographers. He will leave New York in a motor car and travel in that as far toward San Francisco as weather conditions will permit. From the Bay City steamer will be taken by the Peters Photographic Expedition for Honolulu. The Hawaiian Islands will be covered. Then the party will go to Australia, New Zealand, Tasmania and the New Hebrides. In Borneo the dominions of the Sultanate of Sarawok, in Brunei and North Borneo, will be visited. In the Phillipines the party will travel in Mindanao and Luzon, proceeding from there to Japan, where a stay of eight months is probable.

Thomas Kimmwood Peters.

Crossing to Korea Mr. Peters will go to Manchuria and then to China for a stay of about seven months. In Indo-China the travelers will go up the Mekong River to Angur Wat and Angur Thom, where it will explore these two big cities buried in the forests and desert. Next on the itinerary is Siam and from there the expedition goes to the Straits Settlement, with a side trip to Sumatra, Java.

In India Mr. Peters plans to produce some of Kipling's stories and also "The Light of Asia," the latter in spectacular style. In this he will have the co-operation of Indian potentates, who will supply him with as many elephants as may be necessary. Prominent Buddhists, too, will aid, and scenes will be taken practically all over India. It is intended also to make a number of other Indian stories. From India the party will travel in Persia and Palestine and then go to Egypt, returning to the United States by way of Europe.

The expedition will take a number of educational pictures on the trip. In the personnel will be an ethnologist and a biologist, who will have supervision of the photographing of subjects in their particular domain. Then there will be a Hindu Brahmin, a graduate of Stanford University, and a Chinaman, both thoroughly conversant with English as well as a number of other languages besides their own. Also there will be several actors as well as cameramen. Four cameras will be taken and a still picture equipment. There will also be a color picture equipment for stills and possibly for motion pictures. Among the apparatus will be a telephoto lens working at six magnifications. The cameras are constructed of aluminum and are dust and water proof. They may be submerged in water without damage to their contents. "We feel sure we are going to get things and also to keep them," said Mr. Peters. It is planned to do all developing as pictures are taken. A part of the equipment will be a distiller to insure proper water conditions.

"I think we are going to have a very fine bunch of pictures to send back to the United States," said Mr. Peters. "We will forward film from time to time, beginning at Honolulu. We have made banking arrangements that will guarantee prompt shipments and protection en route. No, we have not as yet contracted with any program, but we will do so before leaving New York."

Mr. Peters is no stranger to many of the countries he will visit, having made four previous trips and also having taken pictures all over Europe.

VAUDEVILLE THEATER CHANGES TO PICTURES.

After running vaudeville for the past seven years, W. R. Wilkerson, who is manager of the Princess theater, Hot Springs, Ark., has changed the policy and his house is now devoted to the exhibition of photoplays.

Thomas Bedding

AMONG the men who have become known because of their connection with the motion picture business must always appear the name of Thomas Bedding, publicist and photographic expert. Born in England, where he received a liberal education, Mr. Bedding adopted the calling of a newspaper man and gained some considerable reputation as dramatic critic, short story writer and editor of popular publications. Photography was his hobby, and from youthful experimenting he became an expert in the art and was subsequently recognized as an authority throughout Great Britain. Because of his knowledge he was chosen editor of the British Journal of Photography and elected to membership in the Royal Photographic Society.

Thomas Bedding.

While thus engaged, Mr. Bedding was chosen president of the Photographic Convention of the United Kingdom and was instrumental in organizing the Professional Photographers' Association, of which he became president. Taking up practical motion picture work he became associated with Charles Urban and worked with him in many of his experiments on the kinemacolor process.

Coming to New York in 1907, Mr. Bedding became associted with the Cameraphone Company and later was a member of the editorial staff of the Moving Picture World, through which publication his writings and criticisms on motion picture subjects gained considerable vogue. Resigning from the staff of the Moving Picture World in 1911, he became technical director of the Associated Motion Picture Patents Company. Since then he has been scenario editor of the Universal Company, editor of the Motion Picture News, sales manager of the Itala Film Company during the "Cabiria" campaign. In November, 1914, Mr. Bedding took up his present duties in the press department of the World Film Corporation as editor of film productions and writer of publicity.

OPENS FEATURE THEATER AT WILMINGTON.

The Royal theater, the first exclusive feature photoplay house in Wilmington, N. C., was opened on September 20 by Howard & Wells, the owners. The erection of the building cost $25,000. It stands upon a lot worth $50,000. One of the largest mirror screens in the south has been installed, and Power's 6B machines are used. The building is modern in every respect, with elaborate pressed brick and terra cotta front and glass marque.

The firm of Howard & Wells, composed of Percy W. Wells and James Howard, is one of the best-known picture firms in the south. Both with a life-time experience in the show business, were pioneers in the picture game here when they opened the Bijou theater ten years ago. The success they have made of the Bijou leads to pleasing forecasts for the success of their new house. They announce that they will show Paramount, World, Metro and V-L-S-E features.

FINE ARTS GETS "THE COUNTY FAIR."

The Fine Arts Films studio, located in Hollywood, has purchased from Charles Bernard, of Pasadena, California, the motion picture rights of "The County Fair," of which Bernard was the author and which Neil Burgess made famous as a play a quarter of a century ago. "The County Fair" still lives in the hearts of the theater-going public, and contains an excellent story for motion picture purposes. Negotiations have been started with a prominent speaking star to play the part Neil Burgess created in the original production.

"Vanity Fair"

Mrs. Fiske Gives Screen Interpretation of Becky Sharp in Edison Production of Thackeray's Novel.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

SEVERAL years ago, when extended photoplays were just coming into vogue, Mrs. Fiske played Tess in "Tess of the D'Urbervilles." Despite the success of her first venture in pictures she declined to take part in other productions until the Edison Company persuaded her to appear in an elaborate version of Thackeray's "Vanity Fair." It was pointed out, and quite properly, too, that one of the greatest performances in the history of the American stage was her Becky Sharp, and that however ably another actress might present the character in pictures, the public was first of all interested in seeing Mrs. Fiske's portrayal. With this seven-reel Kleine-Edison production going the rounds, there will be every opportunity to see a faithful interpretation of a renowned figure in English literature. The Edison Company chose a suitable subject for the introduction of its feature releases.

Scene from "Vanity Fair" (Edison).

In a picture of reasonable length it is manifestly impossible to give anything like a complete version of a novel such as "Vanity Fair." It is possible, however, to re-create the characters so that they will be recognizable, to give a true picture of the times in which they lived and to mark the more essential and dramatic points of the story. All of these things have been done by Director Eugene Nowland and his associates in the production under consideration. An outstanding feature of the photoplay is its correctness in settings, in costumes and in characterizations. It reflects the descriptions and catches the spirit of Thackeray's novel as fully, if not more fully, than did the play. More than this need not be asked.

When introduced as a child, already giving evidence of the assertive temper that is to develop in later years, Becky is played by Leonie Flugrath, while Rakedell Sharp, her father, is forcefully acted by Yale Benner. There is a lapse of several years before Mrs. Fiske's first appearance as a troublesome inmate of the Misses Pinkerton's school. She leaves to live with her friend Amelia, and once out in the larger world, Becky promptly places her keen wits at the service of her selfish nature. From the time she enters the Sedleys' home there is no end to the mischief that she works, always scheming to better herself, quite regardless of the consequences to others.

If anything, the plot is a bit too complex, demanding very close attention if the full purport of all of the scenes is to be grasped. There is no danger, however, of missing the general trend of the story and the significance of the central character. We see Becky draw her net around first one man and then another, and she never experiences the slightest compunction whatever the results. Mrs. Fiske is remarkably successful in expressing the depth and subtlety of a character such as is seldom attempted on the screen.

The remainder of the cast reveals the fine quality of the Edison stock company. It was not necessary to go outside of the studio to find suitable actors for Thackeray's distinct types. William Wadsworth as Joseph Sedley, Robert Brower as Mr. Osborne, Bigelow Cooper as Rawdon Crawley, Richard Tucker as George Osborne, George A. Wright as Lord Steyne and Helen Fulton as Amelia might have stepped from between the pages of "Vanity Fair." Of the many elaborate scenes the one of the ball on the night before the Battle of Waterloo produces a particularly striking effect.

Hamilton Smith in New Kalem Series.

Director Hamilton Smith is now working on the episodes of the new Kalem series, "The Ventures of Marguerite." This series will consist of one reel episodes, each complete in itself, and will feature dainty Marguerite Courtot.

Jack Richardson, a Mustang Heavy.

Jack Richardson is playing his favorite "heavy" roles with the Mustang (Mutual) company. In a recent contest conducted by a magazine Mr. Richardson received second prize, polling over 1,300,000 votes.

Realism for Poe's "Raven."

A fully equipped blacksmith shop was constructed in Essanay's Chicago studio for the filming of a scene in "The Raven," adapted from Edgar Allan Poe's poem of that title. Masons and carpenters were busy a whole day building a fireplace of brick, installing a bellows and putting in the necessary paraphernalia. It is typical of the time represented.

"The Miracle of Life"

A Beautiful Four-Part American of Strong Motif and Artistic Treatment.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A TRIUMPH of motion-picture art is every story like "The Miracle of Life," when its strong theme is impressed by methods peculiar to story visualization on the screen. Every such story becomes a new word of encouragement and of prophecy, and this particular one is bound to exert a softening and humanizing influence upon all who see it. In many a good woman's heart, especially in early wifehood, when the charm of the honeymoon possesses her soul, there comes a moment of revolt against the surrender of all that has made existence a source of delight for the sake of self-denying motherhood. The long-anticipated joys of love seem all too short in hours and days—it is like the end of a golden summertime presaged by the first falling leaves. That moment of revolt may be one of danger, and it so becomes in "The Miracle of Life," when a beautiful young bride is given a potion designed to destroy the seed of life within her and her divine mission as well.

Scene from "The Miracle of Life" (American).

This delicate subject is delicately and beautifully handled through an actual story and through some exquisite symbolism. Even the scientific work deserves especial mention. Minute attention to details of lighting is brought out by fine work in the laboratory, and the tinting leaves no jarring note on the long series of spiritual double exposures. The young wife, charmingly impersonated by Margarita Fischer, powerfully so at times, is led through the gardens devoted to baby souls awaiting their turn, nestling in blossoming vines, in the petals of roses, on the leaves of pond lilies. They represent the force that redeems the young wife, that gives energy, breadth and beauty to the pictured story itself.

"The Pearl of the Antilles"

First Production of Terriss Feature Film Company to Be Released by Picture Playhouse.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

OF THE picturesque quality of this five-part drama produced by Tom Terriss there can be no question. Practically all of the exteriors were photographed in Jamaica last spring and they are as varied as they are attractive. Mr. Terriss is to be complimented on his choice of locations for this photoplay version of "The Sword of Honor," an old English drama. They add appreciably to the value of the production, which is likely to hold the attention of an audience despite a few shortcomings in the story.

Scene from "The Pearl of the Antilles" (Terriss).

There are times when the plot of "The Pearl of the Antilles" seems to run into narrative, rather than drama, but it is quite possible that a spectator will become interested in the career of the pretty heroine of the tale, who reaches young womanhood in almost childish ignorance of the ways of the world and walks innocently into the trap laid by a sophisticated Englishman. The girl appearing in the role of Pearl Richmond, "The Pearl of the Antilles," is only fifteen, and it is difficult to believe that this is her first picture, so effectively does she act under the direction of Mr. Terriss. Fresh and engaging in manner she is precisely the type needed for a role demanding youthful spontaniety and it is to be hoped that she will be seen in other productions of this concern.

First interest, however, naturally attaches to the performance of Mr. Terriss, who won an enviable reputation in this country by his interpretations of Dickens' characters. The part of Brutus in the present offering presents the English actor as a wild, half-demented man, whose one sympathetic friend in all the village is Pearl. He becomes almost slavishly fond of the girl and later when a blow on the head has restored his reason, he is her devoted champion in thwarting the plans of Carson, the English explorer, who inveigles Pearl onto his yacht.

Mr. Terriss gives a forceful, interesting performance and is adequately supported by Lionel Pape in the role of Carson. One of the most dramatic incidents in the picture shows a struggle on the brink of a waterfall between Brutus and the explorer, ending in Pape's taking a headlong plunge into the pool below. There is a real thrill in this scene, which marks a high spot in a picture that reveals competent direction and acting.

"Voices From the Past"

A Three-Reel Lubin Release, Written by Shannon Fife, Which Possesses Ample Dramatic Merit.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

AS MAY be gathered from the title, Shannon Fife three-reel drama, "Voices from the Past," is retrospective in action. Elsie Craig, the heroine, is loved by John Pemberton, her guardian. She, however, has consented to marry a man named George Trent. When Pemberton learns this, he gives the girl a document containing the story of her mother's life, knowing that when Elsie has read it she will give up all thought of Trent. It is the events in the lives of her parents that furnish the dramatic incidents of the photoplay, and the action is shifted back to the time when Elsie was three years of age, and her mother was leading an unhappy life with the girl's father. Forced, in self-defence, to kill her husband, the deed was witnessed by Pemberton, who had always loved Craig's wife, and George Trent, a lawyer, who, also, had been an admirer of Elsie's mother. Pemberton takes Mrs. Craig and the child to his own home, after assisting to make it appear that Craig committed suicide. Trent attempts to force Mrs. Craig to marry him by threatening to expose her. She drops dead of heart failure, and the action shifts back to where Elsie is seen finishing the account of her mother's life. Realizing the worthlessness of Trent and the depth of Pemberton's affection for her mother, she sees that her guardian has transferred his love to her, and accepts him gladly. This highly dramatic narrative has been fashioned into a photoplay with Mr. Fife's accustomed skill, and the result is three reels of sustained interest in a story which consistently reflects a phase of modern life, and points the moral: A woman should not marry for any reason but love. Lilie Leslie gives a human and appealing portrayal of both the girl Elsie and her mother. William Cohill, Joseph Smiley and John Smiley are entirely satisfactory in the leading male roles; and Joseph W. Smiley's direction of the picture fulfils every demand.

"The Man in Irons"

Last of the Kalem "Mysteries of the Grand Hotel"—Full of Action—Worthy Final to a Series That Has Made a High Mark.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THIS series, "The Mysteries of the Grand Hotel," must be proving a lucky investment to its owners, the Kalem Company. This reviewer has seen most of them, and all that he has seen have been, in his judgment, excellent offerings from the exhibitor's viewpoint. The final installment, "The Man in Irons," in two reels, seems to be very nearly a hundred per cent. efficient—we did not find any slack action or delay in it at all. The quality of the story is not so high as was "The Man on Watch," for example. It lacks the human depth of that story. But the spectator feels when watching it much as one who watches a lighted fuse, its bright point creeping along through the dark. The first reel keeps him expectant that something is going to happen and then what might be referred to as the fireworks begin. As soon as the mystery starts to clear up a little the struggle begins and runs like a flash from a certain room in the hotel to the hall, to the desk in the office, to the office of the hotel doctor, who is one of the elements in the conspiracy to free a noted counterfeiter being kept, over trains, in that certain room at the hotel. Finally there are a couple of flashes that clear up the denouement and all the characters are accounted for.

Scene from "The Man in Irons" (Kalem).

The character first introduced, and one of the most interesting in the story, is the hotel doctor, played by William H. West, whose recent death will be again lamented by all who see his work in this film. The doctor, we notice, is passing bad money, but is not yet even suspected by the hotel people. A woman (Marin Sais) arrives at the house. It is seen that the doctor and she are not unacquainted and her coming helps the flirtations of the doctor's niece with the reporter "covering" the Grand Hotel. We know that the strange woman has told the doctor that "they are bringing King here"; but the doctor's plan is not revealed. The "Man in Irons" is now brought in by the detective and a room is assigned to them. It is all convincing enough but we are left wondering none the less, not knowing who the man is nor why he is in irons. The doctor soon shows how his plan begins to work and from this point the action leaps as quickly from incident to incident as the pigskin does on a football field when the eleven are at practice, catching and passing. The "man in irons" makes good his escape, he being the first set free. The doctor has to fight for his freedom and is killed by the detective. The Woman is captured in the lobby. Later the police raid the counterfeiters' joint and bag the rest, including the chief.

"Right Off the Bat"

Mike Donlin Stars in First Production of the Arrow Film Corporation—Released in Five Reels.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THAT Mike Donlin is something of an actor as well as a ballplayer is convincingly shown in this five-part comedy drama, written by Albert S. LeVino and produced under the direction of Hugh Reticker. "Right Off the Bat" is first of all a mighty good baseball picture, sure to delight followers of the diamond stars, and after that it is a pleasing combination of comedy, melodrama and romance, wholesome in its atmosphere and unusually attractive to the eye, by reason of the many charming country locations. Donlin and the other members of the company, including Claire Mersereau, Fan Bourke and George Sullivan, moved to Winsted, Conn., for the production of Mr. LeVino's scenario, which called for few studio sets. Director Reticker found the most picturesque spots of a picturesque country and when it came to photographing a baseball game he had two sure enough ball teams to assist in making the scenes genuine.

Scene from "Right Off the Bat" (Arrow).

This game, marking the climax of Donlin's career, is one of the big features of the photoplay. Unlike most film depictions of baseball, the picture is so well cut and titled that the movements of the players may be followed intelligently. The spectator knows just what is happening on the diamond and how the home team is being beaten, because Donlin is held prisoner by a trio of gamblers. Then comes his release, owing to the courageous interference of his sweetheart, Viola, and his appearance in the pitcher's box in time to win the game. Likewise, it was due to Viola's foresight that McGraw of the New York Giants sent a scout to watch the bushleaguer in action. Donlin is signed up for the big league and the young woman's proud parents are ready to consider him as a prospective son-in-law.

There is plenty of exciting action to carry the last two reels and it is all the better for the occasional bits of comedy. The prologue, too, showing Donlin and Viola as children and following the growth of their romance from the time the barefooted country boy saves his wealthy little neighbor from drowning, makes interesting narrative, acted in a natural fashion. True, small town types assist in giving the picture the tone of genuineness which it always carries. The humor appears to be a natural expression of the characters.

"'Twas Ever Thus"

Elsie Janis Writes Photoplay Romance and Acts Star Role —Produced in Five Reels by Bosworth.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IF ELSIE JANIS aimed to devise a story affording an opportunity for her to appear in widely dissimilar roles, she succeeded very well in "'Twas Ever Thus," a romance of the primitive past, of Civil War days and of the present. In each of the chapters Miss Janis is the heroine being wooed by an insistent male, illustrating the argument of the picture—if anything so obvious may be called an argument—that in all ages and under all conditions men have expended quite a bit of thought and effort in making love to women.

The picture opens with an example of the cave man's direct methods, Miss Janis playing the character of Lithesome, Hobart Bosworth that of Hard Muscle, Owen Moore in the role of Long Biceps, and Myrtle Stedman as Joysome. With the conclusion of this dramatic little sketch the players are given complete wardrobes in place of the scanty attire of the earlier period, and re-introduced as the main figures in a romance of the South during the Civil War. The story here is a trifle episodic, but profits by pretty scenes and some pleasantly romantic passages that are acted in the proper spirit.

Next we meet the same actors in a present-day setting and learn that Miss Janis is a literary young woman determined to write a novel; but a hard-hearted publisher declares that, although she writes well enough, her actual knowledge of life is deficient. Promptly, Marion starts out to study life and welcomes the opportunity of becoming a maid in the home of the man who rejected her manuscript. She undertakes to cure the ne'er-do-well son of the publisher of his infatuation for an actress and in the end wins his love herself. Incidentally she becomes the author of the most popular novel of the season.

Scene from "'Twas Ever Thus" (Bosworth).

In the part of the housemaid, Miss Janis has a few comedy scenes that are fairly amusing, but essentially it is a romantic picture with only occasional touches of humor. It will not be a strong offering, though probably a pleasing one, especially for admirers of the Bosworth Company's clever star.

"Fatherhood"

Four-Reel Broadway-Universal Features Offering, with Hobart Bosworth and Helen Wolcott in the Leads.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THERE is something very wholesome and pleasing about this Western story. It does not contain a forced episode in the entire four reels and the result is that when the crisis in the lives of the ranchman and his young wife is reached, the observer's sympathy is with them in every turn of the plot.

Hobart Bosworth gives a good picture of the ranch hand, whose early years are passed without thought of woman. When it finally comes and he brings home a young wife, the situation becomes very absorbing. Helen Wolcott is also excellent as the girl wife. In a quiet, effective way she shows how the first pride in her new home has passed; how she thinks her husband's love has cooled, and how this latter thought leads her to return home to her mother.

Scene from "Fatherhood" (Universal).

One of the best scenes in the picture is where the husband, thinking his wife has gone away with Bud, follows them to the creek. Here he stops for a drink in a quiet pool and sees his own reflection in the water. "I'm old," he says, taking a good look at himself for perhaps the first time in years, then adds: "Let 'em go!" This has a strong touch of real human nature in it.

But Bud returns and tells the ranchman his wife has gone to her mother. He does not go for her, thinking she has tired of him. She remains at home, unhappy in the same thought. Then her mother, a kindly soul, well portrayed by Lydia Yeamans Titus, whispers the secret in the young wife's ear—she is about to become a mother.

The baby arrives and the young mother, thinking to win back her husband's love, which she had in fact never lost, sends him a photograph of it. Picture then the joy of the surprised ranchman, and the alacrity with which he takes the first train to his wife and child. This production proves again that the strongest effects are frequently achieved when the author, actors and director stand back with due reverence and allow the plot to work itself out in a natural way.

"The Flash of an Emerald"

Robert Warwick Plays the Villain in World Film Melodrama Produced by Albert Capellani.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE audience is given fair warning in the opening scene of this five-part picture. It is clearly advised that "The Flash of an Emerald" is undisguised melodrama. Robert Warwick, the star, meets Albert Capellani, the director, and when asked how he would like to play the part of a "wicked villain" says "nay, nay." But he goes ahead and does it just the same. Then, the story having been told, the scene switches back to the director and the actor, who, it seems, has been reading the script all the while, and he leaves the room in a dudgeon, maintaining that the "wicked villain" is not good enough for him. We're ready to second Mr. Warwick in any argument of the kind.

Scene from "The Flash of an Emerald" (World Film).

But even so; even if this very accomplished actor deserves photoplay material of a higher caliber, "The Flash of an Emerald" is likely to be favorably received. There is enough plot, enough action, enough excitement to prevent its becoming dull and, as may be expected in Director Capellani's work, the scenes, taken on their individual merits, are well handled. That the picture lacks the unity and the plausibility found in dramas of a higher type is yet another matter.

Most of the first reel, for example, has little bearing on the story proper—unless an exposition of Waldeck's character be urged as justification—yet it is made interesting by reason of the scenes at a crowded race track on the afternoon that a thief and his accomplice steal the silver cup offered for the feature event. Having brought the theft to a successful conclusion, the author devises another and more difficult undertaking for his villain. An aged lady who is caring for an invalid granddaughter, wears an emerald of great value. Waldeck meets her in the lobby of a hotel and promptly plans the acquisition of the stone. His accomplice, Marie, in the capacity of lady's maid, accompanies the woman to St. Ann de Beaupre where pilgrims are seeking miraculous relief from their afflictions. The religious ceremonies are pictured in some detail, as is the strategy of the thieves. They get the emerald, but in the end, of course, must suffer for their misdeeds.

In making the most of this melodrama, Mr. Warwick is capably assisted by Clarissa Selwynne, Julia Stuart, Dorothy Fairchild and Jean Stuart. The production includes a quantity of attractive settings.

"A Wonderful Adventure"

A Five-Part Fox Production Presenting William Farnum in Two Interesting Character Portrayals.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

LACKING a story of particular moment, "A Wonderful Adventure" is largely dependent upon the personality and acting of William Farnum. In fact as well as name this remarkably virile player is the star of the production. He interprets two characters, that of an influential business man, who goes to the dogs because of a woman and drugs, and that of a rugged westerner, who happens to be the image of the drug fiend.

The situation in which one man is required to assume the identity of another has long since lost its novelty, but not its usefulness as the basis of a drama. Here, at least, it affords Mr. Farnum every opportunity to appear on the screen in two distinct characterizations. He is a strong, well-balanced man of sound morals, and he is a nervous wreck—a man who has lost his grip on life, whose will is atrophied, who, in time, becomes the victim of his maniacal hallucinations.

In each of these parts Mr. Farnum is thoroughly convincing, and the double exposures demanded by the frequent meetings of the two men are flawless. Striking photographic effects, in fact, are numerous throughout the picture, the most noteworthy coming with the last reel and the electric storm which kills the vampire who brought about Demarest's ruin and likewise ends the agonies of her victim. The author adopted a somewhat obviously convenient method of removing the characters that stood in the way of a happy conclusion, but that need not detract from the spectacular effectiveness of the scenes.

Dorothy Green misses something of the seductive charm expected in a woman capable of fascinating men so readily, and Mary G. Martin is a rather colorless wife. A thoroughly trained collie dog is used to advantage.

"The Closing Net"

Gold Rooster Play Adapted from Henry C. Rowland's Novel Presents Five Reels of Thrilling Melodrama.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald

THE story of "The Closing Net" is one that has lent itself to the screen with more than the ordinary avidity, allowing itself to be converted into one of the most acceptable of motion picture melodramas.

Edward Jose's artistic brush is easily noticeable in the painting of the picture, from George Brackett Seitz's adaptation of the story. And in the cast, which the following names will designate as an excellent one, are Howard Estabrook, Kathryn Browne-Decker, Bliss Milford, Madeline Traverse, and Arthur Albro.

The approach to the main portion of the story by a short cut of a few clearly defined scenes, has been admirably done, and before the picture has advanced far we know of the deceiver, husband to two women, one in name only, each of whom bear him a son, and of the terrible awakening of the more unfortunate of the two, her consignment of her child to the orphan asylum, and her final suicide by drowning, to escape her shame.

Then we are shown the unhappy environment of the high-spirited orphan boy, Claimart, his escape from the orphanage, and his headlong plunge into the life of the underworld. Later there comes the meeting with the beautiful Leontine and her associate, "Chu Chu," the king of thieves, an attempt on wager to rob the home of the man who turns out in the course of events to be his own half brother, the love scene between him and Leontine in the darkness of the still house, and the arousing of the household by the falling of some bric-a-brac. Following this comes the flash of the brother's pistol which brings Claimart to the floor, and sends Leontine fleeing to her waiting associates, the awakening a week or so afterward of Claimart in what he calls heaven, since it is neither jail nor a hospital, and his resolution to change his ways, urged by the influence of his beautiful sister-in-law.

Scene from "The Closing Net" (Pathe).

The pathetic point of the story arises when his brother in financial difficulties steals his wife's pearls, and is caught in the act by Claimart. Then there is the real melodramatic touch in the climax when the fight for life occurs between "Chu Chu" and Claimart, and a bullet from the gun of the little chauffeuress nips off "Chu Chu" and welds the hearts of the two remaining participants of the incident.

"The Closing Net" will undoubtedly be considered one of the strongest of the Gold Rooster plays.

Two Famous Biographs

"Pippa Passes" and "Brute Force" Are Scheduled for Release in October on General Film Program.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

PRODUCED by D. W. Griffith in 1909, "Pippa Passes," a remarkably sympathetic interpretation of Browning's poem, remains a motion picture classic. Even now, despite improvements in some of the finer points of photoplay production, this single-reel subject offers entertainment of an exceptionally high order. It carries the spirit of poetry and leaves a marked impression such as can only be created by a work of art. "Pippa Passes" is well worth reissuing on its own account and to the follower of the careers of screen players it will be doubly interesting, owing to the remarkable cast under Mr. Griffith's direction.

Scene from "Pippa Passes" (Biograph).

These actors need no introduction: Arthur Johnson, Marion Leonard, Owen Moore, Billy Quirk, Gertrude Robinson, James Kirkwood, Mack Sennett and George Nicholls. Surely this is an all-star cast that could not be gathered to-day, and in Mr. Griffith's adaptation of Browning's beautiful poetry the players have material worthy of their best efforts. "Pippa Passes" will be released on Octover 15th.

A week later, Mr. Griffith's two-part picture, "Brute Force," will be the Biograph attraction. This production is on the same order as "Man's Genesis." It follows the development of man in the stone age and shows how primitive weapons are used by a weak tribe to repel the advances of their stronger neighbors. The picture is powerful in presenting the brutality of the cliff dwellers and thoroughly dramatic in the conflict for the possession of the women held in the caves of the weaker men. Animals of fantastic shape and ominous appearance increase the suggestion of a prehistoric period. Mae Marsh and Robert Harron are prominent figures in an excellent cast.

New Adventures of J. Rufus Wallingford

The First of the Adventures of Wallingford, "The Bungalow Tangle," Projects Something New in the Way of Comedy.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

GEORGE RANDOLPH CHESTER'S series of stories, known by the above title are being picturized for the Pathe Exchange, Inc., in a highly comic and interesting manner. The Whartons, directors of the "Elaine" serial, are largely responsible for the creditable style in which the series is being presented in pictures (judging from the first episode), although some of the honors must go to the cast which is composed of Burr McIntosh in the role of J. Rufus Wallingford, Max Figman as "Blackie Daw," Lolita Robertson as Violet Warden upon the swindling of whose father rests the plot of the play, Eddie O'Connor as "Onion" Jones, and Harry Mainhall as Benzy Falls.

The opening of the two-reel episodes of "The Bungalow Tangle" takes place in a drawing room car on the railroad when Violet and Fannie Warden, daughters of a man ruined by a swindling gang known as the Falls clique, meet J. Rufus Wallingford and "Blackie Daw," confidence men, who are invited to do their utmost to recover the lost Ward fortune, which is done with all the gusto of the two leading men.

The comedy is, of course, all action; and in spite of the fact that a farcical element is introduced, there is a pleasing absence of slapstick play. Each of the series has a story of its own, at the end of which another name is crossed off the list of prospective victims.

"The New Adventures of J. Rufus Wallingford" with its accessories of good photography and above mentioned attributes of direction and cast, bids fair for a large following in leading picture houses.

"A Black Sheep"

A Hilarious Selig Comedy in Five Reels, Adapted from Hoyt's Famous Comedy by Gilson Willets, with Otis Harlan in the Principal Role.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

HOYT'S "A Black Sheep" was one of his best comedies in its day and a big financial success; but its adaptation by Gilson Willets for moving pictures and its production by Selig promise to outrank the stage prototype, both in laughs and popularity. Moreover, just as the hilarity and the success of the stage production depended chiefly on the art and the mirthful personality of Otis Harlan, so does the photocomedy find in him the mainspring of the laugh-machinery that will compel the risibilities of spectators wherever this Selig "Red Seal" is seen, and this statement is made without any desire to minimize the fine merits of many others in the well balanced cast.

There is not a weak spot in the entire five reels, and this means that each reel is strong in itself and that it contributes its full quota to the "good time" of those who view it. Humorous incidents abound throughout, from the opening scene in Tombstone, Ariz., to the hasty wedding in the finale and the "ducking" of Lord Small-Talk, the apostle of culture; while the humor is constantly enriched by the piquancy of the subtitles. These subtitles will be an especial delight to all, because of their fitness to the incident with which each is connected, and because each furnishes the sparkle of wit to its humorous scene.

"Who's your prisoner from Siberia?" asks the Black Sheep, directing his query to the manager of the Chicago burlesque troupe, which has just arrived in Tombstone. The said prisoner captures all eyes, for he carries in his arms the strong box that contains the manager's money and a heavy iron ball, connected with his right ankle by a strong iron chain.

"That's my treasurer. He's an ex-bank cashier, and I ain't taking any chances," replies the manager, who bears the name of Loudclothes. And then, when the members of the troupe crowd into the only hotel in the town the Black Sheep, desiring an introduction to the queen of the show, says to the same Loudclothes: "Put us next to yonder troubles and joys." Loudclothes raises the flag of dignity, but is soon glad to lower it when he feels six-shooters pressed against various parts of his anatomy.

"What about eats after the show?" the Black Sheep asks the Queen. "Sure, I'll feed with you," is that lady's elegant reply; but she gets even with her host later when she orders "six hot birds, six cold bottles and a bushel of trimmings" for dinner. When it is stated that the incidents referred to occur in the opening scenes of the first reel, it can be guessed readily that there is something doing worth while every moment of the 75 minutes that it takes to show the action on the screen.

T. N. Heffron, who has shown fine art in several big Selig productions, is especially happy in the direction of this comedy. He has evolved the best possible results in every situation, and has kept up the swift pace of the action without a single instance of lagging. Every member of the cast is in harmony with the atmosphere of the story, and the well concerted acting is proof of repeated and painstaking rehearsal.

Scene from "A Black Sheep" (Selig).

Otis Harlan, in this merry photocomedy, breaks into moving pictures with the dash and firm confidence of a conquering hero. He has played his part with such fervid realism throughout that loud acclaims will be the only fitting tribute. As "The Black Sheep" of the Mudd family, of Chicago, he will bring delight to millions of eyes, and to as many minds. There will be no place for care or worry in the minds of anyone while Mr. Harlan is being viewed on the screen in these pictures. The jovial personality with which he invests the wayward son of the Mudds is still further enhanced by his physique. The man or woman who can look, without a spasm of merriment, at Otis Harlan's Black Sheep, when that individual returns to the Mudd mansion after finishing his "culture" term under the tuition of Lord and Lady Small Talk, is "fit for treason, stratagem and spoils." His dress, his walk, his mannerisms—the whole man—make the irresistible appeal. And this is only one instance. The placing of the wreath on Grandfather Mudd's grave, who was drowned in the lake in Lincoln Park and his body never recovered, because he "rocked the boat," is one of the many other laugh-raising climaxes.

James Bradbury as Manager Loudclothes of the burlesque company, is another scream. In the part of aristocratic Ada Steele Miss Grace D'Armond carries herself as if to the manor born. That disdainful beauty could scarcely find a more perfect counterpart. Miss Rita Gould gives a spirited and able characterization of Lida, the burlesque queen.

The release will be made by V. L. S. E., Inc., Monday, October 18.

"A Model Frame-Up"

A Lively Farce, in Three Reels, Written and Directed by Frank B. Coigne for the Magneto Film Corporation.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"A MODEL FRAME-UP" is a strong reminder of the style of farce that was imported from France in wholesale quantities some twenty years ago, of which "Pink Dominos" and "Jane" are examples. The characterization, incidents and working out of the plot are along the familiar lines of such pieces, except in one particular—"A Model Frame-Up" never suggests the immoral. There is a married man who makes love to four or five different women,—that is indispensable—but his flirtations are without offense, and this applies to all the fun in the play.

An artist marries his model and, fearing he may lose her love, writes to his uncle for advice. He is told to arouse her jealousy by flirting with every woman he meets. His wife fathoms the scheme and, with the help of her entire family, gives the artist every opportunity to follow his instructions. The situations arising from such a motive require deftly conceived stage business, incessant action and the services of a company of actors skilled in the playing of farce. None of these requirements were met in a thoroughly satisfactory manner. In electing to write the scenario, direct the performance and play the leading role, Frank B. Coigne showed commendable zeal, but was not equally successful at all three tasks. The scenario is fairly creditable, and the same may be said of Mr. Coigne's acting, but the directing of the picture leaves much to be desired. Of the supporting company Maggie Weston was the most expert member. She caught the true comic spirit of the play.

"Love's Probation"

Interesting Two-Part Ramona for Release on the Program of the Associated Film Sales Corporation.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

AS ONE of the primary offerings of the Associated Film Sales Corporation, "Love's Probation," a prettily staged, semi-western production, stands well the test of critical observation.

The picture is based on a comedy of the clean, legitimate sort, with just a touch of drama—scarcely enough to claim for it the epithet of comedy-drama—and is enacted by a small but competent cast, the principal roles being played by Gertrude Bondhill and Randolph Gray.

The story at its opening presents two distinct threads, which have been nicely connected at a point midway. A young girl born into the midst of a nonsensical society element craves for a quieter life, and scorns an offer of marriage from an empty-headed baron. On the other hand a young man, also of the city, is ordered west by his doctor as a precautionary method against threatened ill-health. Tiring of solitude as the woman has tired of society life, he advertises for a wife, and later receives a telegram from this particular young woman who has accidentally seen the advertisement, packed her grip, stolen from home and boarded the train for the west, and hastens to the station followed by mischievous cowboy associates.

The best situations of the picture pile one on top of the other after this juncture. The girl having pictured things entirely different from the reality, is loath to back out of her bargain, but is persuaded at last to accompany her future husband to the office of the justice of the peace, where the marriage ceremony is performed.

The disappointment of the girl at the appearance of things in general, on her arrival at the cabin, has in it a touch of pathos as well as comedy; while the repose of the groom on the doorstep, with his saddle for a pillow, is a truly comic incident. The development of the love of the girl for the man is very delicately and prettily handled, and the picture is altogether a very pleasing one. Its release is set for Oct. 4th.

A GENUINE comedy of human nature, exposing one of its many foibles, yet without a harsh note in the exposure, "The Seventh Day" is amusing from start to finish, and it is made very attractive by fascinating Sally Crute. "The light that lies in woman's eyes" fairly sparkles in hers, and her engaging smile has helped materially to carry over duller plays. One cannot feel particularly gloomy while she is in evidence on the screen, so it is to be supposed that she is just dying to play tragedy—they always do when they are born comediennes. Her role in this case is that of nearly every young and pretty shop girl throughout the land. She is romantic, a dreamer of dreams, cherishing a sweet faith that somewhere is that ideal someone she is bound some day to meet. Her aunt sends her a complete and elaborate street costume, and, on The Seventh Day, she sallies forth in search of adventure.

Now it happens that Raymond McKee, in the character of a young clerk of aspirations and mattress-pressed pantaloons, has saved up for a similar adventure, and the two meet the usual way. Their little affectations of wealth and position are delightfully accentuated by clever subtitles, and they part with a sincere though vague idea of meeting again, he strapped, she sighing for the unattainable. Next morning she reaches out of her boarding house window for the milk bottle just as he reaches out of his for the socks he has washed and hung on the shutter, and their eyes meet. They make the best of it in the end with a logical and happy solution of their troubles.

Scene from "The Voice in the Fog" (Lasky).

The adventures of an impecunious lord, the plottings of a gambler and criminal are woven into a very pretty love story, in which Adda Gleason as "Kitty Killigrew" the American heiress figures to decided advantage. The development of the plot gives the Lasky directors a welcome opportunity for charming realism in the settings and for the introduction of those life-like types to which in every Lasky play we look forward as a matter of course. Some of the scenes have been contrived with great originality, notably the fatal ride of the American heiress, the robbery of the Moncton pendant and "the voice in the fog." In the trying moment when a mysterious hand reaches into her cab out of the fog and the darkness of London to steal her pendant the American heiress hears a man's voice and the words of the voice appear in heavy frosting on the window of the cab. The voice never leaves the memory of the heiress and her recognition of it in the midst of a most bewildering situation leads to the denouement and the climax of the play. "The Voice in the Fog" is a feature which gives the exhibitor full value and makes an evening's entertainment for the audience.

Harry Millarde, who produced the three-act Kalem drama, "The Net of Deceit," secured some unusually thrilling scenes for this production through co-operation with General John Foster, of the Florida National Guard. Thanks to General Foster, Millarde was enabled to film a submarine mine explosion, among other unusual scenes.

W. H. Haddock, one of the Gaumont directors of Rialto Star features, has returned with his company, headed by Florenze Tempest and Marion Sunshine, from the Catskill Mountains, where they took exterior scenes for the three-reel drama "Sunshine and Tempest."

New Rolfe-Metro Players

Marie Empress and Edward Brennan to appear in "The Woman Pays."

MARIE EMPRESS, who comes from a long line of theatrical folks and is known on both sides of the Atlantic for her extraordinary versatility, will have a prominent role in the coming Rolfe-Metro feature motion picture, "The Woman Pays," in which Valli Valli will be featured. Her father was one time Lord Mayor of London, was a famous Drury Lane actor, a Freeman of the City of London and prominent in Masonic circles. Her uncle was Edmund Kean, one of the greatest tragedians of all time.

Marie Empress.

Miss Empress is considered one of the leading male impersonators of the English speaking stage, whether in evening clothes or dressed as a ragged urchin. She is a well-known comedienne in London and Paris and is also a dramatic actress of unusual force and power. In addition to this she plays ingenue roles with girlish vivacity, to which is added the attractiveness of her slender and graceful figure.

Mme. Belchere, the mother of Miss Empress, was a famous French actress. Her grandfather was Dr. Belchere, physician to the Rothschilds. In addition to her French and English parentage Miss Empress has some Spanish blood, and her Latin ancestry is very plainly shown, for her beauty is of the striking, dark type. Miss Empress entered her motion picture career with Lew Fields in "Old Dutch." She appeared as the "firefly" with William Elliott in "When We Were Twenty-one," and afterward had a leading part in "The Stubbornness of Geraldine." She has been very successful in motion pictures. Her striking beauty screens splendidly and her histrionic ability and marvelous versatility fits her to interpret almost any part, male or female.

Edward Brennon.

Edward Brennon who, too, has had an interesting and varied career, will be featured along with Marie Empress in "The Woman Pays." He was born in Rochester, N. Y., but his parents moved to Indianapolis when he was a boy, where he studied law under Benjamin Harrison before he was elected President of the United States. At the outbreak of the Spanish-American war he enlisted with General Nelson A. Miles as a member of the 27th Indiana Battery. He practiced law in Indianapolis and in Montana and Washington, winning no little fame as leading counsel in several big murder cases, and with a large criminal practice. He went to the Philippines, where he opened a law office, and while there aided in the settlement of the Friar land question. Brennon was induced to enter the motion picture field a few years ago and he rapidly forged to the front. He possesses unusual ability, both in acting and directing, and has been associated with Director John W. Noble in the direction and production of a number of important recent Rolfe-Metro releases.

"THE QUEEN OF THE BAND" (Reliance).

Unusual novelty marks the Reliance feature "The Queen of the Band," from the pen of Tod Browning and produced by Ray Myers. Usually "crook" photoplays follow along similar lines. This one provides a novelty in the way in which a monster diamond is stolen and recovered.

Two crooks go into a well-known jewelry shop which has just received one of the largest diamonds in the world. They look at lockets. They find one with a large cavity and lay it aside. Then they look at diamonds, among the diamonds being the big stone. A messenger boy enters with a fake telegram and upsets the tray. The diamonds are scattered upon the floor. The crooks aid in the picking up of the stones. When the episode is over the big stone has disappeared. The police at once seize upon the clue of the messenger boy. He has come with a fake message. Therefore, he must have stolen the diamond.

Scene from "Queen of the Band" (Reliance).

Ramar, the celebrated detective, however, holds to an opposite view. He goes to the jewelry shop the day after the robbery. There he meets Zoah, an international criminal. He finds that she has purchased a locket. He examines a similar locket. He ascertains that it contains a cavity large enough for the concealment of the big diamond. He argues that therefore the crooks concealed the diamond in the locket during the hubbub raised through the messenger boy's upsetting of the tray of precious stones.

This hypothesis proves correct and after further thrilling adventures Ramar is able to capture not only Zoah, the chief diamond conspirator, but also the other members of the band.

Adoni Fovieri, who was formerly in Madame Sarah Bernhardt's company in Paris, plays Zoah. Frank Bennett, Gladys Field, Jack McDermott, Phil Gastrock, O. MacDiarmid and Jack Cosgrove are other principals, while George Walsh is Ramar, the detective who solves the mystery.

PATHE NEWS SCORES TWO BIG HITS.

A remarkable example of newspaper enterprise applied to a motion picture news film was shown by the Pathe News last week. The serious subway accident in New York where a whole block of street caved in, burying a trolley car and killing and injuring a large number of persons, happened shortly before 8 o'clock in the morning on Sept. 22. Within a half hour of the accident three cameramen had arrived from the Pathe studio in Jersey City, and within an hour their negatives had been received in the studio where they were developed, projected and cut. By 11:30 they were on their way to Bound Brook to be printed and two hours later fifteen prints were being delivered by a squad of special messengers to theaters in the metropolitan district, where bookings had already been made by telephone. Seven other prints followed within an hour later, so that twenty-two theaters in New York City and Brooklyn were showing on their screens on the afternoon and evening of the day of the accident pictures of the big news story of the day. In one instance, at least, a theater was showing the film at 4:30 P. M. Among the houses who booked this "scoop" were the Strand, Broadway, Proctor, Moss and Brill houses and the Summer and Duffield in Brooklyn.

The New York Tribune voluntarily paid a remarkable tribute to this exhibition of enterprise by featuring a story of the "scoop" in a box at the top of the third page.

Not satisfied with this feat, P. D. Hugon, manager and editor of the Pathe News, put over another one the very next day. The newspapers of Thursday were carrying display stories of Henry Ford and his "jitney" submarine, and his call upon Secretary Daniels at the White House. A Pathe News cameraman caught Mr. Ford at the White House and J. R. Bray, the Pathe cartoonist was summoned and put to work upon an animated cartoon of Mr. Ford and his submarine. The photographing of these pictures was rushed through at high speed and on Friday the pictures were being shown on Broadway. The amount of labor and the speed with which the films were made is shown by the fact that 2,000 pictures had to be photographed for this cartoon.

NEWMAN'S LACQUER.

The Newman Lacquer Company, 3317 Hackberry street,, Cincinnati, Ohio, are putting out a transparent liquid preparation which after it is applied with a brush, on the order of varnish, to brass poster frames, easels, railings, etc., dries and becomes hard within an hour's time after application. The object of this lacquer is to save the necessity of polishing the metal. It is not necessary, as this lacquer preserves the metal in a bright and lasting luster for about six months. After it begins to show a little wear the old lacquer can be easily removed with wood alcohol and the brass can again be polished as before and another coat of lacquer can be applied. This lacquer is especially desired, and is in big demand by theater owners, and especially in theaters where a considerable amount of brass work is in use. This lacquer does not change the color of the brass.

S. J. Newman, who is connected with this firm and who is also secretary and treasurer of the Newman Manufacturing Company, manufacturers of brass lobby frames and theater fixtures, advises that this lacquer is now being used by a great many theaters throughout the country, giving excellent satisfaction. The cost is very nominal. The lacquer comes in half pint, pint, quart and gallon cans. Literature will be mailed upon request.

BIG MINE SET IN "THAT LASS O' LOWRIES."

Robert Leonard, who is directing Helen Ware in "That Lass o' Lowries," recently completed a remarkable set which was used in the picture. The setting was a coal mine scene and two hundred people took part in it. A hoisting derrick was first erected, and then surrounding it six other buildings were put up. Two tons of broken coal were scattered around the shafts and two narrow-gauge railroads were built with coal cars on narrow trucks to fit the rails. Twelve Missouri mules were purchased to drag the cars along.

Scene from "That Lass o' Lowries" (Universal).

Governor Slaton of Georgia, who recently visited Universal City, was amazed at the detail observed in building the setting and posed in several scenes with Helen Ware, Director Leonard and Hobart Bosworth. In one of the scenes Governor Slaton picked up a pick and split several large chunks of coal into bits while the camera clicked away.

"That Lass o' Lowries" will be released on the regular Universal Broadway feature program.

"TAKING A CHANCE" (Cub Comedy).

George George makes his debut with the Cub Comedy company in "A Change of Luck," the Cub Comedy release on the Mutual program for October 8, and in the role of Hank, a character introduced by him, lends able assistance to George Ovey, as Jerry, the featured member of the cast. As a team Ovey and George have succeeded in introducing a succession of funny touches and as a consequence this release is crowded with laughs.

George Ovey is a little fellow and in anatomical construction George George is just the opposite. He is tall, lanky, and of a physique well fitted to do the "Dopey Dan" type which he portrays.

Scene from "Taking a Chance" (Cub).

The story deals with two stranded chums who find themselves in a predicament for future board and lodging. Wandering along the roadway they pass a sign which announces that a reward of $500 is offered for the capture of Wild Ike, a bad man. A happy idea strikes Jerry. He will impersonate Ike, have Hank lead him to the sheriff and collect the reward, then make his getaway and split fifty-fifty. Just then Ike comes along and overhears the plot. He decides it is a good thing and makes Jerry trade clothes. Then Ike marches him off after putting Hank out of the way.

At the sheriff's office Ike is just collecting his reward when Hank, now revived, rushes in, exposes the plot, and with Jerry takes the $500 while Ike is led to a cell.

The picture is directed by Milton Fahrney and in the cast besides Ovey and George are Jefferson Osborne, Louis Fitzroy, Goldie Colwell and Janet Sully.

"PARDONED" (Clipper).

An unusual cast of film favorites carries the action of "Pardoned," the latest Clipper three-reel release. The story is exceptionally strong, and affords every one plenty of screen range to display his ability. Harold Lockwood essays a dual role, playing two distinct characters, each of which is supposed to be the physical counterpart of the other, and it is around this that the story hinges. Eugenie Forde as the chorus girl plays her part wonderfully well, lending exceptional dramatic strength to the action.

Scene from "Pardoned" (Clipper).

"THE HONEYMOON ROLL" (MinA).

"The Honeymoon Roll," the MinA release of October 7, deals with the story of a pair of honeymooners from the "sticks" who come to the city with quite a wad of greenbacks to spend. Through the efforts of a fifth rate actor and a girl known as Slick Fingered Sue they are on the point of losing their honeymoon roll when it is saved for them through the efforts of a friendly bell-hop.

William Seider, who takes the part of the husband, directed the picture in a masterful way. Rena Rogers, who plays the part of the wife, gives him splendid support. Miss Rogers will probably be remembered as a former Universal favorite. Constance Johnson as Slick Fingered Sue and Raymond Russell as the actor, complete the cast of principals.

Scene from "The Honeymoon Roll" (MinA).

ASSOCIATED ACTIVE IN LOS ANGELES.

The Navajo Company, one of the releasing companies on the Associated program is very busy filming a two reel comedy drama of western life entitled "The Bug and the Butterfly." The story deals with the adventures of two easterners out West and tells how one proved able in a big emergency, and the other found the land of heart's desire. The great outdoors and the Far West furnish the background for sterling action and the lives of some very real people, the kind you meet out West every day. William R. Parsons, director of the Navajo brand, is in charge of this production which will shortly be released on the Associated program.

"PROFIT FROM LOSS" (American).

This is a film-story of a compelling theme—true to life—just dramatic enough to be of interest to both the masses and classes. It will be released October 15.

Vivian Rich, the charming "Flying A" ingenue, plays Nellie Carter, the wife of a laboring man (Walter Spencer), amid squalid scenes where life is a battle. With a weakness for liquor, Carter loses his wages in a saloon card game. With the winnings Harmon (Jack Richardson) visits a cafe where, under the influence of his female companion, he gives a poor woman the money. Carter, repentant, returns home to find that his wife was the object of Harmon's forced charity. Rejoicing in their good luck, Carter writes an order to his employer to pay his wages to his wife thereafter.

Scene from "Profit from Loss" (American).

"A GIRL OF YESTERDAY" (Famous Players).

When the Famous Players Film Company's unique comedy-drama, "A Girl of Yesterday," appears on the Paramount program October 7, Mary Pickford's innumerable admirers will have an opportunity to see the world's most popular motion picture star in the thrilling role of companion to the internationally famous aviator, Glenn Martin, in one of his daring aeroplane flights.

Aside from the delightful mixture of quaint humor and romantic thrills, there are many points of novelty and of unusual interest in this remarkable feature. For the first time in her life, Mary Pickford is seen in actual aerial flight, while conversely, Glenn Martin makes his debut as a motion picture actor. "A Girl of Yesterday" is probably the first screen play to contrast all the phases of courtship in a generation gone by with the most modern of romantic auxiliaries—the aeroplane, the palatial steam yacht, the tennis court, the golf course, and other adjuncts considered indispensable to Milady of the Nineteen-fifteen vintage of the Four Hundred. Another unique feature of this production is the fact that, for the first time in their joint screen careers, Mary and Jack Pickford actually appear in their true relationship as sister and brother. Although they have frequently appeared in pictures together, they have never before been cast in their real identities.

Scene from "A Girl of Yesterday" (Famous Players).

Miss Pickford's transition from the meek and obscure girl of yesterday to the undaunted, daring and irresistible girl of today is effected with her customary skill in mastering difficult situations.

The vessel used for the yacht scenes is none other than the million dollar floating palace of John D. Sprecklеs, the celebrated San Francisco multi-millionaire.

"PIPPA PASSES" (Biograph).

Scene from "Pippa Passes" (Biograph).

Six years ago there was released a one reel Biograph production which startled the film world and whose quality was made the subject of numerous newspaper editorials. It at once became the subject of discussion among members of the foremost literary societies of America, who pronounced it a tribute to the masterpiece of Robert Browning. It was the interpretation of the famous "Pippa Passes" by that distinguished author.

Today, six years later, the same production is reissued, and, notwithstanding that considerable advancement and changes have taken place in the motion picture industry, we have a picture which is today and always will be a credit to the producers. Simple in story, yet rich in radiating the warm spirit of Browning's poem, "Pippa Passes," will continue to please more millions of people at this time than it did when it first went into service.

Another remarkable fact about this production is that every player of the cast is either a successful director or a popular star today. The complete cast consists of Arthur Johnson, Marion Leonard, James Kirkwood, Mack Sennett, George Nicholls, Owen Moore, Gertrude Robinson and Billy Quirk.

It is released October 15, on the General program.

"$50 FOR A KISS" (Universal).

Will M. Cressey and his vaudeville partner, Blanche Dayne, make their film debut in the Universal film "$50.00 for a Kiss," a Joker comedy written by Mr. Cressey and produced by Robert Daly, which will be released on October 9. Mr. Cressey was a pioneer in vaudeville when "variety" was being elevated.

Mr. Cressey has played David Harum parts in American vaudeville for years and needs no introduction to readers of the Moving Picture World. As Down-East Yankee and hard-headed Si Hollers Mr. Cressey has made a reputation for himself. He is now the only portrayer on the American stage whose fame warrants him in assuming the mantle of Mr. Thompson. Mr. Cressey writes his own plays. He shows marked originality in his microscopic delineation of a type familiar to Americans the country over. In both his work on the stage and in writing his plays and sketches Mr. Cressey is ably supported by Blanche Dayne, his wife.

Will M. Cressy and Blanche Dayne in "$50 for a Kiss" (Universal).

"$50.00 for a Kiss" tells the story of a New England farmer who is compromised by an enterprising female book agent. The farmer and his daughter get into difficulties with the milk inspector, who finds their product has been watered until it has lost all resemblance to milk. The situations in the play are screamingly ludicrous. Mr. Cressey and Blanche Dayne are ably assisted by Adele Farrington. Mr. Cressey is cast as Silas; Miss Farrington as his wife, and Blanche Dayne as Bettie, the book agent.

"MUTUAL TRAVELER" IS GAUMONT SCENIC.

Who is the "Mutual Traveler?" What is the name of the pretty, dark haired girl who takes a spellbound audience with her to all the garden spots of the United States in the Mutual scenic picture, "Seeing America First"? The clever guide who leads you straight to the ninety thousand dollar dairy on Mrs. George W. Vanderbilt's estate at Asheville, N. C., or douses you with spray at the foot of Niagara Falls and down the wonderful gorge—she refuses to tell you who she is.

Go with her on her trip to Niagara Falls beginning September 28.

The "Mutual Traveler" will have something new to show every week on the Tuesday split-reel Gaumont scenic, "Seeing America First."

"LANDING THE HOSE REEL."

First Installment of "The Chronicles of Bloom Center," a New Comedy Series by Selig.

"The Chronicles of Bloom Center" is the title of a rural comedy series about to be inaugurated by the Selig Polyscope Company. The first of this series will be a Selig Diamond Special in three reels, entitled "Landing the Hose Reel," which will be released in regular service on Thursday, October 14. The eleven photoplays following will each consist of two reels, and will be released every other Monday beginning Monday, October 25.

"The Chronicles of Bloom Center" are inaugurated along an entirely new idea in Filmland. The environment and the majority of the characters in each one of these twelve comedies are the same. However, each plot is complete in itself. Thus it will be seen that although there is a connection between each of the releases by reason of the adventures of the same characters and which it is believed will hold the interest, yet each is a separate and distinct plot.

Scene from "Landing the Hose Reel" (Selig).

"The Chronicles of Bloom Center" were written by Maibelle Heikes Justice and William Lord Wright, and feature such comedy stars as Sidney Smith, Ralph McComas, William Hutchison, Lyllian Brown Leighton, Lee Morris, John Lancaster and others. The names of the characters which disport themselves through the series of "The Chronicles of Bloom Center" include Margaret Tate, the editress of the Bloom Center "Weekly Bugle"; Johnny West, the rural reporter; Chubby Green, a bad boy; Constable Plum and his militant wife; Miss Selina Tubbs, a maiden of uncertain years; Ira Pash, proprietor of the general store; Phil Pickle, the Bloom Center druggist, and others.

Frederick Warren, the New York millionaire, has a warm spot in his heart for Bloom Center, the little village where he was born and raised. He frequently donates funds for Bloom Center's public enterprises. The Ladies' Art Embroidery Club holds a meeting in Melodeon Hall to discuss the need of a new hose reel for the Bloom Center fire department, and it is resolved to write Warren for money with which to purchase the apparatus.

Warren replies that he will donate half the funds if the inhabitants of Bloom Center raise the other half, and he sends his daughter, Amy, from New York to Bloom Center to see if the Bloom Centerites appreciate his liberality. Among the methods devised to raise the necessary sum is a tax on whiskers, a lawn fete, etc. During the course of proceedings, Constable Plum plots to hold up auto speeders and gain the much needed money for the fire department.

Amy, after participating in many of the comical endeavors to raise the money, writes to her father that it cannot be done, and Warren sends a check for the necessary amount. When the hose-reel is purchased Warren arrives and introduces Amy as his daughter, much to the consternation of the Bloom Centerites.

A trial-run of the hose reel is decided upon by Fire Chief Pash. Chubby Green starts many false alarms, which are reported in good faith by Constable Plum. Finally, when Constable Plum really finds Pash's home burning and reports, that functionary chides Plum for trying to pull a childish joke. The Fire Chief refuses to budge. However, when Pash goes home, resplendent in helmet and boots, he is astounded to find that his dwelling is a smoldering mass of ruins.

It is confidently stated by the Selig Company that "The Chronicles of Bloom Center" will inaugurate an entirely new style in screen comedy. It will be remembered that the Selig Company inaugurated and set the pace with another great serial, "The Adventures of Kathlyn." The progress of "The Chronicles of Bloom Center" will be watched with intense interest.

Maurice Costello and Leah Baird are at work on "A Question of Right or Wrong," a feature picture being produced by the Vitagraph company, under the direction of Van Dyke Brooke.

"DIVORCED" (Equitable).

Featuring Hilda Spong as the star of Edwin Archer's heart-stirring play, the Equitable program has made a noteworthy addition to its list of film surprises in "Divorced," a five-part society drama, in which Lester Chambers, Charles Hutchinson and Fred Eric have prominent and effectively handled parts. The play is an illustration of the results following the yielding by a husband to the attractions of stage sirens. A marriage is broken up by the husband's elopement, the wife secures a divorce from her husband and lives on an income provided by him. This is insufficient to carry the son through college, and the wife is aided by a rich society man who, using the aid given and the promise of marriage as soon as he can obtain a divorce as inducements prevails on the wife to live with him, the son growing up in ignorance of the source of the addition to his mother's income. When the society man's wife dies the projected marriage is put off, and the dramatic incidents which follow the learning by the son of the relations between his mother and the man who has been his benefactor, and the conditions under which his education was obtained, lead up to a startling climax.

The mother is tried for murder, and although a maid testifies that she heard the son say to his mother, "You have killed him," a jury frees her on the ground of temporary insanity, holding that the man she killed was the cause of her losing her reason for the time being. There is a pretty thread of love running through the story, as the girl with whom the son is in love sticks to him through all the revelations and in the end the mother and son are reunited, with the son winning the girl he loves.

In the production of this play Director Golden made a new record in picturization, as the scene of the wedding of Leonore Fenwick and Ralph Manson is the first ever taken in a sure enough church. It was decided to break away from the stock church set of the studios, and after considerable argument the authorities in control of one of the best known Presbyterian churches in the Bronx gave permission for the use of their place of worship for the wedding scene. The Edison Electric Light and Power Company received the lighting contract, for in spite of the broad window expanse and the bright sunlight flooding the church there was need of a battery of electric reflectors, and the floor and pews were a litter of wires, transformers and other paraphernalia. The sexton of the church was on hand to see that no damage was caused, the regular organist was in his place, and a new chapter of film history was made when the strains of the wedding march from "Lohengrin" announced that the bridal couple and their attendants had begun their march up the aisle to the altar. The floral decorations were lavish in the extreme, and after a few flowers had been taken as souvenirs by the guests at the wedding the mass of blooms remaining fell into the loving care of the children of the neighborhood.

Scene from "Divorced" (Equitable).

"Divorced" is scheduled for release on October 25 on the Equitable program through the World Film exchange.

BEN WILSON BUILDS HIMSELF A HOUSE.

Ben Wilson, the Universal east coast star, has built a house at Leonia, N. J. It is a pretty two-story cottage on a hillside among a grove of trees, and is not far from the new Universal studios at Coytesville, N. J. The house was designed by Mr. Wilson himself, with the assistance of his wife, and was completed in just nine months. All the players in Mr. Wilson's company assisted at the laying of the cornerstone, which, contrary to the usual custom, was not put into the foundation of the house until the building was finished.

On the second floor of the house Mr. Wilson has made provisions for installing a projection machine in which "takes" made during the day can be shown the same evening after being developed in the laboratory at the rear of the house. A strong safe has been built into the basement walls and in this safe Mr. Wilson will keep prints of releases in which he appears, so that lineal descendants in after years can see how papa looked when he was playing in big Universal features.

"HIS LORDSHIP'S DILEMMA" (Gaumont-Casino).

This is the second Casino Star Comedy release in which W. C. Fields, star of Ziegfeld Follies, takes the lead. Fields, a bogus lord, receives notice that his days of ease and luxury are numbered. He and his faithful valet part company, but meet later, one carrying a sign advertising a restaurant, the other a sign advertising indigestion tablets. Fields has been paid a dollar of his wages in advance, so invites his valet to have a drink. In the cafe, by clever team work, they obtain a good supply of free lunch, cigars, drinks and even get back the dollar bill with which Fields paid for the drinks. With this supply, they go to a park to eat their lunch. Fields reads in a paper about a lord winning an heiress by his wonderful golfing. Moving to a sunny spot situated by a lake, Fields falls asleep. He dreams he wins an heiress by his clever work with his golf sticks and arriving at the girl's home to ask for father's consent to their marriage, is just in time to save father and his family from a bomb planted by blackhanders. This clinches the deal as far as father is concerned, and as he embraces the new sweetheart, he awakens with a start to find his arms around his valet. Indignant at the latter's boisterous laughter, Fields pushes him in the lake. As nothing but bubbles appear on the surface of the water, Fields walks away to fight life's battles alone.

Scene from "His Lordship's Dilemma" (Gaumont).

"THE MAN OF SHAME" FILMED IN QUEBEC.

Many of the scenes in "The Man of Shame," the Broadway Universal Feature in which Wilton Lackaye is starred with Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby in support, were taken in Quebec, Canada. Frank Beresford, technical director of the Universal, spent eight weeks in Quebec about two years ago with the Kalem company when they produced "The Conquest of Quebec," and after reading the scenario of "The Man of Shame," which is adapted from Jules Mary's French play, "Roger La Honte," Mr. Beresford at once suggested that the Lackaye company go to the old French city.

Scene from "The Man of Shame" (Universal).

Some difficulty was experienced in New York in securing French costumes for men and women of the 1780 period. At the Canadian border Mr. Lackaye and party were held up by the customs authorities, who at first refused to permit them to enter Canada, as a trunk full of guns was included in their baggage.

Champlain street in Quebec was used as a background in staging the play, as many of the lower city streets are the same to-day as they were in the middle of the eighteenth century. Champlain street ends in a boardwalk headed by "Breakneck Steps," where Mr. Lackaye, on horseback, did a big "stunt" for the picture. The "bank" scenes were taken on St. Joseph street, which boasts that not a single sign in English is to be seen in its length.

HIGHEST AWARDS TO WURLITZER.

The Board of Awards at the Panama-Pacific Exposition has recently confirmed the award of two grand prizes and two gold medals to the Rudolph Wurlitzer Company upon the Wurlitzer piano, the Wurlitzer player piano, the Wurlitzer unit orchestra, and the Wurlitzer harp. Wurlitzer instruments received these honors in competition with musical instruments of all other makes, which seems conclusive proof that Wurlitzer instruments do excel.

In pianos and player pianos, the Wurlitzer stores present a variety which is conceded to be the greatest and most representative in this country, there being in one of their stores alone fourteen famous makes of instruments, representing over one hundred different styles. The great Wurlitzer factories at Wurlitzer Station, North Tonawanda, N. Y., occupy a tract of 60 acres and its annual shipments are tremendous. The Rudolph Wurlitzer Company is the world's largest general music house. Rudolph Wurlitzer, Sr., came over to this country from Germany in 1853. He is descended from a long line of distinguished musical instrument manufacturers in the musical centers of Europe. In the year 1856 he founded the Wurlitzer business. It has grown steadily and without interruption until today there are Wurlitzer warerooms in twenty-four large cities.

BLOODED STOCK IN "BLUE GRASS."

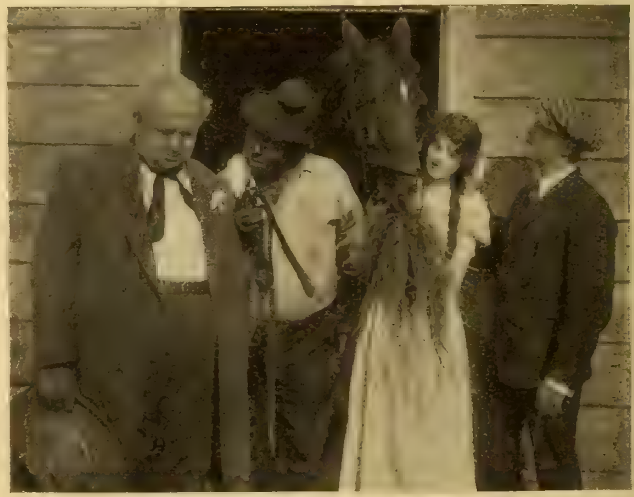
Charles Seay, who is responsible for the production of "Blue Grass," which will be released on the Equitable Program October 10, assembled what he terms the most valuable collection of racing stock ever used in a motion picture production.

Fifty-two horses, all thoroughbreds and prominent figures during the past racing season at Saratoga, Belmont Park and Pimlico, took part in the big racing scene which is one of the potent scenes in the famous Paul Armstrong play.



Scene from "Blue Grass" (Equitable.)

Mr. Seay and Mr. Wise, who played the principal role, were living at the United States Hotel, Saratoga Springs, during the last racing meet. The hopes of Seay to be able to stage his racing scene were materialized when Wise, one day, chanced to meet a former friend, who owned a stable. This friend secured permits from the Jockey Club, prevailed upon the various owners to participate in the scene and then induced the foremost jockies at the meet to ride, with the result that a very formidable scene was procured. However, the real sporting element entered into the race, and Seay had a hard time getting Blue Grass to win. Blue Grass, the title-bearer throughout the story, was a former race horse, but had seen its very best days. When stacked up against some of the present-day record-breakers it had a hard time carrying out its part of the program, to win. However, after several starts, Blue Grass came down the stretch a winner and the scene was O. K.'d.

Thomas A. Wise, who appeared in "A Gentleman From Mississippi" for World Film, plays the principal role in "Blue Grass," many scenes of which were staged at Saratoga Springs, Henderson, Kentucky and at Richmond, Virginia. The intent was to secure as perfect a Southern atmosphere as possible, and that Seay succeeded, goes without saying to those who have already seen the production. It is a truly Southern story with a diversity of themes.

"THE OUTER EDGE" (Essanay).

Scene from "The Outer Edge" (Essanay).

"The Outer Edge" is a strong emotional drama and is peculiarly adapted to the temperaments of Henry B. Walthall and Warda Howard, who play the leads. Both are at their best in plays calling for the portrayal of intense feeling and this three-act drama, written by the well-known magazine writer and novelist, Henry Oyen, draws almost entirely upon the inner emotions, although there is plenty of action in it. The story is that of a physician who is dragged down to the depths by the drug habit, losing position and wealth. After pawning every available possession except a revolver to satisfy his craving for the drug, he returns to his cheap lodging house to end his life. Half stupefied, he gets into the wrong room, where he finds a woman and her daughter nearly starved. He takes his revolver and pawns it to buy them food. His own act of kindness gives him a new view of life and he struggles to break his habit. Mr. Walthall brings out with intense realism all the agonies of the victim suffering from the lack of drug. Many times he nearly falls again, but is aided by a nurse whom he had known years before. Finally he succeeds in throwing off the yoke altogether and wins back to manhood and the love of a woman.

"JOHN GLAYDE'S HONOR" (Pathe).

Scene from "John Glayde's Honor" (Pathe).

"John Glayde's Honor" is the name of the first five-reel feature contributed by the Frohman Amusement Corporation to the Pathe Gold Rooster Program. It has been picturized from the play by Alfred Sutro, the famous modern playwright, and was used in 1913 in this country as a vehicle for our own James K. Hackett.

The Frohman Amusement Corporation have cast this play splendidly, C. Aubrey Smith, Mary Lawton and Richard Hatteras fitting into their parts unusually well. The photography is beyond criticism, and the interior sets remarkable for their good taste and harmonious fitness.

The play deals with the story of one John Glayde, "Master of Men," and how, in his mad strife for power he loses forever the love of a woman without which his conquests are empty. After pleading in vain for a return of the affection she so lavishly bestows on him, Muriel, the wife, accepts the invitation of friends, and goes to Paris for a visit. There she meets Trevor Lerode, an artist, who, struck with her beauty, begs a sitting. The intimacy of the studio leads to Lerode's falling in love with Muriel, much to his mother, Lady Lerode's dismay. But Muriel, starved for what young Lerode has so plentifully to give, finds her will powerless in the grip of an overwhelming passion. Lady Lerode cables John Glayde, who, suddenly realizing his peril, drops everything and rushes off to Paris, where he tells young Lerode that his visits to Mrs. Glayde must cease. But things have gone too far, and the next night Muriel and Lerode run off to a country lodge, where they are followed by Glayde. In a tremendously dramatic scene Glayde is about to put an end to Lerode, when Muriel steps between and, addressing her masterful husband, says: "It is not love, but pride in John Glayde's honor, that makes you wish to kill!" This line is the keynote of the whole play, and, as the years go on, the full realization of it comes upon the "master of men," to make a dross of his gold, and of his power a mockery. It is inspired drama, worked out to its logical, bitter conclusion with a fearlessness that cannot but have a deep effect on those who view it.

Released as a Gold Rooster play Friday, Oct. 15th.

An Eleventh Story Show

Pittsburgh Department Store Closes Its Picture Show—Local Exhibitors' League Made Remonstrances to City Authorities—Demanded Impartial Administering of the Law and the Eleventh Story Theater Could Not Be Continued.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

THE fact that moving pictures are being depicted in department stores has been a subject of much discussion in the film circles lately. One store in particular, advertising moving picture shows on "the eleventh floor" was openly defying the law as applied to moving picture exhibitions.

Although the matter has been discussed at various meetings of the Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania, no action had been taken definitely until last week, when a committee, consisting of James Delves, G. W. Sahner and Ira Aronson, appointed by the Exhibitors' League, called upon Charles S. Hubbard of the Pittsburgh Department of Public Safety, who promised to take the matter up with the building inspector.

In last Saturday's papers the department stores had big advertisements stating that motion pictures would be discontinued. "Everybody is smiling."

FOR NOT SHOWING CENSORSHIP SEALS.

Joseph A. Berrier, chief clerk of the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors, after visiting the moving picture houses in Erie, Pa., last week, left for Harrisburg, to make his report. It was said that several Erie moving picture owners were in danger of arrest for not showing the seal of the Board of Censors on films exhibited.

Harry Jack, proprietor of the Victoria theater, said that Mr. Berrier had visited his place to remind him of the ruling of the board. This is being complied with, Mr. Jack says. However, the fault of not having the seals on the films, according to Mr. Jack, lies chiefly with the film company which sends the films into the state.

There have been reports out recently to the contrary and this firm wishes to deny them.

JAMES FARR BACK WITH WEILAND FILM CO.

SMOKY CITY GOSSIP.

Charles Bennett, an old-time showman who has conducted several picture theaters in Pittsburgh as long as twelve years ago, is conducting the "Trip to Joyland" at the Exposition and reports very good business. Mr. Bennett says he still has a hankering for the motion picture business and that we will probably get back in harness soon again.

The Grand theater, Center street, Natrona, Pa., which has been closed during the summer months, reopened recently. Pictures equal to those which have made this playhouse famous will be shown at each performance during the season.

"Europe in Arms" is the latest European war film added to the list of subjects controlled by the Weiland Film Company at 115 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh.

The Bijou Dream, a handsome moving picture theater of 300 seats, the first to be erected in the East Liberty section of Pittsburgh, has been sold by David Mintz to a party of eastern capitalists. This house was built by Harry Davis eight years ago. The purchasers have also acquired possession of the two buildings adjoining, one on either side, and it is rumored that a large theater is to occupy the site.

Henry Tennyson, owner of the Pastime, in Langlow, Pa., recently opened that house to the public. This house seats 205 people with standing room for 100.

A STRAND AT DOYLESTOWN.

Picture Men of Trenton, N. J., Have Leased the Kolbe Hall and Will Show Pictures.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

NEGOTIATIONS were recently completed whereby Doylestown will have a modern moving picture theater in the near future. A lease was negotiated for a long term of years between Otto Kolbe, of Doylestown, and Hildinger & Papier, the well known moving picture men of Trenton, N. J., who control a chain of motion picture theaters scattered throughout the states of New Jersey and Pennsylvania. The hall obtained from Kolbe will undergo a complete change and nearly $7,000 will be spent for improvements. The entire floor will be raised in order that each patron of the theater will have a clear view of the stage and screen and 600 handsome mahogany opera arm chairs will be installed. A new gold fibre screen will be installed and several Powers 6A motor-driven machines have been purchased, ready for installation.

The theater will be renamed the "Strand" after the big Broadway theater bearing that name. The resident manager of the house will be Elmer T. Atkinson, assisted by the proprietors, Charles Hildinger and Philip Papier, who will lend their personal supervision in endeavoring to insure the success of their latest venture. Mr. Atkinson has had a wide experience in the moving picture industry both in New York and Philadelphia and should prove a most competent director. The opening night of the theater is booked for Oct. 11 and the house will be closed in the meantime in order that the decorators and carpenters can arrange for the beautifying and altering of the interior.

CHARLES SKINNER, CHESTER EXHIBITOR, DROWNS.

Charles Skinner, of Chester, Pa., and who recently leased the Garrick, which he had intended to open in the near future with feature moving picture plays, fell out of a window while working about the building and landed in the Chester River. Skinner, who was unable to swim, made frantic efforts to reach the shore, but succumbed before help could reach him. The Garrick, which is sometimes known as the Family theater, is situated at the northern end of the 7th street bridge and directly overlooks the river. Several employes saw Skinner drop to the water, but were unable to reach him in time to be of any assistance.

MILDRED HIZERLING, LUBIN PLAYER, DIES.

The death of Miss Mildred Hizerling, 22 years of age, and a well known moving picture actress working for the Lubin Company, whose body, clothed only in a skirt and waist, was found on the floor of a bathroom at 284 South Massachusetts Ave., Atlantic City, recently, for a time mystified the police. The bathroom door was locked and a slightly leaky gas heater seemed to explain the death, but it was decided to hold an autopsy. Coroner Brew, after completing his investigation, announced that the girl died from heart failure. Her sister claimed the body.

PHILADELPHIA SHORTER NOTES

Joseph Langman, real estate broker, 721 Walnut street, has leased for the German Realty Company the American theater, Franklin street and Girard avenue, formerly known as the German theater, to the Imperial Amusement Company for a number of years. The house will be devoted to the production of first-class vaudeville and moving picture plays.

The Morris Amusement Company is having plans prepared by M. H. Dickenson, of Philadelphia, for an amusement building to be erected at Chelsea, N. J. The building is to be of brick and concrete construction, one story in height, and will cover a plot of ground 125 by 150 feet.

A Progressive Exhibitor

A Kansas City Picture Man, John Hiatt, Manager of the Gladstone Theater, Shows Broad Interest in Amusement Problems of Community—Modern Needs Educating Exhibitors for Important Position in Civic Life.

Special to Moving Picture World, from Kansas City News Service.

JOHN HIATT, owner and manager of the Gladstone theater, Kansas City's most attractive moving picture house, has again come to the rescue of the boys. He has for sometime been interested in the welfare of the boys in his neighborhood and has been active against the invasion of the saloons and pool halls in that locality. He lately purchased basket ball suits for a boys' team and put them to work practicing for their games for the winter. He purchased the baseball uniforms for them during the summer and the team did remarkably well playing the other amateur teams. Mr. Hiatt was very proud when he announced that they had won the majority of their games.

John Hiatt is another exhibitor who realizes that his occupation, as furnisher of wholesome amusement to his community, doesn't necessarily end with the projecting of his program on the screen. His is one of those happy men whose brains are big enough to anticpate the future. The three great human needs of young folks are religion, schooling and amusement, and it is probably true that the scientific providing for these three needs is of more pressing importance than any other social problem before us. It is still for the future to decide what part the community picture show is to have in the work. Exhibitors like John Hiatt are anticipating the future and preparing for it. Their value as pathfinders is by no means small.

EMMETT SCANLON, NEW FIRE WARDEN.

A change was made in the office of fire warden of Kansas City the past week, J. E. Marvin, who had held the office for six years, being retired. His successor is Emmett Scanlon, for the past year assistant to Mr. Marvin. One subject which may receive larger attention now is the fire condition of the picture shows, especially the custom allowed in some of them of overcrowding. It is pleasant enough to realize that patronage is so large, but there are growing complaints, now that the dramatic productions have begun for the season, that picture shows should not be given more license than the other theaters. Mr. Scanlon has paid special attention to investigations of mysterious fires in the past year, but he is entering the office with the purpose of studying every phase of his duties, and it is likely that the picture shows will receive considerable attention.

AT KANSAS CITY THEATERS.

The Wonderland theater, owned by the Rich-Lynn Amusement Company had to close early on Wednesday night, September 22, owing to the fact that an electric light conduit which is laid underground, became short-circuited and the wires burned and the theater and the entire block was without electric light from eight-thirty until morning. The theater was crowded at the time that the lights went out and the machine stopped and many disappointed patrons were turned into the streets.

The Earl theater, at Twelfth and Brooklyn, recently opened after remaining closed all summer. Earl Alexander, a vaudeville performer and a singer of quite some note in the early days of the moving picture business here when illustrated song first made their appearance, owns and operates the theater.

O. P. Rose, manager of the Warwick theater, says that the business at his show has been increasing nicely and that the patrons are still coming to show in their automobiles and in the taxi cabs. This is the sort of trade that Mr. Rose is catering to and working hard to increase. His program consists mainly of features and he is meeting with a big success.

The Royal theater has nearly completed its remodeling and the public is anxious to visit his new mezzanine floor. The men gather in the smoking room every evening and continue to discuss business while their wives watch the pictures and the children are at play in the childrens' room. Mr. Newman is providing every facility for the entertainment of his patrons and the patronage is constantly growing as a result of his efforts.

CHAPLIN VERY POPULAR.

The Charlie Chaplin comedies are running away with the houses in Kansas City. The public lines up and fills every house in the downtown section every day that a Charlie Chaplin banner is displayed. His popularity as a comedian is not only among the younger patrons, but among the adults as well. The more select houses, however, are not showing the comedy pictures of Chaplin or any other comedian. Features have been going well with the people of Kansas City and the serials that are still running here are meeting with only fair success.

KANSAS CITY EXCHANGE NOTES.

C. S. Edwards, Jr., manager of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., says that the business in his territory has been very good indeed during the past month and that the business is now increasing very nicely. The picture shows in the small towns are opening up and the airdomes are closing down. The fact is that there were more moving picture theaters closed for the summer than there were airdomes opened and in the winter season there will be a great many moving picture theaters opened.

"Marty" Williams, formerly manager of the Mutual Film Corporation is now sitting in the manager's chair of the Metro Picture Service, Inc., and declares that he is well satisfied with the exchange and the business that his new office is doing.

F. L. Kiltz, has a particularly difficult position at present, but, is not himself calling for aid. He left the United Film Service to become manager of the Mutual Film Corporation when Mr. Williams leaped from that office to the managership of the Metro. This left the United Film Service without a manager and so it has continued to be operated under the direction of Mr. Kiltz.

Simon Libros, manager of the Picture Playhoues Film Company, recently was changed to the St. Louis office and Mr Bettis, a road man for the company was placed in Mr. Libros chair at Kansas City. Mr. Bettis says that the business has been doing nicely since he took charge.

KANSAS CITY EXCHANGES ARE GROWING.

According to nearly all the moving picture exchange managers the business has been picking up in Kansas City and the territory for them and they are now doing nearly as large a business as their competitive offices are in other sections of the country. Several new shows are being erected and the older houses claim that their patronage is nearly doubling itself for the month of September. The men out on the road for the exchanges report that the business has been picking up nicely and this is to be one of the largest winters for the moving picture exhibitors. The prosperity of the Southwest is responsible for a large portion of this increase and it seems that there will be no end to it.

South Carolina Censors

Some Recent Features Denounced by Church People in South Carolina—Member of State General Assembly Intends to Present a Censorship Bill—Religious Society Has Prepared a Set of Resolutions on the Matter.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

MOTION picture exhibitors of South Carolina are facing the worries of censorship legislation, for W. R. Bradford, of the York County delegation in the General Assembly, is quoted as declaring it to be his present intention of introducing a bill at the next session for the control of motion pictures. It is said that he has been gathering information as to the necessity, methods and the practicability of such censorship for some time and that he is hopeful of being able to present some pertinent suggestions to the legislature when it convenes.

In Columbia during the past few weeks there has been considerable censorship discussion brought about by the showing of two feature films that have been exhibited widely throughout the country, but which have not met with the full approbation of certain classes here. Recently a number of prominent women of the city have actively shown their interest in a movement for restricting exhibitions and public attention has been centered on this movement by the showing of one well-known feature, in which there appears a nude woman, at one of the theaters after adverse reports had been made by two unofficial committees of censorship, one composed of women, the other of men, chosen by the management of the house.

It is said that the management of the theatre in question had agreed not to show this picture after its exhibition had been condemned by the two committees, but that they gave a sort of a private exhibition after eleven o'clock in the evening for which, however, an admission charge of twenty-five cents was made.

The Christian Endeavor Societies are getting into the movement and resolutions were presented at a meeting of each of these recently, of which a part reads as follows:

"Be it resolved, By the Christian Endeavor Societies of the Christian Church, the Woodrow Memorial Church, Trinity Church and the First Presbyterian Church:

"Third. That, although recognizing that Columbia has three of the most splendidly equipped and ably directed theaters to be found anywhere in the South and wishing that what we say may be taken only in a spirit of friendly criticism, we believe that due to a tendency that is more nationwide than local, the pictures that are being shown here have been growing steadily worse in moral tone and less and less in keping with the standard of refinement that should prevail in all places of public amusement in this city."

Mayor Griffith has stated that he is of the opinion that there is need in Columbia of assurance to the people that the films shown at the theaters are clean and contain nothing detrimental to the morals, especially of the younger people.

General Assemblyman Bradford expressed the opinion that parents indulge in a false security when they rely on the legend "Passed by the National Board of Censorship."

WILMINGTON'S ROYAL OPENED.

Although some little delay was encountered in obtaining some of the fixtures and the new Seeburg motion picture orchestra organ has not as yet been received, the new Royal theater, owned by Howard & Wells, was opened in Wilmington. The house has done a good business from the start and this more than makes up for the disappointment over the non-arrival of the organ. Other music has been arranged for until this can be installed.

The building is located on North Front street, opposite the postoffice. It was erected at a cost estimated to have exceeded $60,000 and is modern in every particular. The auditorium has a seating capacity of 600, while 300 people additional can be accommodated in the balcony. Two Powers 6-B machines project the picture on a mirror screen. An automatic ticket vending machine has been installed.

NORTH CAROLINA ITEMS.

The Princess theater, in Asheville, has reduced its admission charge from ten cents to five cents. This house operates on a program service.

Motion picture exhibitors of this state are expressing their pleasure at having Henry E. Friedman again traveling among them in the interests of the World Film Corporation. Mr. Friedman was recently recalled to accept the position of manager of the branch exchange in Washington, D. C. He states that he prefers the road far better than the office work and is himself glad of the opportunity to get back to his old territory.

Col. R. J. Allen, who will this week open the New Superba theater in Raleigh, spent several days in Washington arranging for feature service for that house. The New Superba will have a seating capacity of about five hundred.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" IN NORFOLK, VIRGINIA.

After Hearing Protests Mayor Mayo Let Film Be Shown.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WHEN the big spectacle was advertised there was introduced into the Common Council an ordinance forbidding the production of any picture that tended to "incite race prejudice, race hatred, or race riot." There were many who appeared before the Council speaking for and against the enactment of the ordinance, which was finally passed by a vote of seven to four. The measure then went to the Board of Aldermen, and further argument ensued. By a vote of six to five the ordinance was referred to the ordinance committee of the Board of Aldermen for its recommendation. It had also been put up to Mayor Mayo to stop the production of "The Birth of a Nation," but after considering the matter he decided that he was without the power so to do.

As a result of the agitation against the film in both the Common Council and the Board of Aldermen there was a long line of people at the box office at the Colonial theater when the seat sale for this much-discussed production was opened. It is planned to show it during the entire week. Otto Wells is the manager of the Wells' interests here.

NORFOLK TO HAVE ANOTHER PICTURE HOUSE.

Norfolk, it is reported, is soon to have another motion picture theater. The old Nash homestead, on the east side of Granby street, between Freemason and Charlotte streets, long one of the city's landmarks. The theater is to be erected by T. T. Spratley. In view of the fact that the plans are rapidly nearing completion it is generally expected that the work incident to carrying them out will be begun within a month or two.

BALTIMORE BEAUTY CONTEST.

Baltimore, Md.—Berman's Photo Play theater, of 913 East Baltimore street, is operating a beauty contest open to the girls of East Baltimore. The contestants must be between the ages of sixteen and twenty-five. Prizes are to be awarded to the three girls polling the highest number of votes.

WASHINGTON, D. C., TO BE A V-L-S-E CENTER.

Manager Spurrier Opens Office to Book in District of Columbia, Maryland, Virginia and North Carolina.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

JUST as soon as all of the fixtures can be installed at 811 E street, Northwest, the V-L-S-E company will have one of the finest sets of offices in the city. The telephone was installed early last week and, according to the new Washington branch manager, Frank B. Spurrier, the bell has been ringing ever since.

Frank B. Spurrier.

Frank B. Spurrier needs but little introduction for he has been traveling around and visiting the exhibitors of the territory in which he will continue his efforts for a year or more.

ANDERSON PLEASED WITH DEPOSIT FOR FEATURES POLICY.

The new policy of the Fox Film corporation is working out wonderfully well, according to Lieut. Jim P. Anderson, the local manager. "We have not had a single bad check since it was inaugurated," he remarked, "nor have we encountered a single case of an exhibitor refusing to take our service on account of the four weeks' cancellation deposit required. It has been our experience, on the other hand, that men who had previously been against the feature business, because of wild-cat bookings, now state that since they have adopted one or two days each week for the showing of features and with the regularity of their advertising and the quality of the pictures, they are finding that the features are bringing in greatly increased box office receipts over program days.

EXHIBITOR STEIN PRAISED BY McCLURE'S.

The October issue of McClure's Magazine, in an article based on the motion picture industry, pays tribute to Manager Stein, of the Masonic Auditorium, when it says: "In the Masonic Temple, Washington, there is a moving picture theater which presents the best films obtainable Night after night it is surrounded by motor cars belonging to those who would patronize the drama—if it still attracted them." From its inception this theater has enjoyed the highest class of patronage. It is unique in that it is somewhat off of the beaten track for its location at Thirteenth street and New York avenue is not one where large numbers of pedestrians congregate after the usual business hours. Nor is it in a residential section. Mr. Stein must, therefore, draw from all parts of the city and in this he is successful from the general management of his theater. Everything pertaining to the house is first class in every way. He is very particular about the class of films he exhibits and the music of his orchestra is a source of delight to his patrons.

JAKE WELLS VISITS CAPITAL.

Jake Wells, who controls theaters in various points throughout the South, was a visitor in Washington last week. Mr. Wells, it is stated, reported exceptionally good business at this time in the picture end of his business and that he is contemplating taking the best of his theaters in each place and converting them into feature houses, showing high-grade productions. This change would effect a large number of theaters now handling road shows and vaudeville. Mr. Wells has holding in Richmond and Norfolk, Va.; Macon, Savannah and Augusta, Ga.; Birmingham and Montgomery, Ala.; Chattanooga, Tenn., and a number of other points in this territory.

HUGH BIERMAN SHOWS NERVE.

Mutual Exchange Employe's Quickness Averts Fire.

Hugh Bierman, of the Washington, D. C., branch of the Mutual Film corporation, is being congratulated by his superiors for bravery and presence of mind. One of the girls working in the film room had been instructed to wind a reel quickly. The friction caused by the rubbing of the film against the rough board on the table heated the celluoid and it started to smoke and then to burn rapidly. Other films near were in danger of catching fire. Bierman grabbed the burning reel, and threw it out on the adjacent tin roof. The management have taken steps to prevent further accidents.

C. W. BUNN OF WORLD FILM, HERE.

C. W. Bunn, who for the past six months has been attached to the Boston office of the World Film corporation as salesman, is reported as being in Washington preparing to assume the management of the local branch office of that company. It is said that Mr. Bunn was remarkably successful in the New England territory by reason of his close co-operation with exhibitors there, and in applying distinctly novel sales methods which worked to the advantage of both his company and its customers.

"SEE AMERICA FIRST" FILM FOR INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

H. T. Cowling, photographer of the United States Reclamation Service, has just returned to Washington from a four months' tour of the national parks of the country. During his travels, Mr. Cowling made between 30,000 and 40,000 feet of motion picture film for use of the Interior Department in its "See America First" campaign. At the same time Mr. Cowling took many still pictures of the parks to bring to the attention of the American public the beauties and grandeur of American scenery. Among the films he made was a number of feet showing Secretary Lane, of the Department of the Interior, participating in the ceremonies incident to the opening of the new Rocky Mountain National Park. Among the places which he visited were the Yellowstone National Park, Yosemite Valley, Glacier, Crater Lake and Mt. Rainier parks.

NOVEL LOBBY DISPLAY.

J. B. Dexter is producing some very attractive lobby displays with the use of ordinary posters. These are mounted on heavy board and are retouched in oils. This treatment gives them the appearance of genuine oil paintings of a much greater value and the fact that they are not such is not noticeable until one gets within very close range. The method used in producing these is particularly effective when the poster is a picture of some well known actor or actress. They can be framed and displayed on an easel.

An Annoying Ordinance

Cincinnati Exhibitors Are Confronted with City Requirement—May Be Compelled to Hire Stage Hand to Do Nothing—Labor Organizations Probably Behind the "Demand"—Would Make a Job in Every Picture House.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A CINCINNATI ordinance requiring all moving picture theaters to employ a "stage hand" for the purpose, according to its backers, of assisting in preventing fires, is the latest proposal of interests which seem to consist principally of labor organizations. These contend that in ordinary theaters stage hands are required not only to handle the scenery and settings, but to be around in case of fire.

The view of the exhibitors, who are making an energetic fight on the ordinance as entirely useless and burdensome, was emphatically expressed before the council committee by Attorney John Weinig, who is himself interested in a large house. Pointing out that the services of stage hands in ordinary theaters, whether for actual labor or for assistance in fire prevention, were called for by the existence of flimsy scenery, he declared: "The moving picture theater has no scenery. Most houses of this sort have been constructed in strict compliance with the building code, which makes fires on their stages an impossibility. If this ordinance is passed we will be compelled to hire a man to watch and handle scenery that does not exist and to guard against fires that cannot occur. We will simply have to pay a man for doing nothing."

Others—speaking for the exhibitors—indorsed this view, and several owners declared that if the ordinance is passed they will be compelled to close their houses, as this additional burden, placed upon the union requirements regarding helpers, wages and the like, would be the last straw. The council committee announced that it would give the matter careful consideration before taking any further action.

MUSIC HALL CLOSES—DIDN'T PAY.

One of the most significant, if not the most surprising, developments of the week in moving picture circles in Cincinnati was the closing on Saturday, Sept. 18, of Music Hall as a photoplay house. Starting out something less than two weeks earlier under the able management of Milton Gosderfer, under the most ambitious program ever attempted by a moving picture house in the West, it seemed that if it were at all possible, under any circumstances, to attract crowds to the big auditorium for moving pictures it would be done under the plans proposed. The opening, after considerable expense to the promotors for new decorations and other preparations for a season's activity, was fairly successful. Many people visited Music Hall to hear the big orchestra and the star soloist featured at each performance, while a pair of first class features were presented.

At the same time, however, it became at once apparent that the location of the house, at Twelfth and Elm streets, was too far out of the way to enable its vast seating capacity to be used to advantage. This was the prime defect in its use as a moving picture house, pointed out by those familiar with the local situation as soon as the plan was broached, and it proved to be fatal to the project, at least for the time being. The advantage of a good location was never better shown than in the failure of Music Hall as a moving picture house with all of the extraordinary attractions referred to.

EDWARD LUX REPORTS GOOD BUSINESS.

Manager Edward Lux, who is in charge of the Universal branch in Cincinnati, as well as of the Cincinnati Buckeye Film Co., through which he distributes Broadway Universal features in this territory, reports unusual success lately with Nat Goodwin in "Business Is Business," in which William H. Crane starred; Ella Hall, in "Jewel," and Hobart Bosworth, one of the newest acquisitions of the Broadway Universal Co., in "A Little Brother of the Rich."

C. C. HITE BUSY ON NEW OFFICE.

Manager C. C. Hite now the head of the newly established offices of the Triangle Mutual Film Corporation, is busily engaged in getting the quarters on Fifth street in shape. The entire lower floor of the building has been leased, giving the new concern ample space.

PATHE MAN VISITS COLUMBUS.

C. E. Holah, manager of the Pathe exchange, was in Columbus on business last week, largely for the purpose of smoothing the ways for some of the forthcoming releases under the new Pathe Gold Rooster brand. All of the representatives of the company have new cards with the gold rooster emblazoned on them, so that no one can escape knowing about it. The Wallingford series, which is to begin releasing under this brand on Oct. 4, is expected to make a hit, not only on account of the popularity of the fictional characters, but on account of the fine cast, including Burr McIntosh, Max Figman and Lolita Robertson.

"SILENT VALLEY" SEEN.

"Silent Valley," the film in which the Moon Film Co., of Cincinnati and New York, has portrayed conditions in the Hocking Valley coal fields of Ohio resulting from the long idleness among the miners, was run all last week at the Grand Opera House in connection with "The Melting Pot." The picture is exceptionally realistic, especially in its mining scenes, and for that reason, as well as on account of the faithfulness with which it shows the suffering of the people in the mining region, will be used by the Central Labor Council of Cincinnati in the benefit performance which will be staged the first week in October for the relief of the miners. Miss Marjorie LaFern, who played the lead in the film, will also appear in person and tell of conditions as she saw them.

CINCINNATI JOTTINGS.

Manager Harry Glick, of the Wonderland theater, which was first in the field in the moving picture business in Urbana, O., has announced his intention of retiring from the business, at least in that city, in order to move to a warmer climate for the benefit of his wife's health. J. P. Hance is named as the probable purchaser of the house, a number of changes and improvements being contemplated.

Manager D. F. McCoy, of the LaMix theater, at Wilmington, O., has completed arrangements for the installation in the theater of a $3,000 pipe organ and orchestrion, similar to that in use in the Grand Opera House in Cincinnati. It will be much the finest in the town, and one of the best in any town of the size in the state, and Mr. McCoy is very proud of this prospective distinction for his theater.

The breaking of a film at the Grand theater, of Delaware, O., while being run, caused a small fire in the operator's room, but the blaze did not spread beyond that point, although the fire department was called out as a precaution. The film was consumed, however, other damage amounting to the nominal sum of $25.

The Park Theater Company, recently organized at Moundsville, W. Va., promises the construction of a handsome house in that town, at a cost of approximately $10,000. M. A. and J. J. Sybert and others are interested.

Possibility of Another Motion Picture Theater on Fourth Street—Property Adjoining Seelbach Hotel, It Is Suspected, Being Seriously Considered as Site for New Keith Theater—Other Film Houses That Are Near.

By C. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

POSSIBILITY of another Fourth street motion picture theater in Louisville is seen in negotiations respecting property adjoining the Seelbach hotel, between Walnut and Chestnut streets. Definite steps so far as ascertainable, extend no further than that James L. Weed, manager of the Keith vaudeville theater in Louisville, has inspected the property and made a report to the Keith interests on the matter. It was rumored in Louisville for a time that Mr. Weed had signed a lease on the property in question, but he denied that such reports were true, saying that the negotiations had not reached that stage. The property, a store and office building, is owned by Mrs. Marmaduke Sales and for a long time was occupied by the Smith & Nixon Piano Co. For a year or more it remained almost vacant, though two business concerns are now using the front store rooms.

"Mrs. Sales has for some time been anxious for us to lease the property," Mr. Weed stated, "and as representative of the Keith interests I visited it, looked it over and made a report to the New York office. Whether they will consider the proposition, I don't know. My report was simply on the advisability of opening this house. If the New York office thinks favorably I will hear to that effect, perhaps, in a few days." Mr. Weed declined to state whether he had recommended opening the house.

At present the Keith interests are operating the Mary Anderson theater as a picture house, and using some films at the vaudeville house. The Mary Anderson theater is in the next square out. In the same square as the Sales building, several doors south, is the Majestic theater. One square north is the Alamo and further along the Novelty, while around the corner on Walnut street is the Walnut theater, now a motion picture house.

FOX FILMS LIKED IN LOUISVILLE.

C. G. Kingsley, of the Fox Film Corporation, Cincinnati, has been in Louisville for about a week. The Fox features are being shown at the Mary Anderson and Mr. Kingsley spoke enthusiastically of those which were coming. "Two Orphans," a Fox film recently shown at the Mary Anderson, was compared by many who saw it to the all-star stage production of the same play in Louisville some two years ago and numbers of these expressed the opinion that the film version surpassed the legitimate version.

"VIA WIRELESS" AT THE NOVELTY.

During the run of "Via Wireless" at the Novelty theater, there was a small wireless receiving set in operation in the lobby of the theater. An operator, concealed, manipulated the key and the receiving apparatus was kept constantly clicking in the lobby. During the greater part of the time that this film was being run there was a crowd in the lobby watching the messages received "Via wireless."

MIRROR ILLUSION ADVERTISES CHAPLIN AT THE STAR.

An interesting use of one of the papier mache figures of Chaplin is made from time to time by the Star theater of Louisville. The entrance doors opening from the lobby of this theater are mirrored and the figure is placed behind a screen so that the figure is shown only as the door, swinging in, reaches a certain angle. Those entering seem to see Chaplin standing before them in a characteristic attitude, and, when they look up again, he is gone. This optical illusion created a great deal of interest and there was a good deal of discussion. The figure was placed between the two sets of entrance doors, so that when the right-hand door was swung in, it caught the reflection of the figure only for a moment.

"TRILBY" MAY COME BACK.

"Trilby," which has a run of three days at the Mary Anderson theater, drew houses larger than could be accommodated and there are probabilities that the film may be returned for another run. Leo S. Goldberg, manager of the theater, introduced what is believed to be a novel device in connection with the film. When the point in the picture was reached where Triby appears for an operatic solo, singing "Ben Bolt," a Victrola off stage, played a record of Madame Schumann-Heink. The timing of the picture and the talking machine were identical and people who watched the singer's lips could read them as the words came from the talking machine. In Cincinnati, when the film was shown, it was learned in Louisville, the management engaged a professional singer to stand behind the screen and give the famous song.

MUTUAL LOCAL OFFICES MOVE.

The local offices of the Mutual Film Corporation, which have been maintained in the building in which the Alamo theater is located, have been moved to larger and more desirable quarters over the Novelty theater. J. G. Conner, of the Indianapolis office, recently spent several days of his vacation in Louisville.

THE NEW OLIVETTE THEATER.

The Olivette theater has been in operation at Thirteenth and Walnut streets since Sept. 2. Incorporators of the company are Moses Lang, David H. Stirbel and Louis Speevack, the latter of whom is managing the house. The capital of the company is listed at $1,000. An old theater on this site was remodeled for the purposes of the picture house and the company has been giving a combined vaudeville and motion picture program each night. It is the intention to do away with vaudeville altogether and run the house strictly as a motion picture theater. The Universal service has provided the principal part of the programs. So far only evening runs have been given; later both afternoon and evening shows will be conducted.

LOUISVILLE CLOSE UPS.

The editor of an "Answers to Movie Fans" column in one of the Louisville papers probably is doing picture stars a real service by declining to supply them with their domestic addresses and also by suggesting that when writing for photographs of these actors it is the nice thing to do to enclose a small fee, such as 25 cents, to pay for the cost involved. It is pointed out that these actors are being always asked for pictures and that the tax on their resources, if there is no recompense, would be too much to expect them to agree to it. It is not good policy, the editor of this department believes, to write movie actors and actresses in care of their own homes and when such addresses are asked for the name of the producing company is given instead.

Children's pictures will be resumed at the Mary Anderson theater on October 16. This is the Saturday morning series for the small children who are in school during the other mornings of the week.

John S. Purnett, who sold the Green Dragon theater at Shelbyville, Ky., to Fred Sheldon, of Louisville, has returned to his home in Jeffersonville, Ind., where he has other business interests.

E. J. Shircliffe, of the U-L-S-C Film Co., has been a recent visitor to call on the Louisville exhibitors.

J. P. Knapp, of Morehead, Ky., is in the market for stage curtains and opera chairs for his theater.

The Regira Amusement Co. has been incorporated at Jenkins, Ky., one of the big coal mining towns in the eastern part of the state, with capital of $2,000. The incorporators are Leiper P. Reed, G. M. Gillette and W. T. S. Hand.

WHAT CHATTANOOGA PATRONS PREFER.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Tennessee Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ACCORDING to the observations of the Chattanooga managers the patrons of their theaters are constantly revising their preferences. Ten years ago, they say, the "favorite kind of picture" used to be trick pictures. A year later the Indian pictures had the biggest call. Then following the ascension of the "shoot-'em-up" cowboys, and there was a reversion later in favor of society dramas. At present, according to these witnesses, comedies, with not too much plot and a considerable amount of horse-play of not too crude a character, are the biggest drawers they are showing. In Chattanooga, as in other places, Charley Chaplin is conceded to be probably the most effective entertainer in the business.

TENNESSEE NOTES.

Business in Nashville—Memphis Items—At a Knoxville House.

W. H. Wassman, of Nashville, Tenn., who operates the Crystal theater, advertises as "The Man Who Made the Nickel Famous." For the week of the State Fair in Tennessee he announced a high-grade program, including Hobart Henly, Harold Lockwood, King Baggott, Eddie Lyon, Lee Moran, Cleo Madison, Nat Goodwin and a closing day of comedies. All for a nickel. Mr. Wassman believes in comedies and sets aside Wednesdays and Saturdays as comedy" days, although there are comedy reels with most of the programs. The legitimate houses in Nashville opened during that week, but they did not appear to have anything like a serious affect on the business of the picture theaters.

The Majestic Amusement Co., of Memphis, brought back to that city recently for its second run the Charlie Chaplin picture, "In the Bank." This was shown at Majestic theater No. 2, and was recalled and shown again as a result of the general demand for the second showing.

Memphis people have been very much interested in the production of "The Doll House Mystery," the scenario of which was written by Dr. Thomas Graves, of Memphis. The film, a two-reel affair, was shown at the Majestic No. 2 and was viewed by a large number of Dr. Graves' friends.

The management of the Bijou theater in Knoxville in its advertising emphasizes two of its prominent features, "comfort and safety." "A real theater on the corner, with eight large side exits; think what this may mean to you," is a part of the electrotype plate which is introduced in every display of advertisement the concern uses. Emmy Wehlen, in "When a Woman Loves," proved a recent big drawing card at this theater.

Controversies relating to the Jefferson theater building, in Memphis, now known as the Lyric, have gotten into the courts in the shape of a suit for rent. The Memphis Theaters company is the plaintiff and asks judgment for $9,875 against the Bijou company and B. M. Stainback, agent, alleged to be due on the lease. The Bijou company leased the Jefferson theater building in 1911.

GEORGIA STATE ADVERTISING DE LUXE.

By A. M. Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SEVEN thousand Georgians saw the moving picture of the State of Georgia and went away proud and glad they were Georgians. Over a thousand people from outside of Atlanta came to the city especially to see the film.

The state Capitol was shown first: then legislators were seen coming out of the main entrance and also Governor Harris. Next was shown the old executive mansion at Milledgeville; the buildings and grounds of the Georgia Normal and Industrial School at Milledgeville; the academy for the blind at Macon; the state sanitarium for the insane, the largest institution of its kind in the world, as also the prison farm at Milledgeville; the experimental station at Griffin; the campus of the University of Georgia at Athens.

Next a bare map of Georgia flashed on the screen. This was soon as speckled as a guinea egg. These dots were cotton oil mills. Another bare map showed fertilizer factories in the state, another showed the electric power lines.

Scenes in Atlanta were: First, the million dollar court house built without bonds; then a scene looking up Broad street, on a busy day, after which came a panoramic view of the whole of Atlanta's business section.

Scenes at Marietta followed showing the national cemetery with rows after rows of Federal and Confederate graves; then Kennesaw Mountain and the marble quarries; the spectators watched workers digging ochre and barites from the mines, and the apple orchards of North Georgia. Then came scenes from many towns in South Georgia. The dam and lake at Tallulah Falls followed scenes at Eatonton, the birthplace of Joel Chandler Harris; then came the home of Dr. Charles W. Long, the discoverer of chloroform, at Jefferson, followed by another run of scenes in smaller towns over the state and fields and orchards. A field of sea island cotton was shown, of which Georgia produces half the world's supply.

"Where the ocean kisses Georgia at Savannah," the film read, and people were shown in the surf at Tybee..

Sections of some of Georgia's fine highways were shown, and the film announced that "more than 20,000 miles of fine roadways have been built in Georgia within the last seven years," Georgia leads all states except one in fine road building.

"VIA WIRELESS" AT THE STRAND.

Mr. Eugene Wilder, president of the Automatic Player Piano Company, on North Pryor street, has just returned from a business trip to Chicago. He reports a splendid business for his company.

Albany, Ga., picture theater managers report an unusual good run of business the past ten days. This is due to the increased price being paid for cotton in that section and high class of pictures shown.

Mayo & Buckner have taken over the Grand theater, at Camilla, Ga., from the Camilla Musical Association, and it is being run now as a moving picture and vaudeville house. The theater is doing a splendid business.

DEMAND FOR SHORT FILMS.

Evidences of demand for short films is heard in Evanston, says the News. "Various reasons are ascribed for the choice: The quicker action which the short story necessitates; the varied interest of a program made up of the short drama film; the greater celerity in 'getting it over.'"

LIQUOR INTERESTS MAKE A REQUEST.

Detroit Screen Club

New Organization to Be Clearing House for Ideas—Only Live Members, Exhibitors and Exchangemen Wanted—Preliminary Meeting Held at Kriterion Office on Jefferson Avenue—General Meeting to Be Called Soon.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DETROIT is to have a Screen Club at last—one that will actually stand for the uplift of the motion picture industry. While it will also have its social side, the feature of the organization is to be to further the interests and scope of motion pictures. The men behind the project want only such exhibitors and exchangemen as members who are willing to sacrifice a few hours from their regular duties once or twice a month and get together for co-operative purposes. The Screen Club wants "live" members. There are some people connected with the motion picture industry who are willing to join an association and pay their dues when it is time, but they never will attend any meetings. The Scren Club does not want such members. The only way any material benefits can accrue from an organization of any kind is for the members to personally be at the meetings, to express their views on the various subjects which come up, and to give the association the benefit of their experience. The preliminary meetings for the formation of this club have been held at the projection room of the Detroit Kriterion Film Exchange on East Jefferson avenue. Temporary officers have been selected, but within a few weeks—when more members are in sight—a general meeting will take place at which time permanent offices will be chosen.

DUPLEX TO BE READY IN NOVEMBER.

Fuller Claflin, architect for the Duplex theater, Grand Boulevard, near Woodward avenue, Detroit, told the World representative that work is progressing rapidly on this new building, and that it will be completed in time to open around the 15th of November. As the writer has mentioned before, there is an unusual amount of interest being taken in this theater owing to its uniqueness. Our readers will recall a complete description of this interesting house on page 1525, issue of September 12, 1914.

NEW HOUSE IN WYANDOTTE NEARLY READY.

Wyandotte, a suburb of Detroit, will soon have a splendid new theater, seating 1,100 persons and costing $60,000. It is now in course of construction for the Harris & Warren Amusement Co. The present plan is to open the house by November 1st. It is to be known as the Majestic.

B. C. WHITNEY BOOKS "BIRTH OF A NATION."

When is Detroit to see "The Birth of a Nation" and at what theater is it to be shown? These two questions have been uppermost in the minds of Detroit exhibitors and picture fans. Many rumors have been afloat and many local managers have tried to book the wonderful feature, but the correct "dope" (which was given exclusively to the World representative) is that B. C. Whitney, proprietor of the Detroit Opera House, holds the contract for the showing of this picture two weeks during the month of March. It will positively not be seen in Detroit previous to that time. Detroit is among the last of the larger cities to get a look at this three-hour film, which is somewhat surprising, for Detroit is considered one of the very best show towns in the country. It is understood that the producers of this picture were offered as high as $30,000 for the state rights. After playing the Detroit Opera House, it will be seen in a number of other Michigan cities, and will then return to the Detroit Opera House, where it will run the entire summer of 1916—at least, that is the present plan.

PAGEANT THEATER OPENS IN ST. LOUIS.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis, Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

The formal opening of the Pageant theatre, at 5851 Delmar Boulevard, took place on Saturday, September 18th. The new theater is one of the handsomest of all picture theaters to open in St. Louis recently.

All the equipment is of the most modern, the heating, cooling and ventilating system as perfect as could be procured, and the elaborate Hope-Jones Unit Orchestra, the first one installed in the city, is in the hands of a noted church organist, Oscar Jost. On the opening night the management received many floral offerings from personal friends and from other theaters. Alderman Luke Hart, from the Twenty-eighth ward, representing the Mayor, made the opening speech. The ushers were in full dress, and the theater was bright with many lights and decorations of palms and other plants. The new house was named the Pageant in commemoration of the memorable civic event held in Forest Park in June of 1914.

On account of the musical arrangements, a number of pickets were stationed in front of the theater on the opening night passing out handbills declaring the house unfair to organized musicians. One arrest was made on complaint of a patron who declared the picket annoyed him by attempting to give him a boycott bill. The management of the house filed an injunction suit against the United Railways, on account of the elimination of a car stop which would compel the patrons of the house to walk 580 feet from the nearest car stop to the theater.

LAFAYETTE THEATER UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT.

Skouras Brothers, who own controlling interest in the Olympia theater, at 14th and Market streets, have purchased an interest in the Lafayette theater, and have taken over the active management. The policy will be to maintain a program of special features lightened with comedies and single reel dramas. Skouras Brothers have very successfully operated the Olympic for a number of years, and the Lafayette, which is in a good district, should be an excellent business venture.

"SNOOPERS."

An editorial appeared recently in the St. Louis Times concerning the proposed censorship bill for St. Louis, which voices the sentiment of a large number of patrons of the moving picture theaters as well as of the paper itself. It is entitled, "The Snoopers Mobilize," and reads in part as follows:

"Having obtained an introduction in the Board of Aldermen of their bill to create a motion picture censorship board in St. Louis, the self-constituted guardians of the city's morals, whose visions do not include our financial or industrial progress, will mobilize to fight for the passage of the snoop bill. We have repeatedly pointed out the dangers to be encountered by the passage of such a bill, but we are now interested in knowing how far the guardians will proceed. We have an idea that they will not be satisfied with censoring the movies."

"BIRTH OF A NATION" WINS INJUNCTION IN ST. LOUIS.

After many injunction suits and an arrest, the managers of the "Birth of a Nation" have won the right to exhibit the film without further interference from the police. On September 17th, Walter Sanford, manager of the Olympic theater, and John Brethany, manager of the Birth of a Nation company, were summoned to the police court on a charge of exhibiting an improper picture. The summons was a result of a complaint from negroes living in the 17th ward. Judge Hennings said he had seen the play, and believes it teaches a moral. In a written opinion handed down by the Judge, he says:

"The best evidence against the contention of the Board of Police Commissioners and the Morality Squad that the picture is immoral and will create hatred, race prejudice and ill-will, is the fact that, although the production has been running daily for three weeks, there has not been, so far as the evidence shows, the slightest indication of any such untoward condition in our city." Many affidavits were filed in support of the play by ministers, bank presidents, newspaper men and all the principal dramatic critics in St. Louis.

NEW ST. LOUIS THEATER BY CHRISTMAS.

The Columbia Novelty company have purchased half a block at Twelfth and Clinton streets, to be used for the purpose of erecting a moving picture theater and airdome, the theater to seat 1200 and the airdome 1500. The site consists of five pieces of property, and until the entire transaction was completed the identity of the purchasers was not made known to the public. The wrecking of five old houses now on the ground will be begun immediately, and the theater is to be completed in time to open for business by Christmas. The plans call for the latest improvements in theaters, such as the correct slope to the floor, toilet and rest rooms, drinking fountains, and even a garage for baby carriages. The theater will be conducted by the Webster Amusement company, an organization of business men in North St. Louis, and the active manager of the house will be a veteran in the moving picture business.

The Princess theater, Grand and Olive, advanced the price of admission to twenty-five cents for the showing of "The German Side of the War," a six-reel feature put out by the Central Film Co., of Chicago. The pictures were made with the permission of the German authorities, and fifty per cent. of the proceeds of the exhibition goes to the blind and crippled soldiers' fund by official agreement. The feature ran at the Princess during the week of September 19th.

Since the "Birth of a Nation" has attained such a wide popularity in St. Louis, many of the neighborhood houses take advantage of the fact and advertise a "Griffith" picture, or a "Walthall" or "Lillian Gish" feature, and from the packed houses heard of as the result, it would seem that the old adage "It pays to advertise" never rang truer.

THEATER COMBINATION IN MARTINSVILLE, INDIANA.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

CHARLES BLACKSTONE, owner of the Blackstone theater, Martinsville, Ind., has agreed to consolidate with F. J. Rembusch, owner of the Grace theater, Martinsville. ### TWO ASPECTS OF SUNDAY OPENING.

Effort to open the theaters of Newcastle, Ind., on Sunday is afoot, and seems likely to succeed. Newcastle is a city without a public park and much has been said there on that particular subject, so the idea now of opening the theaters on Sunday meets popular approval and it is a question whether the blue noses can stem the tide of opinion.

At Elwood, Ind., they are proposing to open on Sunday as a matter of self defense. The neighboring towns are open on Sunday and it is being urged that it is healthy to keep folks at home.

School Children Patrons

In Minneapolis Much Interest Is Being Taken in the Attendance of School Children at Picture Shows—Seeking Effect of Great Liking for Pictures on Studies —Opinions of St. Paul Settlement Workers.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

BACKWARDNESS in Duluth school children may unwisely be laid at the door of the moving picture theater. Certain school teachers in that city have been engaged in taking a census of the photoplay fans among their young charges. They will present this data to city Superintendent Denfield and his compilation is expected to show the public:

First—The amount of money spent weekly by the pupils at the moving picture houses.

Second—The class of pictures admired the most.

Third—Percentage attending moving picture shows rather than public playgrounds.

Fourth—Percentage of "red hot" fans who are behind or slow in their studies.

One eleven-year old lad confessed he attended nightly and twice on Sunday, but the average so far leads to a belief that less than one-fifth of the patronage of the Duluth houses is juvenile.

The Duluthians who are anxious for the welfare of the children may find something of interest in the opinions, given last week, of settlement workers in St. Paul. These men have found the moving picture show has a proper place in the juvenile recreation scheme.

"The moving picture," said Robbins Gilman of the Northeast Settlement house, "is the last word in education and recreation. For instruction of children, I think it has no equal. Of course, its value depends entirely upon the films shown. Outside of the outdoor playgrounds I believe it is the most desirable form of recreation. The only objection I could raise against the moving picture theaters is the poor lighting and poor ventilation in some of the smaller houses. But in the daylight, in ventilated theaters, where high class pictures are shown, I think an ideal recreation and entertainment is offered."

"The motion picture is a great factor in the recreation and education of the child," declared Henry F. Burt, of Unity house, "and where the quality of pictures is guarded by city censorship, as it is here, the only evil that might result would be too much of such recreation to over-stimulate the child. I certainly am not opposed to moving picture theaters where they are properly conducted and proper pictures shown."

"The right kind of moving pictures are of great educational value in a community," agreed Arthur Taylor, who has just come from New York to take charge of the Pillsbury Settlement house

ST. PAUL'S NEW PALACE.

M. L. Finkelstein and R. H. Reuben have not fixed a policy for the new Palace theater, which will be erected at Seventh and Wabasha streets in St. Paul, but will build so they can play theatrical attractions as well as pictures. Childrens' playrooms in charge of trained nurses and with a house physician in attendance are among the features. Other novelties include a theatrical reference room, a fountain room or tea room and reading and rest rooms.

The building cost $750,000, will be fireproof and will seat 2,500. Cantilever construction for the balconies eliminates the posts and elevators and inclines will make stairways unnecessary.

PICTURE SHOWS, A REAL DEMOCRACY.

There is no class distinction in St. Paul moving picture houses—rich and poor alike patronize the photoplay houses. Anent the statement by Walter Prichard Eaton that the "legitimate" theater was becoming aristocratic, the St. Paul Pioneer-Press says:

"In all the film theaters we have visited, class divisions have been very much absent. The washerwoman, dropping into one of these electricity-bedizened places, seats herself next the couple who left their coupe around the corner. A clerk and his sweetheart enjoy the current chapter of "The Bedevilments of Belladonna" no more heartily than the two persons in the same row, who as well could have bought a box at the Metropolitan. And so it goes.

"If the regular theater is to become a pastime of the educated and well-to-do, a great many managers are wishing the day were here. It is a great deal more nearly the truth that the educated and the well-to-do are dividing their attention impartially between the stage and the cinema, and that the other amusement seekers will go wherever their money and tastes permit."

NEW HOUSE ON UNIVERSITY AVENUE, ST. PAUL.

H. J. Breilem, proprietor of the Verdi and Faust theaters in St. Paul, has started construction on a third moving picture house on University avenue near Victoria street, which he hopes to have open early in December. It will be 40x125 ft.

WESTERN FINANCIER CRITICISES FILMS.

T. B. Walker, a pioneer financier of Minneapolis, said to be the richest man in that city, a regular photoplay fan, criticizes the way bankers are depicted in films. "There is one feature of the moving pictures I would like to correct, were it in my power," he said, "and that is their tendency lately to be flippant. It is an error to depict the banker—the man of large affairs and captains of industry, as cold-blooded men with no regard for those under them or for society in general, and who stoop to trickery to gain their point. Such pictures distort actual facts and give the youth a prejudice against the man who is doing big things and creates, as well, a socialistic sentiment.

"Indeed—and I speak from a personal knowledge—there are no men in the world of commerce possessing so high a standard as these same big bankers and men of affairs. This constant picturing them as unscrupulous and employing underhanded methods to gain a desired end gives the young man an impression bad for society in general."

Mr. Walker drives to a picture show practically every night. He calls Charles Chaplin an amusing young fellow.

"But in the last analysis," he added, "the great thing of moving pictures is their democracy. There, the banker, the carpenter, the mechanic and laborer for a small admission price come with their families and enjoy a few hours in a common and wholesome amusement. The general association is good for the men, their families and for the community."

ORPHEUM AT DULUTH A PICTURE HOUSE.

When the Orpheum theater at Duluth became the Orpheum-Strand on September 20, a permanent policy was fixed for that house. It will not return to vaudeville or drama. Having committed itself to a picture policy a trade mark has been adopted and an alliterative slogan, "The People's Playhouse Presenting Picture Plays with a Punch," has been unloosed.

All seats will be ten cents at all matinees and the main floor twenty-five cents at night.

"Graustark" was the attraction the first half of the opening week and "The Juggernaut" the last half. Early bookings include "The Island of Regeneration," "The Blindness of Virtue," "The House of a Thousand Candles," "Sins of the Mothers," "Mortmain," "Tillie's Tomato Surprise," "The Chalice of Courage," "Crooky Scruggs," "The Great Ruby," "The Rosary, "A Bunch of Keys," "The Circular Staircase," "In the Palace of the King," and "The Battle Cry of Peace."

FILM PLANS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

THE Department of Visual Instruction at the University of Wisconsin at Madison has begun the work of routing its loaned films and slides for the coming year. All the village district and high schools and churches which used the outfits last year have been notified, but this year an effort will be made to increase the number of users. The demand last year exceeded the expectations of the department, so as a safeguard many new films and hundreds of slides have been added. The increased supply of material will enable each organization to keep a set of pictures a full week instead of three days.

The packages will be started the first of November. Each borrower will get twenty-five sets of pictures, the season to last twenty-five weeks. Each borrowing organization must furnish its own projector and pay shipping charges on the films and slides. Programs will continue to deal with travel, industry, literature and art.

FOUR REELS OF A CANOE TRIP.

So impressed with the educational value of its four-reel picture of a canoe trip down the Wisconsin River is the Crossette Film company of Milwaukee that it will insist that all theaters in the state showing the film give school children an opportunity to see it without charge. This will be done by giving daily matinees during the engagement of the film and limiting the attendance to children of school age. It is expected that the picture will be released in a week or two.

SOME of the seats for The Williamson Submarine pictures at the Lyric theater at Redfield, S. D., sold for ten dollars each. The lowest price was one dollar. In order to show their appreciation of his enterprise, many citizens bought the ten dollar seats, about $2,000 being raised in this manner. # Politics in Censoring

Oakland, California, Has Interesting Situation Due to Attempt of Mayor J. L. Davie to Have Griffith Spectacle Stopped—City Attorney Stated That a Mistake Had Been Made—Controversy Has Started an Unpleasant Political Controversy.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE danger of censorship to the motion picture industry has perhaps never been more clearly demonstrated in the West than in the recent action of the city administration at Oakland, Calif., in regard to the D. W. Griffith masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation," or, as it is more generally known here, "The Clansman."

On the second week of the return engagement of this attraction in Oakland, and its fifth week in that city, the mayor ordered the show stopped. The following day this official declared that he did not intend to close the show and that the police had exceeded their authority in taking the arbitrary action they did. The city attorney apologized on behalf of the municipality, stating that a mistake had been made, and the showing of the film was continued without further trouble.

Merely a Political Ruse.

Censorship in so far as censoring the film on its merits seemed to be furtherest from the thoughts of those in power, it being very evident that the whole matter was one of politics and "The Clansman" happened to be the impromptu football that was used for the political fight. In Oakland the Board of Censors consists of two members, the mayor and the chief of police. When the production was first shown in that city Frank Mott was mayor and he not only allowed the film to be exhibited without any change, but advised all who could possibly do so to see it. When the return engagement commenced a new mayor was in the chair and the trouble that ensued over the film was merely a testing of authority.

During the second week of this rereturn engagement at the Macdonough theater police officers appeared after the house had been filled one evening with an order from the mayor directing that the show be stopped. The theater management read the order from the stage and told the audience that their money would be refunded at the box office. John Ford, one of the operators, was placed under arrest and later released on bail. Why the police picked an operator instead of the manager of the house is not explained.

On the following day F. A. Geisea, manager of the theater; W. C. Wheeler, manager of the concern handling the film, and W. E. Keefe, personal representative of D. W. Griffith, made an application in the Superior Court to secure a restraining order to prevent further interference from the police and it was then that the city attorney appeared and stated that a mistake had been made and that the mayor's orders had been wrongly interpreted.

Mayor Calls It a Frame-Up.

Mayor J. L. Davie states that the entire matter was a frame-up to discredit him, as an aftermath of an exceedingly bitter municipal campaign. The chief of police declares that he was merely following orders and holds a letter from the mayor instructing him to stop the show. He further declares that the mayor now wishes to secure a return of this letter, but that it is being retained in case a civil suit is instituted against the city. Such a step as the one suggested is being considered by the owners of the film to recover the money lost by the elimination of the one exhibition. In the controversy that has ensued over the incident not a single reference has been made by either side involved in regard to the merits or demerits of "The Clansman." The picture has been lost sight of entirely in the political squabble and the only result, aside from the financial loss to the exhibitors of the film, has been to cast discredit upon the censorship system as operated at Oakland.

EMPRESS BECOMES NEAR PICTURE HOUSE.

The management of the Empress theater, one of the leading vaudeville houses of San Francisco, has signed a contract with the William Fox Film Corporation for the first run showing of productions of this concern on Market street. This theater recently booked a leading film serial and in the future pictures will form by far the greatest part of its program, making it in reality a moving picture, instead of a vaudeville house.

In speaking of the change in policy that has been made, Sid Grauman, manager of the theater, said: "We have booked these feature productions, because the amusement public is demanding more pictures and is willing to pay good prices to see the best film offerings. We have always shown some pictures and have been gradually increasing the number of these of late, with splendid results. Naturally, the addition of big features means that the number of vaudeville acts will be reduced considerably, and only the best of these will be retained."

The new policy was inaugurated this week the feature offering being Betty Nansen in "The Price of Passion," and it is to be noted that this won as much applause as the regular vaudeville acts on the bill. The prices of the Empress theater are 10 cents for matinee performances and 10, 20 and 30 cents for evenings. Manager Sid Grauman is president of the Screen Club of San Francisco and is one of the best known theater managers on the Pacific Coast.

A SPURIOUS FILM.

The Comedy Film company, of which M. Calmy is manager, is advising exhibitors that a spurious copy of "The Mix-Up," for which it has the Pacific Coast rights, is being circulated by San Francisco parties. A negative and a positive has been made from sections of the films from which "The Mix-Up" was made and the print that is being offered is a very poor one. This concern has three authorized prints working in this territory, one at Los Angeles and two in San Francisco. In some of the inland cities contests are being held and prizes awarded to those who can figure out the original productions from which the various scenes were taken. The film concern recently opened headquarters at 158 Eddy street and is now handling the "Fall of Przemysl" in California for Ackerman & Harris, in addition to booking the comedy.

V-L-S-E INSTALLS EXHIBITING ROOM.

The V-L-S-E, Inc., has erected a steel operating booth in its big exchange at 986 Market street and is now ready to show its releases to exhibitors before bookings are made. Films will be displayed regularly twice a week and older releases will be shown whenever exhibitors desire to inspect them. Manager Goff has returned from a trip to the Pacific Northwest and is now away on a visit to the Denver office.

HUB THEATRE OPENED.

The Hub theater, erected by C. H. Mehrten, of Berkeley, for A. C. Pabst, at Mill Valley, Calif., was opened a week ago under most auspicious circumstances. This house was to have been completed in the early summer, but late spring rains retarded building operations and the finishing touches have just been put on it. The theater opened with a flourish, the house being taken over the first evening by the Eagles, with a brass band in front to add to the festivities. Mayor Jones was present and made an interesting speech of welcome and other city officials were also on hand to grace the occasion. Mr. Pabst has given up the house he conducted for a time at Sausalito and will devote his entire attention to the Mill Valley theater. The new house has a seating capacity of 600 and is very attractive in appearance.

TO BRITISH COLUMBIA EXHIBITORS.

Provincial Election Coming—Exhibitors Want Board of Appeal for Censorship.

Within the next few weeks a Provincial election will be held in British Columbia. It is hard for the exhibitor to realize the enormous number of fine productions which are condemned by the Provincial censor—some of them for the silliest, most trivial reasons imaginable. A committee from the British Columbia Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association, who called on Attorney General Bowser to ask for the establishment of a board of appeal to review this censor's rejections, were met with a flat refusel even to consider the proposition.

A letter received by a member of this committee from Mr. Brewster, the leader of the Liberal party in British Columbia, states that he considers the establishment of this appeal board a simple matter of right, and that the Liberals, if successful in the coming election, will give the relief desired. Under the present regime, literally hundreds of pictures which have been shown all over the United States, and in other parts of Canada, have been prohibited in this Province. When it is considered that many of these are among the best productions of their respective makers, it means a direct financial loss to every branch of the industry.

RED CROSS NIGHT AT AVENUE THEATER.

The Red Cross concert given at the Avenue theater in Victoria, B. C., recently was a brilliant success. Pictures, and songs by local people, made up the program, and $650 was added to the fund of the Red Cross Society. The house seats 300, and for the night performance tickets were sold at 50 cents each.

THEATER IN PEACE RIVER BURNED.

Within a month after it had attained fame as the scene of a dramatic murder trial in the far North, the Empire theater at Peace River Crossing, Alberta, has been burned, presumably by an incendiary. The net loss on the theater and equipment is about $4,500.

ENTERPRISE AT ORPHEUM.

Manager James Pilling of the Orpheum has instituted an advertising campaign that should certainly bring additional business to this already popular house. Almost 9,000 sheets of paper have been ordered, and fifty well located 12-sheet stands will be used. The most striking electric sign in the city has just been erected, with the word "Orpheum" in plain letters four feet high, dropping down the front of the house. On Sept. 20, when the new feature policy begins, admission will be raised to 15 cents. Various well known local soloists will appear during the week, and a percentage of the receipts will be given to the Province Tobacco Fund for the soldiers on the firing line.

VANCOUVER ITEMS.

C. F. Featherstone has left the local Pathe office to accept a position with the Dominion Film Exchange.

The firm name of Pathe's Famous Feature Film Syndicate of Quebec has just been changed, and is now the "Specialty Film Import Limited."

The first Minusa gold fibre screen in British Columbia is in the Dominion theater in Vancouver. Manager Muir has also retinted the Dominion lobby, which contains some of the prettiest leaded glass work in Canada.

Manager Lilth, who recently took charge of the Park theater, Winnipeg, under the new owners, reports that a combination of good pictures and good music is attracting good houses.

Want Canadian Films

In the Dominion of Canada There Is a Feeling That Exhibitors Are Not Studying the Needs of Canadian Spectators—It Is Said That in Vancouver Many Reels Are Censored Because They Show the American Flag.

By E. C. Thomas, Vancouver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE following editorial, reproduced in Vancouver from an Eastern paper, accurately sets forth the ideas of a vast number of Canadians, both in the industry and out of it:

"The moving picture theater interests of Canada should get together some of these days and study their business from a Canadian standpoint. They should formulate a distinct policy, which would stipulate that a certain attention must be given to Canada by American film makers. We should have our country done justice, both as to its history and its institutions, its public life * * * and the habits of its people. Canada is rich in romance of the river, the forest and the plains. Let the men who are using the magic of their wonderful art direct their lenses in the direction of a land that is tired of being treated as a second-hand consideration. Let us have a Canadian influence in moving pictures and everything else for Canadians, and a Canadian influence broadened in other spheres. Let us imitate less and initiate more."

It is probably a fact that more reels are rejected here on account of the showing of the American flag than for any other single reason. The most direct solution would appear to lie in the production of films in Canada by Canadians, but practically nothing has so far been done in this direction. With the exception of topicals, English pictures are not much more popular here than in the United States, and very few, comparatively, are shown. Nothing is more sure of a hearty welcome than a story of the great north woods, with perhaps a touch of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police.

WANT CANADIAN WOMEN AS FILM CENSORS.

Among the subjects brought up and approved at the last meeting of the Vancouver Council of Women was a resolution made at the recent Toronto convention of the National Council, asking for the appointment of women as censors of moving pictures. Mrs. S. D. Scott, president of the Local Council, stated to the World correspondent that they considered this censorship a work for which women were particularly well fitted, and they have several times, though unsuccessfully, approached the government with a proposal to assist in the censoring. Mrs. Scott stated, however, that there was very little fault to be found with present standards here, and only on rare occasions did members consider it necessary to call the attention of an exhibitor to some scene to which exeception could be taken.

SPECIAL EDUCATIONAL FILMS FOR CALGARY CHILDREN.

As the result of a meeting called by A. Calhoun, and just held at the Public Library at Calgary, Alberta, it is altogether likely that this city will in the near future have a series of educational films run under direct supervision of the parents and teachers, and that the movement will ultimately cover the Province of Alberta, if not the whole of Western Canada. At the preliminary meeting, which was attended by about 35 prominent citizens, plans were discussed looking toward the renting of films which would fit in with the work of the teachers in various subjects. It was announced that while the expense involved precluded the possibility of installing projection apparatus in the schools at this time, R. J. Lydiatt, manager of the Grand theater, seating 1,530, had offered the free use of the house on Saturday.

The committee under Mrs. J. W. Davidson, appointed to investigate the educational film situation, with a view to the use of pictures in connection with the Calgary schools, have recommended the postponement of the next public meeting on the subject, as it was found impossible to gather all the required information in the short time allowed. The committee is now corresponding with film exchanges throughout the Dominion, to ascertain the number and character of educational reels available, and is also securing information concerning the contemplated importation of such subjects from the United States.

PICTURE MEN PROVIDE LIGHT JOBS FOR WOUNDED.

A public spirited action that should furnish inspiration for employers in many lines has just been taken by two Edmonton (Alberta) managers—Mr. Fiddes of the Bijou theater and Mr. Hazza of the Empress. Wounded soldiers, incapacitated for heavy work, are now beginning to return from France, and the two managers in question have volunteered each to provide regular positions about their theaters for three discharged men, selected through the Patriotic Fund. It is announced that the salaries will be even higher than those regularly paid.

SABBATH IN WESTERN CANADA.

Exhibitors in Western Canada seem convinced that it would be useless to attempt to give performances on Sunday, and practically nothing has been done along this line. However, the St. Boniface (Manitoba) baseball team has chosen to contest the provisions of the Lord's Day Act, and repeatedly played games on Sunday, taking up a collection in lieu of a stated admission fee. An action was taken against the players by the morality inspector's department, but the case was decided in favor of the ball men. The department appealed, and in the St. Boniface County Court the case has been dismissed for the second time.

Again, at Victoria, B. C., a Sunday Red Cross concert was held on Sept. 12 at Pantages theater. In addition to musical numbers, the program consisted of scenes from "The Sign of the Cross," given by Benjamin Scovell, a nephew of the late Sir Henry Irving, and moving pictures of the departure for the front of local battalions. Newspaper accounts state that $103.80 was collected at the door.

It's worth trying.

UNIVERSAL ENLARGES LOCAL OFFICE.

The Universal exchange in Vancouver has just been enlarged by the addition of another office, and now occupies five rooms in the Holden building. The arrangement has been changed, and the entrance is now into the exhibitors' room, which occupies the center of the suite, separated from the other departments by wickets. On one side is the shipping department, with poster racks on three sides of the room, adjoining which is the inspection department and the film vault. On the other side of the exhibitors' room the booker and accountant hold forth, while beyond is the sanctum of S. B. Taube, the manager. When present renovations are completed this is expected to be the finest exchange in the city.

GRIFFITH FILM CLOSES PORTLAND RUN.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

AFTER the longest continuous run of any theatrical exhibition, excepting perhaps a stock production several years ago, "The Birth of a Nation" closed at the Heilig theater and the film running in this territory will be returned to Los Angeles. The picture was booked in Portland for three weeks, and the engagement extended a week by popular demand. J. W. B. Bertelson, James Clemmer's publicity man, advises that during the four weeks' run the picture was shown to 85,000 people in Portland. The rights to the film in this territory cost Mr. Clemmer $10,000, to which expense was added that of a twelve-piece orchestra. An advertising campaign of unprecedented magnitude for Portland was conducted during the run of the picture and a score of horsemen clad in Ku-Klux regalia were a common sight on the streets.

The looked for strong opposition to the film by the local colored people failed to materialize and except for a mild protest by them and by the G. A. R. when the picture was first shown, the run was exceptionally quiet. Now, however, litigation has been started with reference to the picture and the rights in this territory which is the reason for the return of the film to Los Angeles.

FIRE INSPECTION ON.

Fire Marshal Stevens and his assistant, H. P. Boardman, are conducting the quarterly inspection of Portland theaters preceding the issuance of theater license in October. Mr. Boardman advises that the exhibitors are keeping their houses in much better condition than formerly.

Some friction exists between the City Fire Inspection Bureau and the City Electrical Inspection Department regarding the enforcement of the new electrical code recently adopted by the city. The new code provides that certain motor drives on projecting machines can be used only by the city's consent; that the machines must be supplied with certain kinds of magazines and defines the rheostat equipment. Electrical Inspector Dunlap has made some inspections under this code and there is some question as to whether or not he is taking upon himself part of the Fire Marshal's duties.

STAR AND PEOPLE'S IMPROVE.

J. R. Cummock, manager of the People's Amusement Company, announces that the Star theater will be closed for two weeks, when extensive repairs will be made. The old front will be torn out and a marquee front constructed. The People's controlled by the same company, will also undergo extensive alterations. New furnishings are now being purchased for that house. It will not be closed, however. The improvements in the People's are being made preliminary to the raise in price, which has long been in contemplation.

NEW HOUSE IN TILLAMOOK.

C. C. Smith, owner of the Star theater, Tillamook, Ore., announces his intention to build a bigger theater in that city and is now having his plans prepared. A new logging road is building into the Tillamook timber and Mr. Smith sees enough business ahead to run two houses.

BANNER MAN STILL THERE.

Commencing many months ago at the inception of the break between the Operators' Union and the Alhambra theater, because one of the owners of the theater took over the operating, Fred W. Fry still carries a banner in front of the house announcing it to be unfair to union labor. Mr. Fry has, however, cut down his appearances to three a week. He carries a vest pocket camera and snaps any patron of the house whom he believes is a union man. The union fine for patronizing the house is $5. Manager Tebbetts advises that his partner was not permitted to join the Operators' Union with full voting privileges because he was also a theater owner, and this caused the break.

Incidentally, it is said that one of the reasons for the dissolution of the Portland Exhibitors' League was the fact that some of the suburban exhibitors employed non-union operators and the downtown men employ union help entirely.

PORTLAND BRIEFS.

Over six thousand people in one day! That was the attendance at the Globe theater when the first installment of "Neal of the Navy" was run, Sept. 16. The show continued until midnight and at 11 o'clock there were still people standing in the foyer. Hatbands and buttons were distributed to the children in the audience.

There is an unconfirmed rumor that a large picture house will be erected at 3d and Morrison streets, the site of the Alisky building recently destroyed by fire. This is an excellent location for a large five-cent house.

J. Baum, recently engaged as road man for the Northwest Feature Film Company, returned from a trip down the Columbia River and reports a big demand for features in the territory covered. The Northwest Company is booking "The Spoilers" for return dates.

S. Morton Cohen, the pioneer of the film business in Portland, and now engaged in theatrical enterprises in New York City, is a visitor in Portland.

Other visitors during the week were: E. E. McDonald, Arcadia theater, Dayton, Ore.; R. C. Bacon, Columbia theater, Clatskanine; J. S. Clinger, People's theater, Mt. Angel; C. E. Snall, Majestic theater, Corvallis; Thomas Miller, Grand theater, Camas, Wash.; J. B. Kamberger, Beaver theater, Beaverton, Ore.

Charles Scram, Grand theater, Oregon City, reports he is making some changes in his house and will soon be equipped to throw a larger picture. He has booked "Neal of the Navy," commencing Sept. 22.

George Blye has purchased Ye Liberty theater, Salem, Ore.

F. C. Weskell has opened the Bungalow theater, North Powder, Ore.

SPOKANE NEWS LETTER.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MANAGER JAMES McCONAHEY of the Best Show is running the General Film releases. He opened with his first release Tuesday, September 21.

E. F. Emmick is putting up a new moving picture theater at Pullman, Wash., which will seat 400. It is understood the cost will be about $8,000.

I. M. Binnard, manager of the Theatorium, Lewiston, Idaho, reports that he ran the first installment of the General Film company's newest serial, "The Goddess," and that it broke all previous house records. This is a 15-chapter serial featuring Anita Stewart in the title role.

"Ambition," featuring Charlie Chaplin and several of the Keystone players, and Dorothy Davenport in "Five Hundred Dollars Reward," drew well at the Spokane.

Marguerite Clark, heroine in "Helene of the North," who appeared at the Clemmer for the week ending September 18, again proved her popularity with Spokane audiences as she played to large houses each day.

Emily Stevens in "Destiny, or The Soul of a Woman," proved a great success at the Liberty.

"The Two Orphans," with Theda Bara in the leading role, made a hit at the Casino.

Elsie Jane Wilson and Harold Lockwood in "The Lure of the Mask," was shown to large audiences at the Lyric.

"Shadows From the Past," with Mabel Trunnelle and Marc MacDermott, which was shown at the Class A, delighted the audiences.

Charlie Chaplin in "His Night Out," and two dramas were the offerings at the Majestic last week.

TOM NORTH, SEATTLE HUSTLER.

Tom North.

Tom North, manager of the Seattle branch of the V-L-S-E, has compiled a sheet of publicity for Big Four features measuring 100 feet in length. Not the least interesting part of this exhibit is the article on "The Juggernaut," with a two column cut of Anita Stewart, which Mr. North succeeded in getting on the first time, probably, that any amusement man ever obtained front page publicity for a "story" of this nature. After Mr. North had induced a Seattle real estate man to erect a building especially for the Big Four's exchange in Seattle—the first in the country to be constructed exclusively for this purpose—he induced the mayor and all the dignitaries of Seattle, accompanied by a brass band, to come out and help lay the corner stone. These exploits are winning for the Seattle manager the attention of the entire film industry on the Coast.

INDIAN SINGER TO LEAD IN RED MAN FILM.

By Muriel Lee, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

PRINCESS Tsianina Redfeather, Denver's Indian song bird, is to pose for some truly western motion pictures which are to be taken by the Columbia Amusement company before the thirtieth of October. Princess Redfeather has won much fame with her most wonderful voice, which is heard at its best advantage in Cadman's Indian songs.

The photoplay has been written by Mrs. Adrienne Roncolle Wormington, the playwright. Mr. J. W. Early, who has lived for twenty-two years among the Indians in the Black Hills and Deadwood, and who knows their every characteristic, is to be the director. Princess Redfeather will have the leading role. With this triple combination, the pictures should indeed be a success, and should be more typical of the Indians and of the West than almost any western story that has been filmed. The director is well pleased that this is Princess Tsianina's first experience in moving pictures, as he feels she will then enter more thoroughly into the spirit of the western drama, for she will be unspoiled by the work of any who might have tried to place her in a western play.

It has been planned to have pictures laid in the beauty spots along the D. and R. G., and along the Moffat Road. Then some scenes are to be taken, as well, among the famous Morrison red rocks, which will form such a magnificent and fitting background to the Indian scenes.

ROYAL THEATER CHANGES HANDS.

The Royal theater, at 243 Broadway, has just been purchased by J. T. Blunkall, from Twin Falls, Idaho, and will from now on be known as Blunkall Brothers and Welch theater. Mr. Sam Sturtevant, who was the former owner of the theater, is going to Grand Junction to look after his theaters there. Mr. Sturtevant is well known through the middle west as a moving picture man, as he owns several houses, and has also had the state rights in Michigan and Missouri for the picture, of Helen Gardener as "Cleopatra."

ARTHUR KANE STOPS OFF TO SEE DENVER.

Arthur Kane, pioneer moving picture man, one of the best known and most popular men in the moving picture business, stopped off in Denver for a day early in the week. He is on a tour of the United States with his family.

CARL RAY VISITS DENVER.

Carl Ray, who is the proprietor of several moving picture houses in Michigan, and also one in Cheyenne, the Amuse theater, is in town calling on his old friends. Mr. Ray is also a producer of pictures. He has a studio in Los Angeles where he has made some very splendid pictures.

TWO BIG FEATURES COMING.

"The Birth of a Nation" is coming to Denver. This is a certainty, but it is not as yet known just when it will be here, although it will probably be in a couple of months. With the two big pictures coming, "The Birth of a Nation," and "The Battle Cry of Peace," Denver moving picture public has a treat in store.

PICTURE HOUSE IN LITTLETON.

Littleton is to have its first moving picture house. Although a town of 2,000, it has never boasted a moving picture house. Pictures, dramatics, etc., have always been held in the so-called town hall, but now it is to have a theater of which it may well be proud. Fred Duncan has been engaged as manager.

ALL DALLAS EXCHANGES TO CHARGE FOR PAPER.

Exchanges Will Be Able to Rearrange Schedule of Profits and Exhibitors Will Have Clean Paper.

By S. G. Parker, Dallas Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

OST of the exchanges in Dallas have been charging for paper for some months, among them being the Metro, Fox, Paramount and V-L-S-E. It is understood that every exchange in the city is arranging to have every customer they have on the "pay for paper" plan by October 1st.

In New Orleans, all the exchanges inaugurated this plan on September 1st, and it is meeting with good success.

The exchange managers in Dallas have decided that they can no longer afford to have paper mounted and furnish it free with their productions than can a department store give a man of pair of shoes and hat free because he has bought a suit of clothes.

Some of the paper that is mounted and shipped out on the "free-use" plan is never returned; about 30 per cent. of it is returned in good condition, and the remainder that is returned is in such condition that its use with other exhibitors brings forth a howl that can be heard, figuratively speaking, from the Gulf to Canada.

The new plan will not work a hardship upon exhibitors, it is pointed out, because then the exchanges can know exactly the amount of money they are receiving on film rental, and arrange their schedule of profits accordingly. Also, the exhibitors, each of them, may know absolutely that they will have new, clean paper, and only that of it that they may absolutely need.

During the old plan it was not at all out of the ordinary for an exhibitor booking a feature at $15 per day to ask for 25 ones, 15 threes, eight or ten sixes and two or three twenty-fours—all of which the exchange had mounted and furnished free—and part of which, very likely, the exchange never saw after the booking was filled.

The absolute loss, which, of course, the exhibitors are paying, speaking generally, by raised film rentals, through paper in the Southwestern territory, is said to run into many thousands of dollars per annum.

MUTUAL AT FORT SMITH.

The Mutual is opening a new office at Fort Smith, Ark., which will be in charge of M. S. White, until recently manager of the United Film Service at Oklahoma City, Okla. The Fort Smith Mutual office will be a sub-office of Oklahoma City.

Fort Smith has been the home of a sub-office of the Oklahoma Universal exchange for some time, in charge of J. H. Crowley, and the vicinity was covered for the Mutual by Mr. Taylor.

The opening of this office will make for better service for Mutual customers in the close proximity of Fort Smith.

ARTHUR G. HULL TO MANAGE OKLAHOMA UNITED.

Upon the resignation of M. S. White as manager of the Oklahoma City office of the United, E. T. Peter, president of the United Program Film Service of Texas, the parent concern of the Oklahoma branch, visited Oklahoma City and installed in the manager's chair Mr. Arthur G. Hull, a well-known film man.

FOX REPRESENTATIVES VISIT W. M. BYRD.

Mr. Slayden, special representative of the Fox Film corporation, New York, is visiting at the Dallas exchange of the Box Office Attraction Co. In addition to Mr. Slayden there are other prominent eastern film men of that concern here, among them Mr. Spitzer, formerly manager of the Kansas City office, and now a special representative; Mr. Riddick and Mr. Schwearin. These gentlemen are conferring with the new manager, W. M. Byrd.

NEW TRIANGLE OFFICE ALMOST READY.

The new Triangle Film corporation's exchange in Dallas, though not entirely completed, is in such a finished state that L. B. Remy, local manager, has "moved in, feet and all," and now holds forth behind the big mahogany. (It is whispered about confidentially that the feet are supported gracefully under the B. Mahog. by a silk-covered sofa cushion, the present of one of L. B.'s friends of feminine gender).

KLEINE OFFICE SOON TO MOVE.

E. J. Moskowitz, manager of the George Kleine Attractions' office in Dallas, says that his concern will soon move to its new and larger quarters at 1814½ Commerce street.

WOMEN WANT STRICTER CENSORSHIP.

By Carl J. Ketchum, Ottawa Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

A STRICTER supervision of moving pictures exhibited in Ontario and the appointment of women censors on the provincial board of censors is the latest demand of the Ottawa Local Council of Women. The request is embodied in a resolution passed by the Ottawa Local Council this week, to be sent up to Toronto for presentation to the annual meeting of the provincial organization, of which it is a branch, and which is one of the most prominent and influential bodies of women in the Dominion, which takes place the latter part of October.

While the Local Council of Women may advocate a representation on the board, it is not altogether certain that the provincial government will replace the men for women. The present board has been very capably carrying out its duty and there will not likely be any change for a time to come, particularly in the direction suggested by the organization. The appointment of women would be a new departure in Canada.

"BIRTH OF NATION" FILM AT CANADIAN EXPOSITION.

"The Birth of a Nation," the big picture, was witnessed in Ottawa last week by probably one hundred thousand people. It was used as the chief evening feature in front of the grandstand here at the Central Canada Exhibition, the directors for the first time departing from vaudeville and the other usual exhibition attractions, in favor of the moving picture.

ANNIVERSARY OF IMPERIAL.

The Imperial theater in Ottawa, as well known as "Canada's Theater Beautiful," last week celebrated its second anniversary. The most imposing moving picture houses in the Capital, and regarded as one of the best houses in Canada, the Imperial management has met with nothing but distinct success. It is one of the chain of Mark Brock theaters and has been showing to capacity houses for every day of the last two years.

PICTURES FOR RECRUITS.

The novel and successful scheme of Capt. Dolph Thoburn, prominent recruiting officer here, in arranging a program of moving pictures, which he has been showing on the wall of his building, on one of the main thoroughfares of the city, to stimulate the enlistment of recruits for the front, willl probably be taken up in other cities.

ENLARGEMENT OF ST. GEORGES.

The reconstruction of St. George's theater, 299 Bank street, will be commenced shortly, when what is now an upstairs nickel show will be transformed into one of the largest houses in Ottawa.

VISITORS FOR METRO AND UNIVERSAL.

Herbert Lubin, Montreal representative for the new Metro program, was in Ottawa this week. He succeeded in securing the signature of Mr. Ken Finlay here on a contract for the Metro program, which will be used in the Regent theater, to be opened on December 1. He is also booking Tilly's Punctured Romance.

James Finch, Toronto representative of the Universal Film Exchange, was here this week talking to local managers. He has been doing a good business with Ontario managers.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" DRAWS CANADIANS.

Censors Deleted Two Battle Scenes—Rest Went.

By David K. Billings, Toronto Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

COMING over into Canada where considerable apathy was shown regarding its success, 'The Birth of a Nation" has again shown its abilty to draw top prices and big crowds in a first-class theatre. With war times and its American plot, fears were expressed that it would be a failure and Manager Solman of the Alexandra theater refused to book the film for more than one week until it had been tested.

To the astonishment of all, the picture created a record, and for the first time during the last year people were turned away from the theater on two consecutive nights and the criticisms given by the press were more laudatory than any stage star has received for many a day. The picture has scored a triumph in a city which boasted it never would accept two dollar pictures. The usual "kick" was registered by the negro population before the appearance of the picture, but with the exception of the elimination of one or two of the battle scenes, the picture was untouched by the censors.

EXHIBITORS' ASSOCIATION HOLD PICNIC.

The first annual picnic of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association was held recently at Niagar Falls, and over 150 people took the trip across the lake.

The association has been holding regular meetings and many matters of small importance have been solved. Its object of protection has been more than realized.

FILMS AT BIG CANADIAN FAIR.

For the first time on record moving pictures were featured as an attraction at the Canadian National Exhibition, the world's largest annual fair, held in Toronto. The pictures, some of which were supplied by the Universal company, and others by the British War Office, showed war scenes and also views in many big amunition factories in Great Britain. Over 200,000 people saw the pictures screened in front of the immense grand stand during each week of the two-weeks fair.

LEON BRICK TURNS MANAGEMENT OVER TO SON.

Mr. Leon Brick of the Garden theater has relinquished the managership of the house that he built, in favor of his son, and is now looking after one of the Buffalo theaters of the Mark Brock syndicate.

PATHE FEATURE FILM SYNDICATE OF TORONTO.

Manager Travis Optimistic About Business—Prices Are Lower, But Shows Are needed.

One of the newest and at the same time one of the busiest film exchanges in Toronto at present is without doubt that of the Pathe Feature Film syndicate of Quebec. The new manager, James Travis, who succeeded Maurice Kauffman, has managed to build up the business to be one of the largest and most aggressive of the sixteen exchanges in Toronto. His latest release, "Neal of the Navy," is being shown at Shea's Hippodrome as a headline attraction. This is the largest theater in Toronto. Mr. Travis has a road man to cover the province of Ontario, W. Davidson, and he reports that busines is obtainable throughout the province if it is gone after the right way and with the right stuff. Prices, however, are about half what they were this time last year, although all the theatres are drawing fairly large crowds, many have been forced, on account of financial conditions, to lower prices. The average price that a five-reel feature brings now is about $25 a day.

A special private exhibition of the first few episodes of "Neal of the Navy," and also of the Pathe Gold Seal picture, "The Galloper," was given at the Strand.

PICTURE SCHOOL NUISANCE.

Toronto has been visited by the moving picture school, the arch enemy to the moving picture industry and which does nothing other than give the entire business a bad name. A man by the name of Beverly Dawn, who gave his origin as London, England, started a school here and called it the Photoplayers Studio. He advertised extensively and made promises of big advertising contracts to the various newspapers, evidently fearing that they would investigate. He promised in his advertisements large salaries and easy jobs, including "all sorts of chances to get married" after girls or women had taken the course at his school. His charge of thirty dollars for a course of lessons was supplemented by a demand for two dozen photographs at fifteen dollars a dozen, of which he received one-half.

He received no opposition for several weeks, as the public quietly believed his tales of a scarcity of actors, and on his own statement to your correspondent's representative, cleaned up $1,285 during the first three months of the school's operation. During the first twenty days of September he claims to have made $631 clear profit. These figures are probably right, as many ignorant "students" have flocked to him. He is now looking for somebody to buy a half interest in the business as The Toronto Sunday World has given him some rather unwelcome publicity, and he fears his days are numbered. He wants $1,000 for a half interest, while he says he is going to start several similar schools in various American cities.

THE PRINCESS AT MONTREAL BURNED.

"Birth of a Nation" Was to Show There—Spectacle Will Be Seen at the Arena.

By Gerald Gallagher, Montreal Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

FIRE at the Princess theater, Montreal, about three days before D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," was scheduled to open. Fire did damage to the house to the extent of about fifty thousand dollars.

Nothing is yet definitely known as to the origin of the fire, but from the fact that it started near the front of the top gallery, it is supposed to have been caused by defective insulation on one of the wires connected at this point with the limelight apparatus. Considerable gossip was caused by the coincidence of the fire with the opposition on the part of the colored population to the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation." The fire occurred at a time when no audience was in the house. Following the lead taken by a local paper, we would like to suggest that Montreal exhibitors take more interest in their capability of coping with such a situation.

It was only decided at the eleventh hour to screen the Griffith picture at the Arena. The Arena, since it seats five thousand people, is devoted solely to athletic functions and such productions as musical concerts. Besides this, the town of Westmount, in which it is located, extorts a license fee of $200 per night. So it will be seen that, considering the delayed press campaign and the difficulties involved in screening such a pretentious offering, "The Birth of a Nation" has happened along in a very unlucky time. We wish it unbounded success, and extend our sympathy to Mr. Wright, the manager of the Princess.

MUTUAL OFFICE UNDER NEW MANAGER.

The general manager for Canada of the Mutual Film company has left for Kansas City, where he will join the new Triangle forces. On his departure he was presented by the local staff with a beautiful and serviceable token of their esteem. Mr. Cummings, always a courteous and thoroughly agreeable gentleman, will be missed here. He has our best wishes for his success.

Phil Kaufman has joined the Mutual ranks as general manager in Mr. Cummings' place. Mr. Kaufman hitherto has been general manager for the Famous Players.

WEEK RUN POLICY AT COLONIAL

The Colonial theater has the unique distinction of being the first local theater to make a set policy of giving a big feature an entire week's run. Prices will not be raised, and there is every indication that the idea will meet with the public's favor. The first two weeks saw World Film features screened at this house. Pathe's Gold Rooster feature, "The Galloper," was the attraction the third week. World Film Corporation features have been booked and will be shown in the future, among them being "Trilby."

Out in the West End the lobby of the New Grand has been retouched. Formerly there used to be a flight of stairs; but now these have been done away with, and a sloping floor substituted. The management seems to have made the best of a difficult problem. Business seems to be picking up at the New Grand. The policy still is two Paramount features a week.

Mark Schlesinger is now managing the Francais theater. Since Mr. Schlesinger's management, the house has adopted popular-price vaudeville and pictures.

W. R. THOMPSON MANAGING THE LONDON.

The London theater is now under the management of W. R. Thompson. Mr. Thompson is from Toronto, having been publicity man for the Universal. He has had experience in all lines of the show business, and at one time was advance agent for Ringling Brothers' Circus. He promises that things will hum around the London shortly, so we will wait till then to make further announcements.

CRAWFORD LEASES THE CASCO AT PORTLAND, MAINE.

By John P. Flanagan, Maine Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

EXHIBITOR E. L. CRAWFORD, of late manager of the Bath opera house and of the Cumberland theater in Brunswick, has leased the Casco theater, Portland, Maine. Mr. Crawford was associated with Moxley L. Blumenberg of Portland, in the successful career of this theater for three years. They opened the house and conducted it successfully with motion pictures for attractions. Mr. Crawford is busily engaged in refitting the theater in every respect where needful, and announces a policy of presenting the feature films, of which Carmen is a fitting example. Details of this engagement will be issued from time to time previous to the initial performance.

Geraldine Farrar in grand opera is to be the screen attraction for the initial production in the Casco, when Carmen will be offered in elaborate habilaments and with orchestral effects.

"BIRTH OF NATION" COMING TO LEWISTON.

The "Birth of a Nation" will be presented at the Empire theater, at Lewiston, the entire week of October 4, with a special orchestra of twenty pieces. On the first three days of the week special trains will be run from Norway, Livermore Falls and Farmington, to accommodate those who wish to see this production.

A FOX COMPANY AT PORTLAND.

A company from the Fox players, of New York, is engaged in making a six-reel marine film near Portland Harbor and Cape Shore. As leading man in the picture, Ralph Kellard will be seen, and opposite him Miss Jule Power. The juvenile role is done by William Davidson, who has a summer cottage at Orr's Island, and Edwards Davis does the heavy part. Included among the cast are Dorothy Green is ingenue.

PINE TREE NOTES.

The Graphic theater, at Bangor, Grant and Burns proprietors, is using United Film service six nights a week.

Miss Grace Chase, auditor at the office of the United Film Company, Boston, was in Bangor during the past week on a visit to the new Bangor branch.

The Strand, at Ellsworth, Mrs. Imogene Pettingill, proprietor, is using United service one night a week.

The Casino at Bar Harbor has taken on Universal service.

H. Dillon, of Brownville, proprietor of the Majestic, was a recent visitor to Bangor.

Fred P. Chase, proprietor of the Orono, has signed up for complete Universal service; also for the Annette Kellerman feature.

The Peerless Amusement Company, at Kingfield, is using Universal service one night a week.

Pictures have been resumed at the Augusta opera house.

AMONG ANDERSON, INDIANA, THEATERS.

By Leon Louiso, Special Correspondent for the Moving Picture World at Anderson, Ind.

TWO recent changes in motion picture theaters here have assisted greatly to elevate the already high standard of picture houses in Anderson. The newly enlarged Meridian theater was a step made necessary by the increasing demand of the patrons of the house. Mr. F. G. Heller, the manager, has been busy during the past few weeks and he is just getting into his new office. Originally the house seated 274 persons. Because of the advantageous location of the theater and of the increasing demand it was decided to enlarge the house. An addition was added to the back of the old house. In building this a higher ceiling was secured, thus giving better ventilating facilities, and adding to the effect of the interior dimensions. The seating capacity was increased from 274 to 452. The ventilating system is one of the best in the city. The eight attaches of the theater all work to the end that they may secure the best comfort and entertainment for the patrons. The program includes Paramount pictures, "The Goddess" serial and Equitable subjects.

The newly remodeled and renovated theater on the south side of the public square, which was formerly known as the Nickelodeon, but which is now changed to the Isis, is another advance for Anderson picture houses. The management, W. R. Walker & Son, who took over the house, is one of many years of experience. The Walkers installed the first five-cent house in the State of Kentucky eleven years ago in Owensboro, and they have been in the business in various cities since then. After taking possession of the theater they decided to "sweep clean," therefore they closed the house and when they were ready for the opening it was indeed a new theater. The front is done in plastic and relief work, which was put up by the National Plastic and Relief Co., of Cincinnati, O. The display frames are not over-showy and the general effect is pleasing. The interior has been entirely redecorated. The seating capacity is given as 297. Two Power's 6-A machines are used. With a $1,500 Wurlitzer orchestra the music is furnished by Walter Jackson and Owen Fowler. A drinking fountain is near the entrance and the prices are five and ten cents. The General Film regular service, together with some feature pictures, are used.

OHIO NEWS NOTES.

William Tallman of the Ceramic theater, East Liverpool, O., has redecorated and arranged his house for pictures. He has installed a projecting machine on the first balcony and will present feature pictures.

Peter Tender, owner of the American theater, Alliance, O., is opening another house which will be ready within two weeks.

The Dome theater, Youngstown, has added a balcony, increasing the seating capacity nearly twofold.

M. Greenhut, Cleveland, has placed the Majestic theater, Lorain, up for sale or lease. He explains that business in Cleveland will not permit his personal attention to the Lorain house.

Michael Moran has opened a new theater on Himrod avenue, East Youngstown.

J. R. Angel has taken the management of the Royal theater, Payne, O.

FILM EXCHANGE OPENS NEW BRANCH.

The Greater New York Film Rental company will open branch offices at 616 Columbia building for the distribution of a program to consist of Selig, Lubin, Biograph, Vitagraph, Essanay, Kalem and Edison productions. Arrangements for the Cleveland branch have been made by I. J. Schmertz. The branch will be in charge of H. B. Decker.

A Big Factor in Rents

Cleveland Real Estate Men Realize How Big a Part Is Played in City's Land and Rent Values by Moving Picture Enterprises—Some of the Growing Exchanges That Have Taken More Office Space.

By J. D. Raridan, Ohio Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MOTION picture enterprises are a growing factor of interest from a real estate and brokerage standpoint in Cleveland and other cities of Ohio. Exchanges and distributing offices are occupying a great deal of space in downtown buildings and a movement is now apparent generally to expand these divisions. Aside from this there are more than 200 theaters in Cleveland and good locations in thickly populated neighborhoods always are in demand as film theater sites.

C. G. Thompson, manager of the Victor Film company, distributors of Universal productions, has leased the entire second floor of the Flatiron building, at the junction of Prospect avenue and Huron road, and is remodeling to fit the particular needs of his exchange. A reception room, offices, shipping and receiving rooms, advertising and lithograph departments and a film inspection room are included in the changes.

The World Film Corporation recently secured a lease on an entire floor of the new Belmont building under construction in Prospect avenue. Local offices will be moved from the Columbia building early in October. A number of other changes are contemplated by other film distributing organizations.

Downtown offices have been leased by the new Federal Film Company, recently organized, to produce pictures in Cleveland. A studio will be secured soon.

ELSIE JANIS ENTERTAINED AT THE METROPOLITAN.

Elsie Janes, starring at the Opera house, Cleveland, last week in "Miss-Information," was her own "audience" at a private exhibition of her latest picture production, "'Twas Ever Thus," at the Metropolitan theater. This was Miss Janis' first opportunity to view the recent Bosworth production. With her mother, members of her company, and other theatrical folk in the city at the time, she was the guest of Manager Fred E. Johnson at the Metropolitan. In addition to her own film production, she was permitted to see Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen" and Lou Tellegen in "The Explorer," when these two features were screened.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" IN OHIO.

If the Ohio Board of Censors permit "The Birth of a Nation" to be shown in this state, the film will first be shown at Dayton, going to Columbus and finally reaching Cleveland in the early spring, motion picture exhibitors have been given to understand. An engagement of fifteen weeks has been booked at the Opera house, Cleveland, when censored and available.

THE GRAND BECOMES THE LYCEUM.

The Gand theater, East 9th street and Bolivar road, will be reopened October 2 and will hereafter be known as the Lyceum. It will be operated by the Metropolitan Amusement company, of which George Hausheer and Max Faetkenhauer are principal owners. The Lyceum will offer first run feature releases and a musical revue. "Trilby" has been booked for the premiere.

TRIANGLE LOCATES IN THE SINCERE BUILDING.

The Triangle Film corporation has leased the entire seventh floor of the Sincere building, Cleveland, for district offices, under the management of H. A. Bandy. Many progressive Ohio theaters have already made application for Triangle productions, but the policy with regard to Cleveland is understood not to have been determined. In the aim of this corporation to establish a chain of $2 theaters over the country, it is said the lease of a down town theater is sought here. Business men interested in motion pictures have been given to understand that in the event Triangle is unable to obtain the proper theater under lease a location will be secured and a theater built.

PATRONS WANTED FILMS, NOT VAUDEVILLE.

The Duchess, Euclid avenue and East 57th street, Cleveland, has abandoned the contemplated policy of vaudeville and pictures, substituting instead feature photoplay productions. This action was determined, the management announces, by the attitude of Duchess patrons. A vote was taken in the theater recently and 90 per cent. of the patrons favored a single bill of features, rather than a split bill of pictures and vaudeville. In consequence, starting the first week in October, Metro features will be shown the first three days of each week and Fox Film corporation productions the latter half of the week. An orchestra of thirteen pieces will furnish music at each show. Moderate prices will be maintained, with a reduction for both matinee and night shows from the present box office scale.

DAVE L. SCHUMANN TO MANAGE THE NEW DENISON SQUARE.

The Denison Square is the name of the newest Cleveland photoplay theater. It is located at Denison avenue and W. 25th street, under the management of Dave L. Schumann. The theater takes rank with other high class houses in the city. Mr. Schumann's policy of feature productions promises to win an enviable patronage. Mr. Schumann has made it a point that "redheads" are to shine at the Denison Square. Every employe of the theater, including cashier, doorman and ushers, have red hair. The stage has been arranged as a garden, with several small fountains and myriad lights glowing upon the foliage and flowers. One hundred cages, each containing a singing canary are distributed about the "garden."

HENN BROTHERS GET LEASE ON NEW HOMESTEAD THEATER.

Henn Bros., pioneer Cleveland exhibitors, have taken a ten-year lease on the Homestead theater, under construction for Theodore Schmitt, owner, at Detroit avenue and W. 118th street. The new house will seat approximately 1,000 and will be fitted out with every modern theater convenience.

BRIEF NOTES.

Safety Director A. A. Benesch, of Cleveland, asked the Ohio censor board to delete picture burlesquing policemen, on the ground that such mockery tends to exert a bad influence. In answer, however, C. C. Williams, member of the board, said the board would be unable to comply with this request.

The Alhambra theater, E. 105th street and Euclid avenue, Cleveland, has been redecorated throughout and a stage "set" installed, designed to represent the season of fall. The Alhambra management has made application for the first run release of "Damaged Goods" though the date of booking has not yet been announced.

VITAGRAPH.

THE GODDESS (A Complete Synopsis of the Vitagraph Serial Is Published Herewith).—To further their interests, three powerful millionaires have brought Celestia, a beautiful girl, up to believe that she has been sent from Heaven to reform the world. After meeting Tommy Barclay, son of one of the millionairs, she has started her work of reform, meeting with success. A huge strike is in progress in the Pennsylvania coal fields. Tommy also at work on reform, becomes involved in this strike and a wife of one of the leaders falls in love with him. She succeeds in getting him into a compromising situation and the husband tells the miners Tommy is a spy. They are about to hang him when Celestia, who has gone to the striking town to try and prevent violence by her presence, rescues him.

Tommy Barclay is elected leader of the striking miners. He and Carson and Gunsdorf visit the mine stockade to try and make some agreement with Silas Kehr, the mine owner. Arrived there, through Gunsdorf's fighting spirit they get in trouble and are locked up, Gunsdorf and Carson handcuffed, in a room. Celestia is also locked in a room. The fight between the miners and strikers begin, Kehr urging his men on. Freddy, the ferret, finally makes his way into the stockade by climbing on to one of their supply wagons, concealing himself in a potato bag, and thus being carried through the gate. Hiding in a barrel, a bomb is kicked near it and he is blown near the window in which Celestia is looking out calling for help. He breaks down the door and rescues her. Meanwhile Gunsdorf, growing impatient, starts banging on their door, and breaks it down just as Freddy is trying to get Celestia away. There is a happy reunion between Celestia and Tommy. Celestia stops the firing, speaks to the miners, telling them about the big corporation, etc., and the men become so enthused with her plan, that cheering and shouting, they send for Kehr, who arrive and hearing her plans, tells her that he will agree with the suggestions if the other millionaires do. Sends telegram to Barclay, and Barclay, Blackstone and Semmes immediately start for Bitumen. Arriving, they hear the plan, and immediately agree with it. Celestia elects Barclay as the head, and starts canvassing for him, all over the country. Everywhere she is greeted with good will, and her preaching listened to with eagerness and great interest.

At Eastern Junction, Tommy, taking the stand against Celestia, tries to the best of his ability to preach against Celestia and her cause, but the people leave him, and become interested in what she is saying. Mary tells her story to him, how Celestia is a fraud, impostor, etc., and he believing, goes to her car to tell her so. He finds Stilleter, who has found his passion for Celestia becoming more and more violent, and has hypnotized her to make her love him. Tommy breaks in and breaks the hypnotic spell. Stilleter leaves angry, watches the car from behind a nearby tree. Celestia pleads with Tommy that she is very tired and he exits. Stilleter returns, hypnotizes her, telling her to meet him at five o'clock, and follow the orders of the driver. Celestia falls asleep. Meanwhile, Mary meets Mrs. Gunsdorf, induces her, through her desire for the big diamond ring, to enter the car and try to kill Celestia. Freddy, watching over Celestia on steps of the car, sees her enter, and catches her hand just as she is about to commit the crime. Celestia sends him away, speaks to Mrs. Gunsdorf, makes her see things in the right light, and forgives her. Mrs. Gunsdorf, meeting Mary, denounces her. Her angry voice is carried to Tommy, and he comes forward, demands to hear the rest. Mrs. Gunsdorf tells him. Mary, angry, pleads with him. He expresses a desire never to see or speak to her again and leaves her. Celestia tells him of Freddy's rescue. They are interrupted by the alarm clock ringing the hour of five. Celestia pleads an engagement. Arguments pro and con follow, and we see entrancing visions of the Terpsichorean Art as it was in days past but both sides are unconvinced. Dancing is dancing, however, and the fascinating Maxixe finally gets into the old folks' blood so that they feel young once more, and when next we see them they are dancing it at one of those once-scorned tango teas.

Several weeks later Jones' money is all gone and he accepts a job as a hack-driver. Meanwhile, Mary, his "widow," has had a fortune left her by a rich uncle, and coming out of the lawyer's office, she gets into Jones' hack and drives to the marble works to order a tombstone for her departed husband. Jones succeeds in changing the epitaph from "gone, but not forgotten, to "gone, but not for good," in the entry book, then hearing of his wife's wealth, decides to "come back." The attraction proves mutual and he takes her to supper, after which she leaves him abruptly and returns home alone. The following evening he attends a ball at the Mexican Secretary of War's house, and the hostess proves to be the lady whom he met at the opera. She is an American-born woman, and having found among her husband's papers the document relating to the leasing of the island and proving he is a traitor, she shows Milton a copy of it. Her husband's brutality towards her has become unbearable and she determines to thwart his traitorous plan against the land of her birth. They are seen talking together by the husband, who insults Milton and is knocked down. ## EDISON.

THE WIDOW'S BREEZY SUIT (Oct. 13).—The cast: Sally Crute, Raymond McKee, Pat O'Malley, Guido Colucci, Yale Benner, James Harris, Harry Eytinge, Mabel Dwight.

The day of the widow's arrival at the seaside resort is a "red-letter" day in the career of the half dozen men who are enslaved by the beauty of her face and form. As one man, they vow to win her. Her suitors are of every variety—tall and short, fat and thin, young and old. Prominent among them is Albertus Simpleton, who lives up to his name. By feigning to faint, he succeeds in becoming acquainted with the widow, who hurries to his assistance when he "collapses." This leads to his introducing his men friends. Together, they start out gay "doings," but each time Albertus gets "stuck" and is forced to pay the bills.

Meantime, each is trying to win the first place in the widow's regard. Mr. Gout "saves" her when she is about to fall off a board-walk two feet higher than the beach, and some time later they discover that the veiled lady whom they treat to refreshments while she is occupying the widow's wheel-chair is none other than the widow's colored maid. Finally, on the widow's last day at the beach, she goes in bathing again, and while in deep water is taken with a cramp. She has gone in alone on this occasion, and now calls for help. She is heard by one of her followers, who, however, is very slow in going to her assistance. Two of the others also see her, but they hurry off to get a life-saver, their motto evidently being "Let George do it."

On this occasion, George's other name is Albertus, and after a little hesitation, this valorous youth jumps into the water and swims to her assistance. He is finally successful in bringing her safely to shore. The widow delays her departure one more day, and as she is leaving they all come to bid her good-bye. When Albertus presents his card up to this time, she has known him only by his first name the widow laughingly informs him that she is his late father's widow, she having married his father while Albertus was touring in Italy. For the benefit of her other suitors, the widow adds that she is quite content to remain a widow for a while longer, at least.

GLADIOLA (Special—Four Parts—Oct. 15). The cast: Viola Dana, Charles Sutton, Jessie Stevens, Robert Conness, Pat O'Malley, Eldean Steuart.

Gladiola Bain, a pretty and unsophisticated country girl, falls in love with Ned Williams, a young bachelor from the city, who, by his own confession is "just a selfish idler, who has everything in life but love." On the other hand, there is Ab, the farm boy, who has adored Gladiola ever since they were children. Ab realizes that Ned is gradually winning Gladiola away from him, but he believes that the young man from the city is honorable and really in love with Gladiola, so does not press his own case, since she is so obviously in love with Ned.

Eventually, in the face of opposition on her father's part, Gladiola elopes with Ned. They are married and live in luxury in the city. Then, one day, another actor comes into this little life drama in the person of a woman who claims and eventually proves herself—to be Ned Williams' wife, from whom he ran away before meeting Gladiola. Stunned by the news, Gladiola returns home to face the scorn of the villagers, and in the old farmhouse her baby is born. Later, she gets news that Ned's real wife has died, and that, dying, she has begged Ned to right the wrong he has done Gladiola by marrying her, now that she, by her death, sets him free. Ned returns to the farm and begs Gladiola to let him make her his wife, but she declares that she will have nothing more to do with him, and that their child shall never know of his father's deceit. Genuinely repentant, but powerless to make her change her mind, Ned leaves her forever, and later the faithful Ab wins her promise to let him be a father to the child and her own protector for life.

terpret her words. Ethel is then called to go riding with the guests, but again she cannot find the owner of the hand, as all the men wear riding gloves. During the ride, Fairchilds is thrown from his horse. Ryse and Weber hastily dismount, and help him to arise. Weber is seen picking up the Emerald God from the spot and putting it in his pocket. Upon returning home, Ethel discovers that Elston is there, and knows of the robbery, having telephoned the agency again. She has him make Rajab remove his glove, but only to discover that the Hindu's hands are perfect. Ethel, chagrined, rushes to her room for the photograph to show Elston. When she returns, she sees Weber in the library with the Emerald God in his hand. In the presence of Elston, Ethel, and her superior, Weber declares he found the idol. Ethel is about to denounce him when she discovers that he is nervously toying with his gloves, and that he is not the man! She is greatly relieved, and shows the photograph to Elston, who immediately recognizes the hand as that of—Ryse! The latter, confronted with the evidence, can do naught but confess that he is guilty. Ethel, ashamed of her unjust suspicions of Weber, turns to him, and the Raffles finds in the love of the good woman an incentive to lead a nobler life in the future.

Jack Darrow sees them and calls for help. Jack takes a rope and just as Heinie and Lizzie are about to go over the falls he throws it over Heinie's head and the crowd pulls them to shore. Jack takes Lizzie away. Heinie starts to remonstrate with Jack for stealing his girl and is about to strike Jack, when Jack knocks him down. Heinie now is sore and makes a deal with an Italian for a knife, gun and bomb, agreeing to give him $10 for them, but when he gets the firearms in his possession he refused to pay the Italian. He kicks him away and runs in search of Jack Darrow. The Italian in the meantime rushes back to his companion and they start out to get revenge.

THE STEADFAST (Special—Two Parts—Oct. 13).—The cast: Joseph W. Smiley, Lillie Leslie, Tom Carr, Stephen Carr, Percy Winter, John Smiley, Francis Joyner.

Henry Wygand, civil engineer, happy in the love of his wife, Elizabeth, and his little son, Jack, receives the contract for the construction of a cement railroad bridge, and awards the sub-contract to supply cement to his wife's father, William Floyd. The father-in-law, however, is a weak old man, completely under the control of Charles Burke, his chief clerk. His business is bad, and under Burke's influence he is persuaded to substitute an inferior grade of cement for the bridge, trusting to Wygand's confidence in him to prevent discovery. Burke's purpose in this is twofold. If the scheme succeeds, he will benefit financially, and if it fails Wygand will be ruined, and Burke will be free to press his attentions upon Elizabeth, with whom he has long been in love. When the bridge is nearing completion, Wygand discovers the faulty cement, but urged by Floyd to save him from financial ruin, he agrees to say nothing about it.

Several months after the completion of the bridge the piers give way, and there is a terrible wreck. Investigation shows that the entire structure is weak, and Wygand, shielding his father-in-law, takes his punishment, paying a heavy fine and submitting to a jail sentence. The shock proves too much for Floyd's strength, and he dies, leaving Burke in control of the business. Elizabeth, as her father's heiress, receives payments from Burke, who begins to press his attentions upon her. Finally he suggests that she divorce Wygand and marry him, but Elizabeth refuses to listen. Then Burke tells her that she is penniless. Floyd sold the business to Burke before his death, and the payments to Elizabeth have come from Burke's own pocket. This proves to be true, but Elizabeth does not know that Burke forced the sale of the business under threat of exposure. Burke has taken papers relating to the crooked deal to his home. Burke's servant discovers them, but fails to realize their importance, and is discharged for meddling.

Elizabeth eludes Burke and takes lodgings in the poor part of the city where she manages to support Jack by making paper flowers. Time passes. Burke has lost all trace of Elizabeth, but still thinks of her. Burke's servant is arrested as a pickpocket, and is confined in the same jail with Wygand. In the tenement, Jack falls ill, and Elizabeth, herself far from well, starts for assistance. In the street she falls unconscious, and is found by Burke. He realizes his opportunity, and takes both the unconscious woman and her son to his own home. There he gives instructions that she be cared for, but that she be kept in ignorance of the fact that she is in his house.

In prison, Burke's servant, dying, tells Wygand of the papers proving Burke's guilt. Elizabeth, partly recovered, is anxious to thank her unknown benefactor. She goes to the library, where she finds Burke. He again begs her to come to him, but she refuses. But Burke will not let her go. In the midst of a struggle Wygand enters. Released from prison, he comes directly to Burke, and arrives in time to save his wife. The papers proving Burke's guilt are found, and Wygand returns to happiness with his little family.

BELLE OF BARNEGAT (Oct. 15).—The cast: Dorothy DeWolff, Helen Greene, Frances Sanson, Gilbert Ely, Clarence Jay Elmer, Kempton E. Greene, Earl Western, Nancy Barrington, Mary DeWolff.

In a calm sea and under a cloudless sky there comes a great catastrophe, in sight of the U. S. Coast Guard Station at Mantaloking. A passenger steamer catches fire from an explosion of her boilers and sinks rapidly as the boats of the Coast Guard speed toward her. Among the passengers is a young mother, with a little daughter named Belle, who is unable to reach the boats before the sinking of the vessel, and takes to the water, with her little one, on a piece of wreckage. They are rescued by Tom Dawes, son of the Coast Guard Captain, but the mother dies as soon as the station is reached, and the little one is adopted by the crew at the station.

The lapse of years discovers Belle of Barnegat as the prize pupil at the village school, and that she may be properly cared for amid the proper surroundings, Bill Dawes has resigned his captaincy of the Coast Guard Station, and is now conducting a prosperous boats to let and fishing tackle business. The days of the summer vacation arrive, and Belle ably applies her arithmetical knowledge toward keeping of the boat house books. Some of the customers become attracted to the little girl, who as soon as she is old enough becomes known as the Belle of Barnegat, and her lover, Tom Dawes, become greatly grieved thereat. One day when one of the customers at the boat house tries to kiss her, he is seized and thrown into the bay by Harry Fonda, who had often admired her, but never ventured to tell her of it. Belle becomes interested in her new acquaintance, so vastly more refined than the rough and untutored Tom, and Tom becomes more and more jealous, until one day, while

Tom and Belle are out in a boat, he would have shot his rival had not his father interfered.

One day Belle receives a letter from Harry Fonda, and Tom demands to see it. Belle refuses to disclose its contents, and when Tom tries to take it from her, she destroys it and is locked in her room. Full of despair, Tom hurries to the boat house, hoists the sail of his boat, and points her anywhere away from the scenes that have become hateful to him. The boat capsizes, and the ropes and sheets of the rigging become so wrapped about Tom's body that it is impossible for him to extricate himself. This is seen by Bill Dawes from the dock and he, crippled with rheumatism, pleads with Harry Fonda to go to the rescue, but he refuses. At the same time Belle breaks from the barred window of her room, and when her plea also fails to move Harry, she rows out into the storm herself, saves Tom just as the entangling ropes are pulling him under, and in each other's arms the vows are made which are never to be broken.

THE PRICE OF PIES (Oct. 16).—The cast: Billie Reeves, Mae Hotely, Wally Helston, Charles Griffith.

Bill gets a job as bill poster for a picture theater and when he is not posting bills he takes a pair of sandwich boards around town. When they get a convict picture, the manager has an idea of putting Bill into a prison suit to help along the effect. That would have been all right had it not been that Bill had to chase a couple of small boys who patted him on the cheek with some tomatoes that were ripe for some time. It tired him so that he put aside the boards and took a nap in a freight car.

That would have been all right, too, but the freight car happened to be going somewhere else and Bill went along with it part of the way, until the brakeman found him. Then he stopped very suddenly. Without his boards he looked like a convict and there was a reward for a man who had escaped. Bill thought they wanted him for stealing some pies and tried to fight them off with a shotgun he found. He might have done so only running after eating four pies brought on a stomach ache, and Bill was compelled to saw wood to pay for the pies.

In due time he married a widow, and ten days later our statesman came home much saturated one 4 a. m. in a deep-sea-going hack. In the morning, wife had statesman upon the carpet. "Madam!" said he, "during a long career as a servant of the peepul—" "Nix, nix!" said the wife, "let go the flying rings and get back to earth!" "From the rock-bound hills of Maine to the Everglades—" he began. "Forget the Everglades," interrupted the wife. "To adjust yourself with wifey you must come down to cases!" REFLEX

Specially constructed negative with copper coated core.

The following letter was received a year ago from the manager of one of the biggest combinations of Moving Picture theatres in England.

"With reference to the REFLEX brand of carbons which we have been using in our theatres for over 12 months.——. Our demand is a more heavy one than usual in the trade, three of our throws being over 180 feet and one no less than 205 feet. At this distance of throw we experienced considerable difficulty with the ordinary types of carbons upon the market.

"The REFLEX carbons, however, were as steady as a rock all the time. With the lower averages we find that where we require 90 amps. to show a good picture we can get down to 70 when the REFLEX is well heated and can maintain a steady light throughout the life of the carbon.

"The difference in price, in our opinion, cannot be considered for one moment as against the added beauty of the picture shown."

Good projections and clear pictures mean a crowded theatre and more money. Have you, Mr. Manager, and you, Mr. Operator, tried REFLEX carbons? They will solve your light difficulties.

¾ x 12 plain cored. $10.00 per hundred carbons.

⅝ x 12 plain cored, $7.50 per hundred carbons.

⅝ x 6 copper coated cored, $3.75 per hundred carbons.

½ x 6 copper coated cored, $2.75 per hundred carbons.

If your dealer cannot supply you, we will fill sample orders in lots of fifty each in all the above sizes, providing cash accompanies the order in full.

A TEST OF COURAGE (Episode No. 49 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series—Oct. 16).—The cast: Helen Holmes, Robyn Adair and Charles Murchison.

Confronting Helen at the Lone Point Switch Tower, Denning and his pal imprison the girl in a clothes closet and then steal everything of value. In making their getaway, the crooks accidentally upset a lantern and set the tower afire. Helen, by picking the lock in the door with a hairpin, barely escapes death in the flames. Denning and Orkanz board a freight and escape. Helen emerges from the burning building just as a local passes. A desperate run enables the girl to swing aboard the last car. Hastening forward the girl informs the engine crew of what has taken place and induces them to overhaul the freight, now on a siding.

Realizing their danger, the crooks hold up the freight engineer, compel him to cut his engine loose and speed away. Helen meets this strategy by having the local's engine crew sidetrack the cars and then drive their locomotive in pursuit. In danger of capture, the yeggs desert their engine and flee. The engine crew follow. Orkanz and his pal circle back, climb aboard the freight engine and open the throttle. Helen runs after the locomotive and just succeeds in swinging aboard it. A hurled wrench lays Orkanz low, while the girl's pistol holds Denning up. Helen assumes charge of the engine and is running it back when Denning turns the tables upon her. By this time, however, the engine has reached the spot where its crew is waiting and Denning suddenly finds himself in the grasp of the railroad men.

THE INEVITABLE (Oct. 16).—The cast: Claire McDowell, Alan Hale, Vola Smith and Ilean Hume.

The frivolous wife meets the artist at a reception and flirts with him. The affair progresses until the inevitable happens—she faces the alternative of guarding her husband's honor or going with the other man. The husband's cousin, a young girl, visiting in the house, has discovered the trend of affairs and pleaded vainly with the wife to think of her husband and child. But the infatuation is too strong, and she forsakes her home. Time passes, and the artist begins to tire of her. She discovers his faithlessness and, when he flings her aside, determines to commit suicide. But the thought of her child saves her, and she begins to live honestly for the child's sake. At length her heart's yearning impels her toward the home of her husband's cousin, where the child is. Worn out with life's struggle, she reaches the place and is recognized by the child, who has wandered away from her father. Stress of emotion causes the mother to faint; the child runs for her father; the erring woman recovers consciousness and is borne tenderly into the house, where, in the midst of memories long lost, she is reconciled to her loved ones before dying.

MINA.

THE HONEYMOON ROLL (Oct. 7).—The two Newlyweds from Rubetown come to the city for their honeymoon with quite a fat bank roll. All would have fared well with them if hubby hadn't decided to visit an uncle of his, leaving wifey alone to await his return. A stranded actor has seen the couple and is wondering how to put a dent in that honeymoon roll. Seeing hubby depart, he decides to make his attempt, so, going to wifey's room, he introduces himself as a great actor and proceeds to give her instructions in the histrionic art. So well is she pleased that she gives him about half of the roll as advanced payment for lessons.

Slick-Fingered Sue is also out to capture that roll. On the pretense of walking into the wrong room, she starts up a conversation with the wife, claims to be a great actress, starts a demonstration which ends in wifey thinking her even more clever than her previous visitor and offering her the other half of the bankroll as advance payment for lessons. Hubby has returned. He is put wise to the game by the bell-hop and a wild chase ensues, the bell-hop surreptitiously extracting the roll from Slick-Fingered Sue and the actor. However, Jean's father objects to the two lovers meeting. He discovers the trysting place of Jean and Christoph. Taking home his daughter, he orders her to prepare for a journey. Before Martine and his daughter leave, Jean writes Christoph as follows: "Good-bye; they are taking me to a convent." Martine's servant sees Jean give the maid this note, follows her to Christoph's shop, where he overcomes Christoph and knocks him unconscious with a blow. He then takes Christoph to a dungeon beneath Martine's home. Jean and her father cross the desert with a caravan of camels.

In the meantime, Christoph comes to his senses, wrenches loose a bar in the dungeon window and escapes. He again encounters Jean's maid, who tells him where Jean has been taken. After Jean has been placed in the convent, she escapes and in time reaches a cave in the desert, where she makes friends with a lion. Christoph has also crossed the desert; has visited the convent and is told that Jean is no longer there. He returns to the desert in search of Jean. Word reaches Jean's father that she has disappeared, and he engages Balsamo, the Bedouin pirate of the desert, to search for Jean. Balsamo follows Jean's trail, discovers her, and shoots and kills the mate of the lion, which has become Jean's pet. He then forces Jean to accompany him.

Dick Darcy is one of Kennard's reprobate friends. Bob Waters, a chauffeur, is a brother of Marie. Kennard, admiring Marie, resolves to have her for his own and plots with his friend Dick, who agrees to act as a minister and perform a mock ceremony. Somewhat conscience-stricken over his crime, Kennard leaves his friends and refuses to attend a cafe where his friend Dick and two women await him. Refusing to take "no" for an answer over the telephone, the two women with Darcy go to Kennard's home in a taxi driven by Bob Waters. Marie also arrives at Kennard's home at the same time, for she now has misgivings as to the legality of the ceremony. As Darcy and the two women enter Kennard's home, Bob sees his sister hovering near. He demands to know what she is doing there and she confesses that she and Kennard are man and wife. Bob resolves to confront Kennard with his sister. They force an entrance into the home. There Darcy laughs and tells what really took place. Bob, mad with rage, seizes an old sword from the wall and stabs Kennard, who falls bleeding to the floor. In delirium, Ralph Kennard's soul crosses the "Bridge of Time," and returns to the body of a wicked ancestor, Sir Ralph Kennard. It is in the Elizabethan period and Sir Ralph Kennard is believed to be dying, while Sir Richard D'Arcy and two women show maudlin grief in an apartment below. Sir Ralph's physician enters, tells them that Kennard has taken a turn for the better, and bids them all to leave the house and not darken it again.

Sir Ralph orders his servants to bring the maid that he wronged that he may wed her, and to fetch her brother who wounded him that he may forgive him. Bob, now a sturdy young yeoman, and his sister appear. The marriage ceremony is performed. In the meantime, Sir Richard D'Arcy plots against the life of Sir Ralph Kennard, who he believes will divulge plans formulated against Queen Elizabeth. He and his men resolve to kill them both. Bob overhears the plans, cuts a rope which furnishes the means of entrance to Sir Richard's castle, and kills two of the villains. Together with Sir Richard, he is also instrumental in saving Queen Elizabeth's life, and in so doing, Sir Ralph loses his own.

And then it is that Ralph Kennard regains consciousness and comes back across the "Bridge of Time." Surrounding his bedside are the nurse, the doctor, Marie and Bob. The doctor assures Marie that Ralph will recover, and at the bedside a real marriage ceremony is performed.

By chance he stops at the Gray farm, where Farmer Gray, his wife and son live, together with their adopted daughter, Una. Tom Gray, the son, and Una are in love, but the coming of Haynes changes things greatly. Una appeals to the sculptor as being the ideal type for his model. He tells her of the life that awaits her in the city and at length the girl goes away with him.

Haynes takes her to his studio, where she poses as "Dawn." As the days go by she believes herself to be in love with him, though no word of this subject passes between them. Tom Gray leaves the farm and comes to the city in search of Una, for he fears harm may have come to her. In time the figure of "Dawn" is finished and Hayes apparently has no more interest in Una. Una is disillusioned and leaves the sculptor's studio forever, securing a position as maid in the home of a society leader. CHRONICLES OF BLOOM CENTER—Episode No. 1, "The Landing of the Hose Reel" (Special—Three Parts—Oct. 14).—The cast: Irene Wallace, Sidney Smith, Ralph McComas, Wm. Hutchinson, Lyllian Brown Leighton, Miss Mattox, Lee Morris, John Lancaster, George Hernandez, Elsie Greeson.

Frederick Warren, the New York millionaire, has a liking for Bloom Center, the little rural village where he was born and reared. Warren frequently donates funds for Bloom Center's public enterprises. The Ladies' Art Embroidery Club holds a meeting in Melodeon Hall to discuss the need of a new hose reel for the Bloom Center Fire Department and Ira Pash, postmaster, is deputized to write Warren for money with which to purchase the apparatus. Warren and his daughter, Amy, read the letter and Warren notifies Bloom Center that if the inhabitants will raise half the required sum that he will donate the balance. Warren also instructs his daughter to visit Bloom Center, without revealing her identity and to ascertain whether or not the villagers appreciate his liberality.

Amy arrives in Bloom Center and poses as a young lady with literary talents. She makes friends with Margaret Tate, editress of the Bloom Center Weekly Bugle. Amy's stylish garments and city manners create a sensation among the masculine gender of Bloom Center and incite the spirit of envy among the women. Warren's offer to donate half the money for the purchase of fire-fighting equipment occasions caustic comment among certain of the unappreciative villagers, but others prepare to seek ways and means to raise the necessary sum. A tax on whiskers is one method devised and rather than pay a dollar and continue to wear whiskers, many make a concerted rush for the Bloom Center tonsorial artist. A lawn fete and other mediums are also employed.

During the course of proceedings, Constable Plum plots to hold up auto speeders, but Chubby Green changes the sign much to the discomfiture of Constable Plum, who also gets into the bad graces of Mrs. Plum by acting the Gay Lothario to Amy. Amy, after participating in many of the endeavors of the villagers to raise the money writes to her father that it cannot be done and so Warren sends a check for the necessary amount.

When the hose reel is purchased, Warren arrives and introduces Amy as his daughter, much to the consternation of those who had maligned her. A trial run of the hose reel is decided upon by Fire Chief Pash. Chubby Green and his boy friends start many false alarms and when Constable Plum discovers that Fire Chief Pash's home is really and truly burning down that functionary chides Plum for trying to pull a childish joke. He refuses to budge. However when the Fire Chief goes home, resplendent in helmet and boots, he is astounded to find that his dwelling is a smouldering mass of ruins.

THE QUEEN OF JUNGLELAND (Three Parts—Oct. 9).—The cast: Wellington Plater, Edythe Sterling, Lule Warrenton, Rex Rosseli and Sherman Bainbridge.

Colonel Rand, a hunter and explorer and uncle of Philip Blackton, in order that he may break the hereditary craving for drink of his nephew, takes the young man on a trip to the African Jungle. While on board the ship, Philip's desire for liquor again manifests itself, and it is with difficulty that the Colonel manages to keep him away from drink. A few months later the expedition reaches the wild country, and Philip in the new surroundings has completely conquered his longing for intoxicants. Wandering miles from the camp one day, Philip comes across a young white girl playing with a couple of pet leopards. Being informed that her name is Lola, Philip, who is about to speak to her and who has been warned by the white girl to keep away, is attacked by the beasts. Before the leopards have inflicted much harm, Lola drives the animals away, and Philip is ministered to by Lola and her companion, an old negress named Wambi. When he regains consciousness, Philip asks the reason why she makes her home in the wild jungle, but his request is waived aside and the women depart. Philip is subsequently rescued by the searching party, but when he begins to recount his tale to the Colonel and the other men in the camp, they place no credence in his story, concluding that he has been drinking again and that his utterances are the hallucinations of an intoxicated mind.

The next day, Philip, who is deeply angered at the attitude of the men, goes far into the forests to locate Lola, and is prevented from shooting a lion about to attack him by the girl he is in search of. After Lola has driven the beast away he pleads his love for her and again inquires why she chooses to live in the forests. She at first refuses but at length relents and tells him that her father, Blake, is the chief of a tribe of natives. She also informs him that her mother was a black woman. A strange look comes into the face of Wambi, whose tongue had been cut out, and she leaves them only to return shortly with a photograph which she gives to Philip. Just then Blake appears and, scenting trouble, Philip has him tied to a tree. A wild expression appears in the eyes of Blake when he hears Philip remark that he believes the woman in the picture is Lola's mother and that Blake is not her father. Philip thereupon demands of Blake under penalty of death to tell what he knows concerning the photograph. Blake then relates how, years ago, he murdered the young husband of a woman he coveted; how the woman was accidentally shot in a struggle with him; how he went into the jungle with the woman's baby (Lola) and how in order that Wambi could not talk of the incident he cut out her tongue. As he finishes the tale Wambi's rage, which she has suppressed for years, comes to the surface and she kills Blake.

Meanwhile, Colonel Rand, unable to find his nephew, goes home, and many months later Philip receives a letter from him, stating that he will pay them a visit. With a happy heart, Philip takes his wife and baby in his arms as the picture ends.

POWERS.

THE HAM ACTORS (Sept. 23).—The ham actors are pigs—big pigs, little squealers and pigs of assorted sizes. They grunt all through the picture, leap through hoops, parade in doll clothes, climb ladders, give imitations of a dog begging and generally comport themselves like the particularly intelligent pigs that they are. These ham actors bring home the bacon, and if there is any acrobatic stunt that they can't do the piggies would like to know what it is, for they essay everything in this squealing split-reel jumble of porcine fun.

They balance on teeter-tawters, shoot the chutes, both backward and forward, and then shoot up the chutes again, they walk on their hind legs and beg for the milk bottle, and finally re-enact the nursery rhyme, "This little pig went to market, this little pig stayed home," with side-splitting effect.

LIFE OF THE FROG (On Same Reel As Foregoing).—This film is a fascinating portrayal of one of a most wonderful transformations in nature. It was prepared by Raymond L. Ditmars, of the New York Zoological Park. It shows first the discovery by a party of children of some frog's eggs. The eggs are removed from the water, a jelly-like mass. Then they are placed in an aquarium, a myriad of black dots. The child magnifies the eggs and sees their progress from day to day.

Then are shown the pollywogs at the age of five months. Their mouths are rasps for scraping up vegetable matter. Then the change to the frog occurs. What really takes weeks is reduced to seconds. The final scenes show His Majesty, the Bull Frog, weighing 1½ pounds.

A BATH HOUSE TRAGEDY (Two Parts—Oct. 10).—The cast: Hank Mann, Dick Smith and Peggy Pearce.

Wife was getting stout, but hubby impolitely told her she was getting down-right fat. This hurt her feelings and she went to the bath house to get reduced by the steam process. Meanwhile husband went out for an airing and laid eyes on a swell chicken whom he followed into a bath house. Her sweetheart was Hank, the life saver, but he didn't know this until it was too late, or until he had to take refuge in the steam room from said Hank's ill temper.

Meanwhile Hank was having trouble with his assistant, as the latter paid more attention to Hank's sweetheart than was necessary. Also Hank's pet fish, Oscar, worried Hank, as he bit Hank when Hank was trying to be friendly. Oscar also bit an intoxicated gentleman who was trying to recuperate from the ill effects of liquor in the swimming tank. All these unpleasant features came to a climax when husband came out of the steam room and found his wife flirting with a fat gentleman. In the ensuing excitement a rubbing table got loose with Hank and some cops on it, and rolled out on to the roof and skidded around on the eaves. Wife lost twenty pounds through fright, husband got in trouble, the girl lost Hank and Hank slapped his assistant's face. Very few people have gone swimming there since.

Her little child is playing nearby, and after eagerly listening to the noise in a large shell, brings it to the mother and asks her to tell what makes the noise inside the shell. On the yacht is Charles Holcombe and his wife. With all their wealth they are unhappy. The wife showers all her affections on a lap dog, and thinks little and cares less for her husband's welfare. Tired of her continual nagging, he rows to the shore and comes upon Jess and the child without their being aware of his presence.

Jess tells the child how a beautiful girl was imprisoned in the shell by a bad fairy because she dared to love a handsome prince, and the noise heard is the cry of the imprisoned girl. Charles is amazed at the pretty woman having to toil so hard and comes upon them. Wishing to learn more of them, he looks about for an excuse for being there, and seeing a bed of daisies, begs for a bouquet. The child returns to play and Holcombe picks a large bunch of the flowers. Having no excuse to linger longer, Holcombe returns to the yacht, and looking back, sees the mother and child waving him good-bye. Filled with happy thoughts of how pleasant it would be to have a wife like that, he arrives in time to have his wife nag him for staying so long. She is angry also, because the air does not agree with her dog. As the yacht sails away, Holcombe sits dreaming over the daisies. Back on the beach the fisherman arrives and brings more nets to mend, and as Jess sits dreaming of the man and his yacht, her husband's voice recalls her to the grind of every day existence.

NOT A LAMB SHALL STRAY (Sept. 22).—The cast: Curtis Benton and Sydell Dowling.

The story is that of a childless couple who have a vision of happiness that would come to them by adopting a child. We see them arriving at the Hebrew Infant Asylum of New York City, which claims for itself to be the only organization of its kind in the United States and then passing through all its various departments. First, they are taken into the Examining Room, where the newly-arrived babies are undressed and submitted to a careful examination on the part of an efficient nurse. Then they are shown babies at nine months being taught to walk. In the Milk Laboratory they find 125 bottle babies, each requiring a special formula. This necessitates 800 bottles daily. Going out on the porch they find a number of infants sleeping in the sun by special order of the physicians.

In one of the wards they run across the "High Chair Squad," that is the babies in high chairs learning to eat for themselves with the assistance of the nurses. After the meal the babies are given their evening nap with the windows wide open. When they wake up the babies are given their bath, separate towels, soap, etc., being provided for each infant. Elsewhere a model kitchen is shown and subsequently the older children are seen at their meals in the dining rooms set aside for the boys and girls respectively. Afterwards the children assemble for "Daily Prayers."

Passing into another room, the aforesaid couple see some of the little girls playing with dolls in their cribs, while the boys are provided with all sorts of toys that seem to interest them. In one of the scenes some of the older boys are sitting at a table holding a meeting in imitation of the asylum's board of directors. In another scene the girls are playing at "dressmaking," and are cutting out paper patterns. There is also a Kindergarten scene, where the children are seen playing all sorts of games. They have all kinds of toys, notably, a miniature circus, and romp and dance in childish glee.

Having seen everything in the asylum from start to finish, the husband and wife pick out an attractive looking boy who seems to take to them. After duly consulting the superintendent, they sign adoption papers, make a donation to the asylum and take the boy away with them to his great delight and astonishment.

THE WOMAN WHO LIED (Four Parts—Oct. 6).—The cast: Mary Fuller, William Heidoff, Paul Panzer, Edna Hunter, Milton Sills, Charles Ogle and Eldine Stuart.

The husband, picking up a revolver, is prevented from shooting his wife by Gordon, who struggles with him. The noise attracts the attention of Jack Stanley, who has just answered a telephone call at the back of the stage, and who rushes into the actress' room immediately after Gordon has killed Harry. Taking the pistol from Gordon, Jack asks for an explanation, and is bending over the body as Cleo hides Gordon and as the stage manager and stage hands rush in Jack is accused of the murder and sentenced to fifteen years in prison, and Helen Forde, fiance of the imprisoned man, is convinced from a newspaper story that he must have had an association with the actress.

Despite the fact that Gordon is in love with Cleo, he tries to get Helen to marry him. Cleo also urges the marriage, as Gordon has promised to spend a good part of Helen's wealth on her. Finally, Helen consents, and they are married. Three years have passed, and Gordon tires of Cleo. Helen is brutally treated by her husband, and she realizes that she has made a mistake in marrying him. Cleo, to get revenge on Gordon, informs Helen that it was not Jack who had committed the murder, but Gordon. Through the pleadings of Beatty, the little daughter of Helen, as to the reason why her mother is crying, Cleo, who has been touched by the child's pathetic appeal, becomes deeply attached to the mother, and the two women plan to right the wrong.

Helen, determining that she will not live with a murderer any longer, leaves with Cleo for the West, and everything goes along smoothly until their funds run low. Cleo, unknown to Helen, obtains a position as a dancer in a cafe in order to raise a little money to maintain their home. Here she meets Jack, who had escaped from prison. After the performance, Cleo takes him to Helen's cottage, where a happy reconciliation is effected between the estranged couple.

Meanwhile, Gordon, who has returned from his business trip, during which time Helen left him, finds the note his wife wrote him before she left. Learning of the whereabouts of Helen with the aid of detectives, he goes to the town in which they live, and accidentally sees Jack. Gordon spreads the news that Jack is a jail bird, and a posse is formed and sent in search of him. Gordon calls upon Helen and encounters Jack, who, inflamed at the malicious work of Gordon, springs upon the culprit just as Cleo spies the posse surrounding the house. Holding a pistol at Gordon, she tells him to stand while Jack seeks refuge in a secret cellar entered through a trap door under the carpet. After abstracting a full written confession from Gordon she permits him to escape. As he is making a getaway, the posse spy him and, taking him for Jack, he is shot. The posse discover their mistake and bring the dead man back to the cottage, but the situation is cleared by the written confession which Cleo produces.

When Nielsen made "Guarding Old Glory" he grabbed everything in sight for his picture except Henry Ford's Jitney Submarine. The reason Nielsen didn't get one of these is because Henry hasn't got one either.

JOKER.

$50.00 FOR A KISS (Oct. 9).—The cast: Will M. Cressey, Adele Farrington and Blanche Dayne.

Silas and his wife live on the farm and increase their finances by selling milk to the dairy creamery. They have saved about fifty dollars by selling milk, and it is Susan's daily job to take the can of milk in. Silas is getting the can of milk ready, and as the cow seems to hold back on the supply, he fills the can with water. The hired hand comes along later and drinks a couple of cups of milk, filling the vacant place with water. At last Susan sets out with the milk. On the road an auto hits her and she loses some of the milk, and calling to her aid some water along the road, refills the can. She arrives at the creamery and delivers her milk, which the inspector proceeds to test for purity.

Back at the farm, Betfie, a book agent, and her chum arrive and tries to interest Silas in the book she is peddling. He is a wise old "fox," however, having purchased a "gold brick" shortly before, and it appears that she will make no sale. Bettie, however, has prepared for this emergency by having a camera stationed nearby, and leads the old man on until he suddenly grabs and kisses her. She sends him to the house for a photo of himself, and while he is gone, she gets her chum to develop the picture taken. Silas comes back and gives her "the laugh" when she tells him that she expects him to buy a book. She quickly brings him to terms when she shows him the photo taken of him kissing her. He digs up their savings from the snug hiding place between the mattresses and the book agent leaves him a much sadder, but wiser "rube."

Back at the creamery, Susan is in difficulties. Not only has the inspector found that the milk has been "watered," but he also finds a frog, which she had probably put in when she dipped water from the roadside. The inspector tells her she will have to pay a fine of $50.00 or go to jail. She tells him that she has that much at home, so he accompanies her to get it. They arrive at home, and Susan goes to the hiding place, but no money is to be found. Silas is found, and tells them a harrowing tale of how he was held up by burglars and barely escaped with his life. The tale is "too thin" for the experienced inspector and he takes the couple to the lock-up.

THE WOLF OF DEBT (Four Parts—Oct. 1). —The cast: Violet Mersereau, William Garwood, Fanny Hayes, Brinsley Shaw.

Mrs. Stanhope, a widow in embarrassing circumstances, urges her daughter, Helen, to marry Anthony Stuart, a wealthy broker, but she refuses. Helen, the following day, meets Bruce Marsden, a millionaire, at the golf links, and at once there develops a mutual attraction for each other. In a month their engagement is announced, and before they are married, Marsden transfers his Mesupa copper stock to Helen. The broker who has Marsden's stock is losing his own Transcontinental holdings and in order to raise money, gives his client's shares as security. But the market goes down and the broker loses everything, including Marsden's stock. Notwithstanding this, Helen marries the ruined millionaire. Helen's mercenary mother is greatly perturbed at the turn of events, and persuades Stuart to try and win Helen from her husband. Stuart's plans formulated, he gives Marsden a position in his office, and begins to lavish his attentions on Helen, who refuses to have anything to do with him.

Failing in this he sends Marsden out of town on business while he invites Helen and her mother to a fashionable affair. At her mother's instigation, Helen purchases an expensive gown on credit and attends the society function, where she is later trailed by her husband, who returned from his trip sooner than he expected. Becoming suspicious of his wife, Marsden secretly watches her, and when she and Stuart leave in the latter's car he does not let them get out of his sight. The car breaks down and Stuart takes Helen to a roadhouse cafe. Marsden then appears, denounces his wife, and leaves the employ of Stuart, getting work elsewhere.

Mesupa stock, meanwhile, due to the finding of ore, has gone up. Stuart starts to buy so heavily it is reported that he is trying to corner the copper market. When the stock reaches 104, Marsden, through his lawyer, Roger Murdock, in whose office Helen has found employment, swamps the market with his stock which brings the selling price down to 71¾. Stuart is finally ruined, and after an explanation from Helen, husband and wife are reconciled.

THE FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLAR JEWEL THEFT (Two Parts—Oct. 7).—The cast: M. J. MacQuarrie, Hayward Mark, Arthur Moon, Adele Farrington and Edna Payne.

The police of the Pacific Coast are baffled by the operations of a gang of society crooks. The successful theft of $50,000 worth of jewels from Mrs. Harding, a wealthy woman from the East, marks the largest haul they have made. Old Tom Sparks, one of the oldest detectives on the force, reads of the robbery and asks to be assigned to the case. Old Tom is looked upon by the other members as somewhat as a joke, and the chief laughingly tells him that this case requires the ability of young men. One of the crooks is taken into custody and given the third degree without result. Sparks wanders around, ever alert, and sees a vaguely familiar face. On consulting the photos in the Rogues' Gallery he finds the likeness of the man, who is a famous crook. Sparks returns in disguise and follows him around.

Mrs. Harding is rendered frantic by the loss of her jewels and the police are unable to get a line on the crooks. Sparks, in the disguise of a crippled beggar, does not rouse the suspicions of the crooks and finally by a ruse manages to get into the room where the crooks are staying. His suspicions are verified, for he finds some of the missing jewelry and later sees one of the crooks remove a stone from a setting and take it to a pawnshop. Sparks hurriedly calls up the station and gets more men. That night when the crooks assemble to divide the money received from the jewel they are surrounded and captured and the jewelry recovered. The jewels are restored to the owner, who starts to thank the chief, but he tells her all the credit is due to the old detective. When she, overcome with gratitude for the recovery of the jewels, starts to write and a check to Sparks, he smilingly tells her to give the reward to some deserving charity. The boys on the force acclaim him the best in the service and the chief tells him that he will never hesitate in putting him on the most baffling cases in the future.

him supplied with knowledge as to his son's whereabouts. A deputy sheriff in a neighboring town, to whom Lovett, Jr., applies for work in exchange of a meal recognizes him from the notice, and that night he earns his first money by sawing wood. He rides the bunkers again and is put off in a town near where Audrey lives. She sees him and is instrumental in getting a job for him with Old Man Carr. In the weeks that pass, Bill proves his ability and on one of the paydays, accompanies the boys to town. All head for the saloon. Bill refuses to accompany them, then changes his mind and coming in, calls for mineral water, telling them that he has taken his last drink.

Audrey keeps his father in touch with these happenings. Carr tires of his strenuous life and offers the ranch to Bill at his own terms. Bill accepts the proposition and calls on Audrey to tell her the good news. Audrey later promises to marry him. Five years pass and Bill has made good in the full sense of the word. Now he can visit his father and does so, accompanied by Audrey, his wife, and four-year-old son. He calls at the father's office and treats the old secretary, Timmins, coldly, but there is a glad reunion with his father. Old Timmins, on account of Bill's indifference, resigns, but is taken back by Bill. Bill spends a brief year with his father, each day of which is full of joy to them both, and then his father gives up his fight and dies. Later Timmins brings the will and papers of Lovett, Sr. While going through the papers Bill finds a promisory note for eighty-five thousand dollars, and turning it over reads, "Paid in full with a few tears, a few heartaches and unlimited pride in my son." He realizes the trick the old man has played on him in buying the ranch and allowing the payments to be made through Carr to him.

Upon arriving at college, she is greeted by the professor, who is hated by the girls on account of his strict ways. The professor of languages fails to show up, so the principal writes to a college nearby for a substitute. Eddie arrives at his college and is greeted kindly. He is offered the post of professor of languages and accepts. Eddie's new job is very pleasant, as he deals exclusively with the girls, and he makes a hit with the principal by the strict way he deals with them. Elsie has heard all about the new professor, how handsome he is and how all the girls rave over him, but she takes little interest in the matter. In the first class, under the new professor, she is late for class and is reprimanded by her teacher, who recognizes his estranged sweetheart. She recognizes Eddie, and can't understand why he is there.

The professor, although outwardly stern and strict, is secretly carrying on a love affair with one of the pupils, and has several narrow escapes from being caught. Eddie has the upper hand over the girl, in being her teacher, and tries every way to force her to beg his forgiveness, while she, thinking he is to blame, remains unforgiving. Eddie at last relents and slips a note under Elsie's door, telling her to meet him at the bridge at eight that night. Now Professor Sneeks has had a misunderstanding with his lover and writes her a note to meet him at this same bridge at eight the same night. Both Lochinvars are nearly caught slipping the notes under the door, but successfully escape. Elsie finds her note and is overjoyed. She is the first to slip out that night, and is seen by the principal, who follows her. Arriving at the bridge, she sees the professor there, and just as he greets her the principal arrives and gives them a "bawling out." Eddie is late, so is the other maid, and they arrive in time for the finish. Explanations follow, each chooses his maid and the principal is put to flight by the arrival of Dan Cupid.

THE BROKEN COIN (Episode No. 16—"Kitty in Danger"—Two Parts—Oct. 3).—Kitty is taken from the tree by Count Sachio and his man and brought to Grahoffen. In the meantime Count Frederick, disgusted with his King's cowardice, decides to see Kitty. Being unable to find her at the hotel, and becoming worried as to her safety, he sends his soldiers in search of her. Thinking she may have remained at the palace he returns there. In passing near the spot where Kitty was captured, he notices on the ground a hat belonging to her. Upon further searching he finds a cigarette case with this inscription inside: "To Count Sachio for deeds of valor, from Phillip, King of Gretzhoffen, 1914." Feeling that Kitty must be in the hands of Sachio, and realizing her danger, he sends his own men to Grahoffen to learn what they can of Kitty's whereabouts. In the meantime Roleaux, a prisoner in the palace of Grahoffen, sees Kitty brought in. Knowing she is a prisoner like himself, he succeeds in escaping, finds Kitty and helps her to escape. They are about to make a getaway when they find themselves surrounded by Sachio's guards.

Sachio and King Phillip decide they are too dangerous to have about, and after much discussion, they decide to send them both back to America. Knowing it is impossible to force Kitty to book passage, Count Sachio bribes some deck hands to stow them away in the hold of the boat. This is overheard by Count Frederick's men, who rush back to Gretzhoffen and tell of Kitty's danger. Count Frederick gets in communication with the wharf men and tells them to hold the boat, but learns that she has already left port. He follows in the King's fastest torpedo boat. In the hold of the boat Kitty comes to and looks about for some means of escape. She is about to sit down on a mass of rags in the corner when she feels it move. After getting over her fright she examines it and finds it to be no other than her friend, Roleaux. Together them plan their escape.

Count Frederick finally gets aboard his yacht and a race between the ocean liner and the speedy little craft begins. In the meantime Kitty discovers she is on a boat and shouts for help. This is heard by passengers, who inform the captain. He sends his two deck hands, not knowing of their part in the abduction, to investigate. The deck hands try to gag Kitty and Roleaux, but are overpowered, and Kitty and Roleaux make their escape just as Count Frederick's yacht is seen pulling alongside the liner. Kitty and Roleaux, about to leave the top of the ladder, are again seized and knocked unconscious as the episode fades.

BROADWAY UNIVERSAL FEATURE.

FATHERHOOD (Four Parts—Oct. 4).—The cast: Hobart Bosworth, Joseph Flores, Hart Hoxie, Helen Wolcott and Yeamans Titus.

Lon Gilchrist and Bud Dalton, range riders for a ranch in Arizona, are instrumental in aiding the occupants of a stage coach which has been held up by Indians. Lon observes an Indian tear a baby from the arms of its mother, and giving chase to the redmen, he sees the infant cast into the underbrush. The infant is bleeding from a wound on the forehead caused by the stiff branches of the bush when Lon picks it up. He bandages the cut with his handkerchief and brings the baby to its mother. For helping to save the coach, Lon is rewarded with a large sum of money from the Wells Fargo Express Company, which is judiciously invested by him. Years later, Lon is a wealthy ranch owner, but has become so imbued with the spirit of business that he pays practically no attention to the more pleasant sides of life. Meanwhile Lizzie, the name of the baby whom Lon saved from the Indians years ago and who has now grown to beautiful womanhood, has, owing to the death of her mother, to earn her living as waitress in a restaurant. To this eating place some time later comes Lon, who gets acquainted with Lizzie. A mutual attraction develops between them, and they are subsequently married.

Lon, who has always been a man of reticence, did not inform his wife that he is a rich rancher, and great is her surprise when she arrives at the ranch to learn that her husband is a man of wealth. But with all her money, she is not happy, for Lon bestows practically no affection upon her, as all of his time is absorbed in a strict adherence to business. For his wife's amusement Lon permits her to consort with Del Beasley, a handsome cowboy, whom he adores as a son. A rodeo is being held some distance from the ranch, but as Lizzie is down in health, Lon refuses to let her accompany him. Her highly nervous condition develops hysteria, and she rebukes her husband severely. When Lon goes she tells Del, whom Lon had instructed to take care of her, to drive her to the station, as she has decided to go to the city. Crestfallen and broken-hearted over his wife's action, Lon is unable to proceed very far and turns back home. He finds the note Lizzie had written to him, telling him that she has made up her mind to go back to the city. Not finding Del around, he concludes that he, too, has gone with his wife, and in a jealous rage he starts in pursuit of them. On his way he stops at a brook for a drink, and from the reflection of his haggard face in the water a realization of the disparity of his age and that of his wife comes to him, and he decides to let her go. But there has been no sin committed by his wife, for as he sits in his cabin holding her picture Del appears.

Lizzie arrives in the city, and months later her baby is born. Lon is apprised of his fatherhood by a postal card, and he rushes to the city in the hope that the little mite will be the result of a reconciliation. He is led to the room in which his wife is sitting by the kindly old landlady, and as he holds his son in his arms, he tells the story of how he once saved a little baby from the Indians. When he has finished relating the incident, his wife takes from a bureau draw the blood-stained handkerchief which Lon had wound around her head when a baby and, pushing back her hair, shows him the scar. His wife was the little baby girl he had saved, and little did he think at that time that the infant girl would become his life's partner. But Fate works wonders.

A Rally Call to EXHIBITORS

It is about time that someone took up the exhibitors' side of the case. We heard so much about the producers' and the exchanges' side.

The exhibitor has something he wants to obtain. This, then, is to be an attempt to clarify the exhibitor's arguments, his grievances—his view of what is right and what is wrong in picture making and picture distribution.

The fact that the Associated Film Sales Corporation is sponsoring this campaign for the exhibitor should have nothing to do with it. To be sure, the Associated Service hope to win the exhibitors' support.

Therefore, in this series of editorials written by a man who knows the exhibitors' needs, there will be first of all a digest of what you have been saying in your family and to your friends—and then there will be an attempt to show you that Associated Service is made according to your prescription, according to your pattern, according to your demands, according to your orders.

What Makes a Program That the Exhibitor Likes

An Editorial by the Associated Editor-in-Chief

Promises are made in Heaven they say and Hell is paved with good intentions.

Programs have been born, brought up, bred, cared for, indulged and sent forth in the cruel, cruel world from the comfortable haven of producers' studios. In other words, programs have been made by producers, of producers and for producers.

The exhibitor has been just the outlet.

The motion picture field has been growing so quickly that the exhibitor has not had time to meet with conditions. He has been busy taking care of his patrons.

The exhibitor from now on is to be the big man in the industry. Therefore, programs to be right from now on must be made for the exhibitor based on his needs.

A program can no longer be the entire output—good, bad or indifferent, of a combination of producers.

Associated Service hence is a new kind of combination of producers, associated merely for the purpose of cutting down overhead and business expenses.

Associated Service, therefore, is the reduction in cost of all pictures for the exhibitor and the making of better pictures.

Associated Program cannot be just the dumping ground for producers because the following have to be pleased before a single reel can go out under the Associated name:—

1. A jury of all manufacturers represented, who jealous of the general standard, will not permit a black sheep to wander into the fold.
2. Individual, independent exchanges who eliminate for Associated Service the tremendous expense of carrying on offices and office staffs all over the country.
3. Associated Service is the exhibitor's program. It consists of the right sort of dramas, strong and powerful. The right sort of comedies, slap stick to be sure, in some instances, farces in others and conservative in others. It consists of big features issued on the program. It is backed by business men who are working the proposition on a strictly business basis, selling film exactly as a purely commercial calculating concern would sell soap; creating a demand and filling a demand; merchandising on strictly successful business principles—that of making the dealer or the exhibitor, in this case the big feature.

When the exhibitor, who is king in this field, realizes that Associated means his program there will be such a rush to Associated that we will scarcely be able to fill the demand.

THANHOUSER.

THE ROAD TO FAME (Two Parts—Sept. 28).—The cast: George Harris, Winifred Kingston, Bert Delaney, Morgan Jones, Inda Palmer.

The theatrical manager believed he made a find in his new leading woman. He was forced, however, after the first performance in "Camille" to believe that there was something lacking. The manager, however, was much in love with her by this time and the day after the opening performance called upon her and asked her to marry him. She then told him that she had been secretly married some weeks before to the son of a wealthy couple of high social position. As far as the stage was concerned, she added, she didn't care whether she was a success or not, as she intended to retire and live a happy home life.

After the actress and her husband went to live with the latter's parents, the young woman found herself more and more unhappy in her new surroundings. The parents resented her having won the heart of their son and their friends looked coldly upon her. Her husband's father was particularly cold and on one occasion she accidentally overheard him in conversation with her husband. He was deploring the marriage and the husband expressed his sorrow that he had caused pain to his parents, but added that now he was married it was too late to talk of the matter. From what he said the young wife believed that her husband was ashamed of her and secretly wanted to be free. She took an early occasion to speak to her father-inlaw and tell him she was perfectly willing to go away if he would advance her some money. This he did gladly and the husband arrived in time to be told by his wife that she was going back to the stage where her surroundings were pleasant and that she had only married him for his money. The younger man believed this but the father happened to glance out of the window and saw the young woman tear up his check. The older man, however, did not tell his son what he had seen, believing it best not to.

The girl returned to her former manager and asked him for a position, saying, "I know that sorrow has taught me how to act." He believed her, and gave her a tryout and, for her benefit, "Camille" was revived, and on the opening night she scored a great success. Among those who were affected by the sympathetic acting were the star's husband and his parents, who had come to the theater as the guests of some friends, not knowing what attraction they were to witness. As the husband was leaving the theater with his party, the manager stepped up to him on his way out, took him to one side and told him that his wife was mourning out her life for him, she loved him so. The husband at first did not believe this, but his father, who had been convinced by the work of the young actress, confessed to his son how the younger man had been tricked. There was a happy reunion between husband and wife.

THE MYSTERY OF THE EAGLE'S CLIFF (Oct. 3).—The cast: Wayne Aery, Lorraine Huling, Helen Badgley and Morgan Jones.

A young scientist, with a wife and young daughter, is greatly interested in some explorations he has planned to make which he believes will bring him fame and fortune. He is thinking of starting on the trip when he receives a letter from another member of the proposed party, saying that unless the sum of $2,000 can be raised immediately the expedition cannot sail. It is suggested that the scientist borrow the money from a wealthy old man who lives in the scientist's home town and who is known to be interested in such affairs as the expedition.

Although knowing the rich old man to be something of a miser, the scientist goes to him and is successful in borrowing the money after explaining that his chief ambition is to do something for the sake of his little daughter whose picture he shows to the rich man. The picture is in a locket which the scientist uses as a charm on his watch chain. While the rich man gets the money, the scientist is so interested that he does not refasten the locket securely and it falls to the floor unheeded. After the scintist has gone, the rich man sees the trinket, and, knowing how greatly prized it is, goes out to try to overtake the younger man and return it. On his way, the old man who is near-sighted, stumbles and falls over a high cliff and is killed.

His body is not found for several days, and knowing nothing of what has happened, the scientist leaves for a distant country with his expedition. When the rich man's body is finally discovered, the locket is found clutched in his hand. It is generally believed that the scientist has murdered him for the money he was known to have obtained the night before leaving. The neighbors believing the scientist guilty and that he has fled, turn against his wife and child, their former friends, and completely ostracize them, making life miserable for the wife and daughter.

Knowing nothing of what has happened in his absence, the scientist returns unexpectedly in hopes of giving his family a glad surprise. He is surprised and angry at what he has learned. The butler of the murdered man has seen the sudden return and reported it to the police. In the meantime the little daughter, who was picking berries at the foot of the cliff on the day of her father's return, has stumbled on a worn pocketbook. It is the pocketbook of the rich man which had fallen from his pocket when he fell from the cliff, and contains, among other papers, a note given by the scientist for the money. The note exonerates the scientist of the charge of murder.

AMERICAN.

JUST AS IT HAPPENED (Two Parts—Oct. 4).—The cast: Edward Coxen, Lizzette Thorne, Molly Shafer, George Field.

Jennie did not appreciate the restfulness and happiness of her farm home until a city stranger came into her life and caused an estrangement between her Uncle Dave and herself. Dave goes to the city to make good and there falls into evil ways through the chance companionship of "Red Dick," a crook. He repels the crook's invitation to join him in some of his unlawful activities, seeking day by day to find employment. Finally after exerting every effort he yields to the tempter and agrees to meet "Red Dick" to assist him in a robbery that night. His letters home have been full of good news so that his mother and Jennie would not know he tried and failed.

However, there was no sentiment in the make-up of his boardinghouse-keeper. She put him out, bag and baggage, for non-payment of his rent. The planned robbery had been discovered by the police who, in order to capture "Red Dick," follow Dave to the rendezvous in the city park. As Dave awaits his initiation in crime a postman happening along stops near Dave to tighten the strings on some packages of letters. As he does so, he discloses a letter addressed to Dave in his mother's handwriting, and across the envelope there was stamped the words "Not Found." Thereupon, Dave decided to return home. His mother, apprised of his coming, arranges a big party in his honor, but ragged clothes and his general unkempt appearance prevent him from participating. He hides in the barn and later, discovered by his mother, the family is reunited, and happiness reigns supreme.

LET THERE BE LIGHT (Two Parts—Oct. 11).—The cast: Helene Rosson, Charles Newton, E. Forrest Taylor, Queenie Rosson and Perry Banks.

Peter Stearns has devoted the largest part of his life to electrical experiments. Electrical appliances of every kind are installed in his home. It is his ambition to perfect an electric ray which will astound the world with its brilliancy. To this end Peter works faithfully. At the death of a life-long friend, there comes into Peter's life his chum's "little girl." Thoughtlessly, Peter expects the "little girl" to be a child, and his embarrassment is keen when a young woman arrives as June Sterling. June is very happy in Peter's home, bringing sunshine and happy hours to the lonely bachelor.

Finally the town gossips get busy, and carry to Peter unkind reports of the people. Peter is hurt and offers to give June up, but she refuses to permit the gossips to rift their companionship. He asks her to marry him, and she consents. Though Peter showers his wife with attentions, his life-work comes first, and she is thrown much upon her own resources for companionship. A motion picture company asks Peter to inspect its lighting devices. He takes his wife to the studio with him, and there she meets a popular young actor who later becomes a frequent visitor at her home.

Peter perfects his light and as he chances to flood the garden with its light, he sees June in the arms of the actor. Crushed and heart-broken, he returns to his laboratory and decides to give June her liberty that she may re-marry. The evening's experience, however, has taught June that she loves her husband truly, tells her suitor that she does not want to see him again, and husband and wife live happily in a truer conception of the reality of their love for each other.

PROFIT FROM LOSS (Oct. 15).—The cast: Vivian Rich, Walter Spencer, Jack Richardson and Louise Lester.

Carter, a working man, draws his pay. On his way home he passes a saloon and, after the usual struggle, yields to temptation and enters. Harmon, a professional gambler, gets him into a card game and wins his money. After Harmon leaves, Carter learns he has been cheated, and goes in search of Harmon to regain his money by force.

With no money and no food for herself and child, Carter's wife goes out on the street to sell some flowers which had been given her. She enters a cafe where Harmon is drinking. At the urging of his female companion, he gives Mrs. Carter the money he has won. Later, Carter meets Harmon in a dark street and demands the return of his money. Harmon declares that he has given it all away.

With empty pockets, Carter goes home to face his wife, and learns that it is to her that Harmon has given the money. Carter's pay has reached its proper destination after all, and he profits by his loss; for he writes a letter to his employers directing them in future to pay his wages to his wife.

FALSTAFF.

A PERPLEXING PICKLE PUZZLE (Sept. 30).—The cast: Claude Cooper, Arthur Cunningham, Leland Benham.

Raphael Rembrandt was a painter, but unlike the great masters he did not confine himself to any one branch of work, as he proudly announced in his sign he painted "Portraits, Houses, Black Eyes and Fences." To this he added another side line, that of expert detective work in all its phases. One of the first persons to whom Rembrandt displayed his credentials was Lena, a comely widow who conducted a prosperous delicatessen store, and the artist hoped that some day she would change her name to Lena Rembrandt. When he told her of his new distinction she decided to confide in him, now that he was a detective. She explained that during a number of weeks past many pickles had mysteriously disappeared from her store. The artist took up the case with energy. There were no finger prints on the remaining pickles. There was really nothing that could be regarded as a clue. The first night the detective remained in the delicatessen store. During the first half of the night he slept with one eye open, during the other half he slumbered with the other eye open, but in the morning more pickles had vanished. When he explained the matter to the widow she was frankly suspicious, saying, "It may be that you like pickles a good deal yourself," but her suspicion vanished before the detective's anger and she urged him to go on with the case, which he did.

The following evening the detective heard a suspicious noise in the cellar and went to investigate. Suspended from the ceiling immediately under the spot where the pickle barrel was, he perceived a rude swing. Access to it could be gained by a ladder which was in place beside it. The detective ascended the ladder, shoved his hand through the hole in the ceiling, and—withdrew a pickle! He took the pickle upstairs to examine it more closely. He bit off a piece of it and decided it was a pickle. Then the wrathful widow pounced in upon him and more explanations were needed.

Lena finally retired and the detective laid a trap for the thieves. He rolled the barrel away, put an empty one in that space, and hid in the barrel to await developments. They came. Somebody bored a hole through the barrel and the detective climbed out to investigate. In the cellar he again climbed the ladder and peered through the opening to the floor above. A moment later the ladder fell, leaving the investigator helpless in midair. Lena heard cries coming from the store and rushed in to find her only son, a boy of nine. He called to her excitedly, "Burglars are in the cellar eating pickles," and full of anger she rushed down to investigate. While arguing with the helpless detective a stream of water descended upon them from above, drenching them thoroughly. The preplexing pickle puzzle was never satisfactorily elucidated by either the delicatessen store proprietress or the painter-detective but a boyish chum of Lena's son was heard to say, "I wish I was Heine Schmulz. His mother has a delicatessen store, and she fills his pockets with pickles every day."

BEAUTY.

BILLIE—THE HILL BILLY (Oct. 12).—The cast: Neva Gerber, William Carroll, Lucille Ward, Webster Campbell, Teddy Lynch and Robert Miller.

Robert Bennett goes into the Ozark Mountains on research work, and comes to a mountaineer's cabin. The old man's son has run away from home after a beating years before, and, grieving over the result of his harsh treatment, "Pap" got the delusion that every man who came there was his returning son.

Bennett finds it easier to humor the old man's fancy than to turn away from him. He becomes interested in the daughter, who cherishes a talent for drawing—in secret, because "Pap" considers it sinful. "Pap" threatens to punish her for this sinful tendency by putting her to work in the tobacco fields. Bennett, who has learned to love the girl, saves her by marrying her and taking her home to his mother.

AIDED BY THE MOVIES (Oct. 16).—The cast: Carol Holloway, John Steppling, John Sheehan, Dick Rosson and Nan Christie.

John and Carol are in love. Her father objects to John and favors Dick. Carol's father is of a gay disposition and starts a flirtation with the leading lady of a moving picture com-

They Said We Couldn't Do It! But We Did

When we offered the motion picture trade high-class, five reel features a few weeks ago at about half the usual price, a lot of people said we were crazy.

We have since produced "AN AMERICAN GENTLEMAN" and in four days after its first showing, sold the full quota of prints we had allotted to practically all the territory east of the Mississippi.

Since then we have been cursed in several languages and three dialects by those who were left at the post and who failed to get in on the melon. Others who took our tip are coining money.

At this writing the wires are running red with night letters from the corn belt, the mountain states and the exposition country. They'll be gone soon. A few other single states are still open.

A new era of film at Philadelphia prices is at hand. Already we are within feeling distance of the velvet and we are making money selling good goods at half what you are paying for the old stuff. "FOR $5,000 A YEAR" is almost ready, with "Louise Huff," October 6th. You may have thought we had shot our bolt with "An American Gentleman," but this second production is far superior. Better see if there is a chance for you.

pany. They take supper together, and "make a night of it." The next day the leading lady does not appear at the studio, and the company is compelled to take a day off.

The director of the company is a friend of John's, and enters into a scheme to effect the marriage of John and Carol through a ruse. John secures a "parson" and a marriage license, and the movie company arranges to take a picture of a marriage ceremony on the front porch of Carol's home.

The plan is carried out with Carol and John acting as the principals in the ceremony. Carol's father and Dick act as the witnesses. After the ceremony, Carol's father congratulates the "parson" on the realistic manner in which he has acted, and discovers that the ceremony is real. He is furious. The leading woman turns up and persuades him to accept the situation, which he finally does.

A CHANGE OF LUCK (Oct. 8).—The cast: George Ovey, Jefferson Osborne, George George, Louis Fitzroy, Janet Sully and Goldie Colwell.

Jerry and his boon companion Hank are in dire straits. The room rent is due, their hunger is unappeased, and they have not a "jitney" between them. Jerry, always full of ideas, suggests that they may at least get something to eat by the simple expedient of a free lunch counter. The barkeep doesn't mind donating one sandwich, but to supply a feast—never. So Jerry and Hank are thrown out of the place.

At this juncture Wild Ike comes along. Bloodthirsty, he shoots up everybody and everything in sight. Unfortunately for Jerry and Hank they walk in his line of vision, but a rain of bullets prompts them to beat a hasty retreat. Wild Ike, now thoroughly aroused, pursues. They seek shelter in their rooms but the landlady becomes so pestiferous in her demands for rent that they flee to the woods. At one of the outposts they see a sign offering $500 reward for the capture of Wild Ike. A happy idea strikes them. Jerry is to make up as Wild Ike. Hank will turn him over to the sheriff as the genuine bandit, and Hank will collect the reward and split fifty-fifty with his co-conspirator.

Ike, who has been wandering about, steals upon the plotters, overhears their plans and decides its a good one. He makes Jerry trade clothes with him and with visions of getting the reward himself escorts Jerry to the sheriff's office after blowing up Hank so that there will be no interference. But Ike failed to consider Hank's recuperative powers and just as he is collecting the $500 Hank rushes in, exposes the job, has Ike locked up, and with Jerry takes in the $500.

THE LILLIPUTIANS' COURTSHIP (Sept. 20).—The cast: Mrs. General Tom Thumb, Will Archie, Count Magri and Captain Anzer.

Pee Wee, a chubby midget, is in love with Alice, the daughter of Lady Petite. Although Alice is twice as tall as her mother, she stands greatly in awe of her Lilliputian parent. A diminutive duke holds the mortgage on Lady Petite's home. His Grace is Pee Wee's rival for the hand of the stately Alice. Villainous out of all proportion to his stature, the Duke threatens to foreclose unless Lady Petite persuades her daughter to become his bride. Alice, however, defies both suitor and parent. She is locked in her room and sentenced to hard labor by Lady Petite. Alice manages to smuggle out a note to Pee Wee by the giant policeman of Pigmyville. Pee Wee and Uncle Tiny Mite, disguised in Oom Paul whiskers, rush to the rescue with Shetland pony and rig and a ladder. While Uncle Tiny Mite engages the mother in police conversation in the drawing room, Pee Wee ascends to the fair captive's room. Alice however, fails to recognize her sweetheart in his beard, and her shrieks for help call Lady Petite and her guest to the scene of abduction. But Alice, soon discovering her blunder, gracefully permits Uncle Tiny Mite and Pee Wee to carry her off behind the Shetland pony. Lady Petite, tucked under the arm of the giant policeman, gives pursuit. The runaways are captured. Meanwhile the duke has ordered the Petite mansion sold at sheriff's auction. The kidnappers of Alice have been dismissed by the Pigmyville judge, and they hurry to the rescue of the distraught Lilliputian Lady's property. Uncle Tiny Mite presents Lady Petite with the bill of sale. The little virago embraces Pee Wee—and the affair ends in a double wedding.

AMERICAN ALL STAR FEATURE.

PARDONED (Three Parts—Oct. 9).—The cast: Harry von Meter, Harold Lockwood, May Allison, Eugenie Forde, Chas. Bartlett and Wm. Stowell.

While on a summer's outing, Forest becomes engaged to Aileen, a wealthy young woman staying at the same hotel. One day he is accosted by a woman who claims Forrest to be the father of her child. Forrest declares the woman to be a stranger to him, and convinces Aileen and her parents until Mary produces a photograph of Forrest.

Later Forrest sees a likeness of himself in a newspaper, and then realizes that somewhere in the world there exists his physical counterpart, and in this solution he sees the key to the story so convincingly told by Mary. Time elapses and, through this strange likeness and on circumstantial evidence, Forrest is convicted and about to be hanged for murder. He is offered a pardon if he will impersonate the Governor's son Paul, whose double he is, and who is guilty of the murder for which Forrest was convicted, until after the election. Ignorant of the exact facts, he consents.

Meantime, Paul has married a chorus girl, who threatens the Governor's social ambitions. Forrest falls in love with Kathie, but would renounce his pardon rather than marry her fraudulently. Paul finds his wedding has been illegal, the supposed lover of the girl whom he killed in a jealous quarrel, having been in reality her husband. He returns to denounce Forrst as an impostor, but he is followed by the chorus girl, who, in revenge for her husband's death, stabs him fatally, and Forrest's innocence is established.

GAUMONT.

THE VIVISECTIONIST (Two Parts—Sept. 17).—The cast: Joseph Levering, Marian Swayne and Flavia Arcara.

To find material for his book on the psychology of women's minds, a writer deliberately makes his wife jealous by feigning an interest in an actress, whom in reality, he never sees. He studies the effect of the emotions in his wife's agony at seeming to lose him. On the discovery that her husband has tortured her for his science, the young wife leaves his home, with her love for him dead. She is injured in an accident and taken to a hospital.

At the same time, the actress kills the artist friend of the psychologist, and the finding of the latter's card outside the actress' window leads the detectives to believe the murder was committed by the psychologist. The final confession of her crime by the actress after she has been fatally shot by the same pistol which killed the artist, frees the psychologist from the law. The forgiveness of his cruelty by his wife on her sick bed, restores them to their former state of happiness.

SEEING AMERICA FIRST (On the Same Reel As "Keeping Up With the Joneses"—Sept. 25).—A trip with the Mutual party to Niagara Falls around the famous place fills the 500 feet with most beautiful and interesting film. The picture includes portions of unusual scenery between New York and Buffalo, and then changes to the wonderful rapids above the Canadian and American Falls. Later, views of the falls, the "Cave of the Winds," and of a trip down the gorge in the saucy little steamer, "Maid o' the Mist," round the picture out in a worth-while display of one of America's most inspiring show places. This subject also includes a view of the famous $90,000 dairy and the other interesting features of Mrs. George W. Vanderbilt's estate at Asheville, N. C.

CENTAUR.

RHODA'S BURGLAR (Two Parts—Oct. 7). —The cast: Donald Bowles, Grace Gibson, Marvell Spencer, Victor Rothman, Susie Hamilton, H. Turner, Chandler House, Betty Anderson.

Welden Shaw, a man of about twenty-eight, is the husband of Myrtle Shaw, an ambitious, frivolous social climber. They have one daughter, a little child of four, the only light of her father's life. Mrs. Shaw constantly complains of her husband's lack of ambition and drives him from the home with her nagging. He seeks solace among his men friends and drops into loose companionships and looser habits. His one pleasure, however, is to dangle his baby girl on his foot and tell her animal stories.

The domestic affairs of the family grow from bad to worse until the wife, beginning a flirtation with a smooth, suave old roue, leaves her husband, takes her baby with her, and obtains a divorce. She then marries the new love and he takes her to his luxurious home. The first husband, broken in spirit, becomes a burglar. In the course of several years the wife finds her new life less happy then she expected for she has a different man to deal with and he holds her to her bargain, making her life miserable. For comfort in her grief she turns to her daughter, now advancing into womanhood.

The stepfather plans to marry off Rhoda to a libertine friend of his, and preparations for the wedding are pushed ahead. The news leaks out into the slums through the papers and the first husband decides to rob the house for the wedding presents. He enters at night, makes a noise, and his daughter, hearing it, slips from her bedroom, comes down the stairs and confronts him. She recognizes the burglar as her father and explains to him of her forced wedding. Rhoda has a sweetheart of her own. Having been denied the right to see him she induces her burglar-father to aid her. This he does, his efforts ending in their marriage.

He brings the young people to the girl's home and there confronts Wells and his wife. The latter is in tears straining against the bonds which hold her, and complaining bitterly under the new humiliations which Wells is laying upon her. Shaw recognizes in Wells the man who has deserted a woman he met in the slums. This woman produces proof that Wells has been illegally married. Confronted with the proof Wells breaks down, promises to mend his ways, and an unhappy situation is turned into a joyous one. The picture closes with Shaw and his wife again happily reunited and the little girl seated at his feet listening to his stories of wild animals.

the papers bequeathing the Mohawk mine to John Van Dyne. He decides to present himself as the beneficiary of Van Dyne and claim the property. A dishonest lawyer puts him in possion of the property, which rightfully belongs to Elsie. Peter Brock, Van Dyne's lawyer, is not satisfied with the disposition of the mine, and goes west to investigate. In the town of "Running Dog" he sees Elsie, and after telling the miners of her identity, takes her back to the East to be educated. Henry, left alone, is heart-broken. But, soon after, his opportunity comes, too, when an old blind musician recognizes the wonder of his voice and takes him East to have it cultivated.

Twelve years later, Silas Kirby, now known as Simeon Wells, is a conspicuous figure in Eastern society. He poses as Elsie Van Dyne's guardian, and she, ignorant of who he really is, accepts him. One night Wells gives an entertainment, at which he has invited a rising young singer to appear. At the reception, Elsie recognizes the musician as Henry. Elsie's guardian resents the devotion of the boy, and on one occasion tries to interfere. He demands to know, who the boy is. The singer recounts the story of the Indian massacre. With a sudden movement he pushes back Wells' hair from his forehead. There is disclosed an ugly scar. And Kirby, the villain, knows that at last he has been brought to judgment.

THE QUEEN OF THE BAND (Two Parts—Oct. 10).—The cast: Adoni Fovieri, Frank Bennett, Gladys Field, Jack McDermott, Phil Gastrock, George Walsh, O. MacDiarmid and Jack Cosgrove.

Zoah, queen of a band of crooks, receives word from one of her agents abroad, telling her that a priceless Kaffire diamond has been shipped to the firm of J. Jacard and Son, in New York City. That night she and her band lay plans to obtain the gem. The next day Jack Lyle and Ethel Dawn, two of Zoah's accomplices, arrive at Jacquard's and ask to be shown antque lockets. Fred Watson, a third accomplice, dressed as a messenger boy, arrives at the window of the store and awaits a signal. After looking at lockets, Lyle asks to be shown diamonds—"big ones." The clerk shows the stones but they do not satisfy them. He then sends for the proprietor, who orders the Kaffire diamond brought from the safe. This is the signal for the two crooks to get busy. Dawn engages Jacard in conversation, while Lyle opens one of the lockets and leaves it on the table. The clerk returns with the most precious stone of them all. Dawn gives the signal to the waiting Watson. The disguised crook enters with a message for the owner of the store, bumps into Lyle, and knocks the diamond on the floor. During the confusion, Lyle slips the Kaffire stone into the open locket.

When the diamond is discovered to be missing, Dawn and Lyle are searched, but nothing is discovered on them. Mr. Jacard and the clerk believe that the messenger boy has had something to do with the disappearance of the diamond, and suspicion is removed from the couple. Dawn and Lyle return to Zoah and give her a description of the locket in which the diamond is hidden. Next day the queen of the band goes to the jewelers, discovers the right locket and purchases it. As Zoah leaves the store, she meets Ramar, the great detective. He recognizes her as a crook he had met in London, and immediately connects the robbery of the Kaffire with her. He follows her car at a discreet distance, and discovers her residence. Then he returns to Jacards and asks to be shown a duplicate of the jewelry purchased by the woman. On seeing the cavity in the locket similar to the one she purchased, he surmises that the diamond was carried away in Zoah's purchase. Ramar forges a letter, supposedly from the owner of the house in which Zoah's band lives, which permits him to enter it to do some paper hanging. In disguise, the detective and his assistant overhear conversation through a crack in the library door which incriminates the gang. Unfortunately for them, the curtain pole falls, with the heavy curtains on it, exposing the listening detectives. The two men are unable to escape. Zoah binds and gags them, but they are saved from a horrible fate to which the heartless leader of the thieves had planned to submit them, by the arrival of the police.

MUTUAL MASTERPICTURES.

BRED IN THE BONE (Reliance—Four Parts—Oct. 7).—The cast: George A. Beranger, Margie Wilson, Alberta Lee, Richard Cummings, Dorothy Gish, William Hinckley, Seena Owen, W. E. Lawrence, Al Filson.

Harvy, the heavy, and Bella, the ingenue, of a cheap theatrical company are encumbered with an infant girl. The husband, a worthless, dissipated character, annoyed by the presence of the child and the care the wife is compelled to give it, deserts them both. The show then "busts" and the mother and the infant are left stranded in a small California town. Reluctantly the mother is compelled to abandon the child upon the steps of a Quaker household. The childless Quaker couple regard the waif as an answer from heaven to their prayers, and taking the infant in, adopt it and rear it as thir own.

Years now pass and the grown up girl (Mercy) is now soon at the age of eighteen leading the simple life of the Quaker. She is being courted by the son of a neighboring family (also Quakers), who is a school teacher. One day, actuated by some strange mood, Mercy improvises a theatrical costume, and delights several of her companions with real "play-acting." She is discovered by her foster-mother and reprimanded. Later she is attracted by the posters of a musical comedy that is to play the local "opery-house" that night. Dancing with her shadow in the road in imitation of one of the pictures, she is surprised and led home by her shocked sweetheart. That night she climbs out her bedroom window, slides down the pillars of the portico and goes to the "opery-house." On a pile of boxes in an alley alongside the theater she watches the show through a window. An actor coming out in the alley for a smoke discovers her and takes her behind the scenes. Carried away by the glamour of her surroundings, she forgets all her early training in a "reversion of type" and goes off with the company, leaving her foster-parents to mourn the girl they had come to love so dearly.

With this company Mercy travels from town to town, thoroughly happy in her new environment. The actor who first discovered her becomes her "bag-bearer" and devoted cavalier, and is infatuated with her. A manager, who chances to see her, is struck by her demure, appealing type of beauty and thinking she might prove a second Edna May, brings her on to New York. This particular manager makes a specialty of "girly" musical shows of the Ziegfeld type, and in one of these he places Mercy. In this same company the mother who had deserted her years ago, having lost her youth and beauty, is now engaged as a wardrobe woman. The two women, without suspecting their relations, are strongly attracted to each other. Mercy makes a fairly good hit in her environment and when a boost in her salary makes it possible for her to have an apartment, she takes the wardrobe woman as a housekeeper. Her Quaker sweetheart traces her and calls upon her in a vain effort to win her back to her old life.

The actor, who has figured in her life before, is still madly in love with her, and endeavors to reinstate himself in her affections. She repulses him. Crazy with drink, he draws a revolver and fires at her, but misses her. Alarmed, her mother rushes in between them just in time to receive the second shot in her bosom. The actor is led off by the police. Mercy goes to the scene of her early life, with her former Quaker sweetheart, and is received with a glad welcome by her foster-parents.

At this point, Rena dutifully telephones her mother to tell her that Dad is in a scrap and she arrives in time to see father leading Billy's friend in a race down the beach. She takes a hand herself, defending father to the best of her ability, but when all is settled and explanations are due Dad secretly gives the word that the young couple have his full permission and consent if the cause of the mix-up is withheld from mother—and the young couple agree.

A WOMAN'S PAST (Federal—Rel. Wk. of Oct. 4).—Mary Ryan, a woman of the underworld, grows ill from overwork, squalid living conditions, and ill-treatment by her companion, Joe Hand. At night, while he sleeps, Mary secures some money she had secreted, and leaves for Arizona, where she meets Charles Fox, a civil engineer. They become engaged, Mary concealing her past. Hand, in the meantime, has drifted westward and reaches the town Mary lives in. He robs the postoffice, is discovered, and being chased by the sheriff's posse, seeks shelter in a cottage which proves to be Mary's. They recognize each other. He frightens the girl into hiding him, just as Fox enters for a visit.

Mary introduces Hand as her cousin. Hand becomes jealous and angry when he sees the affection existing between the two, and starts telling Fox of Mary's past. Fox angrily makes him stop talking, just as the posse passing the cottage sees the robber through the window. They enter and capture him. As he is dragged off he continues to denounce Mary. She denies it to Fox, and he believes her. However, the girl's conscience troubles her later, and she confesses to Fox, who is heartbroken and leaves her in disgust. Mary writes a farewell letter to Fox and prepares to die. Fox repents and starts to return. From a distance he sees Mary placing a pistol to her head. Rushing in, he seizes her and throws away her weapon, as she sinks in his arms.

PIERCING THE VEIL (Alhambra—Two Parts—Rel. Wk. of Oct. 4).—Abnormal mentality sharpened and developed into clairvoyancy by his sufferings. A crippled brother's second sight leads him to cry out a warning to his mother when his sister, who has just graduated from business college, becomes the stenographer for the wealthy owner of a steel works, but the mother, thinking it only one of his "queer spells," contents herself with soothing the boy. On a pretext the steel magnet detains the sister in his office when the clerks quit for the day. Although unsophisticated, the girl divines her employer's intentions when he attempts to take her hand. Then ensues a struggle between the employer and his stenographer, ending only when the girl threatens to brain the steel magnate with a typewriter. The employer pretends to desist, bids her go—and never to come back. As she turns to leave the office, the employer seizes her from behind, drags her to a panel in the wall, which is operated by a secret mechanism, and throws her a prisoner into a concealed chamber in the steel works.

The hours pass and her brother, an iron-worker, begins to doubt her chastity. The mother is not worried, thinking perhaps the girl has obtained a position which keeps her away from home. The crippled brother's abnormal brain pictures for him a portion of the struggle in the employer's office. His pleadings finally induce his brother to set out with him in search of their sister. They arrive at the steel works shortly after the employer has returned to renew the battle with the girl. The crippled boy recognizes the place of his dream, and he and his brother enter as the man-brute and the girl are in the midst of another struggle. The employer emerges from the secret chamber into his office just before the girl's brothers enter, as he has been warned by the tapping of the cripple's crutch outside.

The older brother, still doubtful of his crippled brother's "visions," asks half-heartedly after his sister. The employer denies all knowledge of her. But just at that moment the cripple's fingers, which have been busily exploring. find the combination which opens the panel. The older brother beholds his sister, rescues her and then turns to wreak his vengeance on the steel magnate. A fight rages, which is ended when the brother hammerlocks the employer, saves himself from a stabbing and throws the steel man to the bottom of the stairs. Millworkers and a watchman attempt to stop the brother as he starts to leave

THE WOLF'S DEN (Navajo—Two Parts—Rel. Wk. of Oct. 4).—Major Harper and Alice, his daughter, eke out their existence by a small annuity which is the remnant of the Major's early fortunes, and by the sale of an occasional painting of Alice. Arnold Gray, an old time friend, is in the secret service and in love with Alice, though she, believing his proposals to be actuated more by charity than love, refuses him. The Major loses his last few dollars in a gambling hall owned by Monsieur Loubert. He confesses to Alice, who bears up under it. In the morning they move to even more humble quarters. They leave no address and Arnold, looking for them, is unable to learn their whereabouts. The tenement into which they move is owned by M. Loubert. He sees Alice the day she moves in, but he also sees the Major and realizes that should he approach them, Harper would recognize him as the gambler and warn Alice against him. Accordingly he watches Alice's habits and learns that she goes into a public park nearly daily and spends an hour or two painting landscapes. The next day Alice is surprised at being accosted by an aged but picturesquely garbed Italian, who shows deep interest in her work. At length she asks him to come to her little attic studio on the following day and pose for her. He agrees. In the days that follow the Italian spends an hour or so each morning with her. Always courteous and willing, at the same time revealing himself as a man of more or less education, he gives the impression of one having seen better days. Alice is grateful to him for the opportunity he has afforded her to make what she believes to be her masterpiece. At this time Major Harper's health fails. The Italian is most solicitous and offers to do what is possible. Alice, trusting him, agrees to meet him that evening and accept a tonic which he says he will give her.

Meanwhile Arnold Gray has been searching in vain for Alice. He meets another victim of M. Loubert's, who tells him of the existence of the gambling hall and promises to furnish him more definite information for a raid. Evening comes and Alice goes to meet the Italian. The room is the back room of M. Loubert's hall. The old Italian bids her wait a moment for him and exits into an adjoining room. When he returns his disguise is off and he appears as M. Loubert himself. Alice, frightened at this change, is reassured. Loubert tells her his intentions are philanthropical; that his visits were simply to ascertain if she and her father were objects of a worthy charity. The look in his eyes belies his words, however, and Alice cringes from him.

In the gambling hall the players stop and a pounding on the door is heard. The guard of the door reports a raid. Loubert exits back into the main hall, while Alice attempts to escape. Arnold, at the head of his men, breaks into the dive. Breaking into the room in which Alice is hidden Arnold finds her lying in a faint. Taking in the situation at a glance, he orders his men into an adjoining room. As they exit in search of the supposed criminal Arnold has indicated, Arnold quickly takes off his secret service star and pins it on Alice's breast. The men return and Arnold tells them that Alice is his appointee, and it was through her he gained the information for the raid. He points to the badge she wears. Later explanations and the reunion. Arnold takes the Major away from the attic room and with Alice they move back into the little cottage, Arnold, Alice and the Major.

LOVE'S PROBATION (Ramona—Two parts—Released Week of Oct. 4).—Nolan Hall, on the completion of his college course, finds his health broken down. He goes to Colorado and takes up ranching. As time passes, he regains his health, but the loneliness of the hills palls upon him, and he longs for congenial companionship. He decides to advertise for a wife, and sends the following advertisement to an eastern paper: "Former eastern college graduate, living on ranch in the Rocky Mountains, has a new cabin that lacks one thing—a wife! Any young lady desiring this man and cabin may address Nolan Hall, Newton, Col."

Myrtle Colwell, the impulsive daughter of Judge and Mrs. Colwell, wearies of society. Her parents try to force Myrtle to marry a titled foreigner. The girl refuses, and a family row ensues. The same day Myrtle happens to see Nolan's advertisement in the paper, and determines to answer it in person. From the railroad station, before boarding the train, she sends a wire to her parents, stating that she has gone to marry a man of her own choosing. Judge Colwell employs a detective to trace her.

Myrtle also sends a wire to Nolan, stating she is coming. He and the cowboys are at the station to meet her. Myrtle, who has had time for reflection, begins to waver, and wants to withdraw from the agreement, but feels it is too late. She and Nolan are married and start for his cabin in the hills. En route she pictures the cabin as similar to her own summer home in the Adirondacks. The reality is far from what she expected to see. She begins to realize the importance of the step she has taken, and regrets her hasty action. During an absence of Nolan from the cabin, Myrtle takes her grip and starts back toward town. On the road she encounters Pedro, a Mexican half-breed, employed by Nolan. Pedro does not know who she is and tries to talk to her. To escape him, she turns back, and takes refuge in the cabin. Nolan, who has witnessed the incident and who appreciates her position, feels sorry for her. He invites her to be his guest for a week, stating that if, at the end of that time, she does not wish to stay he will not hold her. She agrees to the proposition. He leaves her in possession of the cabin and takes up his quarters in a tent nearby.

As the days go by, Nolan treats her with the utmost respect, buys her a complete western outfit, and gives her riding and shooting lessons. One day while practicing, Myrtle accidentally shoots Nolan, who is placing a bottle for a target. She manages to get him to the cabin, and then starts to town on horseback for a doctor. Meanwhile, Detective Brown has found trace of Myrtle and followed her to Newton. He is at the general store making inquiries when she rides into town for the doctor, and recognizes her from a photograph. He wires her parents to come at once. During Nolan's illness Myrtle cares for him and her trust and confidence, as well as her liking for him grows. Judge and Mrs. Colwell arrive, and try to force Myrtle to return East with them, but she decides she loves this new life and her husband. Judge and Mrs. Colwell are also induced by Nolan to remain for a while on a visit.

A MOVIE NUT (Banner—Two Parts—Rel. Wk. of Oct. 11).—Ignatz, a movie nut, studies day and night to become a movie actor. After applying for a position at about a thousand studios, he finally lands a job, and is cast as the star; but Ignatz knows too much, or so he thought, and he tried to show the director how to direct. For his kind information he was directed out of the place.

Poor Ignatz goes home tired and goes to sleep. He dreams that he has at last reached the pinnacle of fame and is the only rival to Charlie Chaplin for the crown of the King of Fundom. He is rudely awakened from his happy dream by the landlady, who demands rent or the room, and thereby drives poor Ignatz back to his former position of high chief, cook and bottle washer at a delicatessen "foundry."

THE BLIND MUSIC MASTER (Santa Barbara—Two Parts—Rel. Wk. of Oct. 11).—Moreau, a young blind musician, is greatly loved by Marie, a servant in the Petite Pension, where he resides. She learns through a letter that Moreau has lost the income derived from a small inheritance, but keeps him in ignorance of his misfortune by entreating his attorney to send Moreau her small savings. Eloise De Montjeu, an opera singer of the lower class, introduces herself to Moreau, upon receiving the vocal score for a new production which she is unable to understand. Later, through his skilful training, she secures an engagement. Moreau has grown to love her, while she apparently returns his love, finding him amusing.

Marie's hands, owing to the work she has been forced to perform, have become coarse and rough. Moreau indifferently tells her that he abhors coarse hands, little knowing the deep sorrow he has brought to one who truly loved him. Eloise, upon meeting an old admirer, mocks Moreau's love. When in despair he calls to plead with her, she takes the revolver with which he intended taking his life, removes the shells, and laughs at him. Her laughs and jeers craze Moreau, who loses his reason. He seizes a chair and starts to strike but falls to the floor himself. Upon regaining his feet he discovers that he has regained his sight. Marie, hearing the struggle, comes to the door of Eloise's room. Moreau looks from Eloise to Marie and finally takes Marie in his arms and denounces Eloise.

JOE'S DEVOTION (Navajo—Rel Wk. of Oct. 11).—When Nell marries Tom, a young miner, Joe, his friend and pal since boyhood, feels that all the sunshine has gone out of his life forever, but with the birth of little Dot, Joe becomes a constant visitor at the cabin, lavishing all his disappointed affection on the child, who adoringly calls him "Uncle Joe."

One day while Tom and Joe are at work together blasting rock, Tom is fatally injured by a premature explosion and with his dying breath begs his friend to look after Nell and the baby. Joe promises. The young wife is heartbroken over the tragedy, but bravely faces the future. Joe watches her valiant struggle and longs to take her in his strong arms and shield her from the world. Nell grieves for her husband. When her cousin in the East writes, asking her to come to her and forget her sorrow, Joe readily offers the necessary money on the strength of the old friendship, even though it will take her and little Dot far away from him. But Nellie cannot bring herself to leave the grave, and refuses his kind offer.

A year of hardship follows. Nellie's funds are low and her spirit broken by the struggle. Joe observes the pitiful struggle she is making and knowing that Nellie will not accept charity, he puts a bill under the door where she cannot help to find it. Nellie accepts it thankfully. During her absence to the store to get supplies, a Mexican, seeking revenge for a supposed wrong done him by Tom, steals little Dot from the cabin. Nellie returns to the cabin, finds her child gone and also finds the Mexican's hat. She starts in pursuit, meeting Joe and the baby. The child's love for her "Uncle Joe" and the mother's gratitude brings her to a realization of Joe's worth.

TOO MUCH ELIXIR OF LIFE (Alhambra—Rel. Wk. of Oct. 11).—Professor Muggles sneers at Billy's temerity in asking for the hand of his daughter. He tells him that he has never done anything for science, and until he does so he had better keep away. Billy sadly kisses Rena good-bye and he leaves. Before he gets home he has an idea definitely outlined, suggested by the sleeping form on the beach of Fritz, the apartment house janitor. With care and tenderness, Billy wraps Fritz in a winding sheet and then buries him by the seashore. An excited phone message to the professor, and Billy returns to wait. The professor, followed by Rena, arrives duly and the professor's delight at the discovery of the mummy is great. He and Billy dig up the body and the professor takes it to his laboratory to try the effect of the elixir of life he has mixed.

Meanwhile Mrs. Fritz searches for her lost spouse. She trails him as far as the beach but loses all trace of him there. Discouraged, she starts home and passes the Muggles' residence on the way. Fritz has just been awakened by Billy while the professor's back is turned and a liberal injection of the elixir has been made. The method of injection more than the elixir itself has aroused the sleeping janitor and as he sits up and gazes on the formidable array of knives and operating instruments, a sudden desire to leave possesses him. He takes his departure before the professor can interfere and starts for parts unknown. Professor Muggles is close in pursuit, but Mrs. Fritz, whom Fritz passes without stopping, is closer. Drawing up the rear are Rena and Billy, delayed somewhat by their laughter. The professor bravely follows until he loses track of Fritz, and then he returns home, regretting only that while his elixir of life is wonderful it is a bit too strong for an ordinary mummy and he will never be able to prove its value to the world, as the mummy is gone. Billy, however, he gratefully thanks and as proof of his gratitude he gives him Rena's hand.

TRIANGLE FILM CORP.

THE LAMB (Fine Arts—Five Parts—Oct. 27).—The cast: Douglas Fairbanks, Seena Owen, Lillian Langdon, Munroe Salisbury, Kate Toncray, Alfred Paget, William E. Lowery, Eagle Eye.

A sprig of an old Knickerbocker family has won a beautiful girl as a fiancee and everything goes along smoothly until the girl, Mary discovers a "yellow streak" in her Lamb Yclept Gerald. During a mishap at a bathing beach Bill Cactus, a young giant from Arizona visiting in New York, affects a thrilling rescue while Gerald fails utterly to show up as a self-sacrificing young man.

Later Bill goes out to Arizona where the girl and her friends are enjoying a visit at a ranch. The Lamb leaves the transcontinental train to buy some Indian trinkets. The train speeds off without him. Crooks offer to take him to the train by a short cut route, then pack him and leave him for dead on the desert. The Lamb wanders about rather helplessly till by good fortune he sights an aviator who is fitting over the country for the very same ranch people where his former finacee is staying. The aviator and Gerald are captured by Yaqui Indians, taken across the Mexican border and held prisoners. A thrilling fight ensues between the Yaquis and Mexican soldiers in which the Indians are victorious.

Gerald's sweetheart in an automobile party that ventures across the line is captured by the Indians, too. The Arizona man then shows his "yellow streak" and goes back over the border to tell the American troopers of the girl's capture and disappearance. Gerald and Mary are left alone together. Then the real qualities of the Lamb assert themselves. He finds a rapid fire cannon which the Indians had taken from the Mexicans and which they regarded as a piece of junk. Backed up against the wall with the girl at his side he operates the rapid firing gun and mows down the greater part of the tribe as they advance to attack them. When, however, all the ammunition is exhausted the remaining Indians have their opportunity. They approach cautiously on all fours, meaning to take the man alive to cut his heart out. Gerald and Mary prepare for the death. But in the meantime the American troopers come riding over the sagebrush and cactus. They arrive in the knick of time and Mary and her Lamb fall into each other's arms.

THE IRON STRAIN (Kay Bee—Five Parts—Oct. 27).—The cast: Dustin Farnum, Enid Markey, Charles K. French, Truly Shattuck, Louise Glaum.

Octavia Van Ness, a San Francisco social butterfly, falls into decline. On a physician's advice her grandfather, Ezra Whitney, a mining king, takes her to Alaska, hoping that she will regain health and find a mate more suitable than the gilded youths of the California city. In the far north they meet "Chuck" Hemingway, whom the girl supposes to be a "sour sough," but whom the grandfather recognizes as a young collegian from the East. Hemingway's advances are repulsed, and the cave man instinct wakens within him. The day before her return to civilization, Hemingway steals the girl, enters into a forced marriage with her and installs her in his cabin where, however, she suffers no more harm than if she were with her mother.

Six months elapse. Octavia, now well and strong, rejoices in household work, but is still antagonistic to "Chuck." The change is brought about by the sudden arrival in the village of Kitty Malloy, the queen of the Arctic Cabaret. Octavia's jealousy is excited. She realizes his true worth and for the first time loves her husband. They return to California where they are united with the girl's family.

MY VALET (Keystone—Four Parts—Oct. 27).—The cast: Raymond Hitchcock, Mack Sennett, Mabel Normand, Frank Opperman, Alice Davenport, Fred Mace.

Raymond Hitchcock goes to the coast on a pleasure trip, taking with him his valet, Mack Sennett. Arriving in California, they take an automobile for a hotel and are driving along the highway when a runaway horse, on which Mabel Normand is mounted, dashes by. Hitchcock orders the chauffeur to speed up and as the car comes abreast of the runaway he leaps to the animal's back and soon has it under control.

Miss Normand started for the gallop with a foreign admirer, Fred Mace. He returns and tells her parents what has happened and while they are frantic with fear their daughter returns, displaying Hitchcock's card. The name seems familiar, in fact seems to indentify Miss Normand's rescuer as the son of an old friend. It is recalled that when the children were young they were betrothed and a note is immediately sent to the young Easterner reminding him of this and inviting him to be a guest.

Hitchcock receives this note with alarm. He doesn't relish being forced into marriage with a girl he has never seen. It is ararnged that he and Sennett shall change places, so as a reversible master-and-man they leave the hotel with their baggage. In their new quarters, Hitchcock discovers that the girl in the case is his rescued one of the morning. He desires to change back, but Sennett threatens exposure.

Thrills begin to pile up. The French count ties Miss Normand to a rock while Sennett is tying Hitchcock to a bed post in a room where a pile of newspapers is set on fire. As the tide rises and threatens to drown Miss Normand, Hitchcock frees himself, sees her predicament from his window and floats out over the ocean with an umbrella as a parachute as her parents wring their hands in terror on the beach and Sennett makes a cowardly and fruitless attempt at rescue.

As Hitchcock swims ashore with Miss Normand, the police return from a thrilling chase after Mace. Mace and the valet are taken to jail while Hitchcock and his fiancee-from-youth pledge the troth of grownups.

der in Moscow, Russia. There he discovers that the victim was killed with fumes from a volatile poison of the East. He is about to make known his discovery when he decides to withhold it and use the same poison to kill Campbell, that he may possess Jane. On his return to New York he finds through careful tests that he can saturate a letter with the poison and thereby bring about the death of whoever reads the letter.

Jane and Campbell have been living happily, until Campbell returns home unexpectedly and finds Henry Strong and Jane in a supposedly compromising situation, which they explain away. Ross telephones Jane of his arrival and she invites him to a dinner party to be given her husband. An hour before he leaves for the Campbell home Ross dispatches a letter addressed to Campbell. Jane receives the letter and asks Strong to take it to her husband, who is mixing a cocktail in the dining-room. Jane joins Ross and other guests. Campbell asks Strong to open the letter, which he does and receives the poison intended for Campbell. Strong becomes partially paralyzed and Campbell picks up the letter. It states that Strong has been intimate with Jane. Campbell becomes infuriated and is about to strike Strong when the latter topples over, striking a chair and sustaining a fracture of the skull. A maid, hearing the altercation, and seeing Campbell start to strike Strong, summons a policeman. Campbell is arrested for murder, tried and convicted.

Jane learns of the poison that Ross used to kill her husband, and steals incense from which the poisonous vapor arise, and laboratory notes from the Ross apartments. That night she invites Ross to her home, after a spurious confession of love for him. She secretes a police captain and a doctor in her home and tells them she intends to prove her husband's innocence. When Ross arrives she lights the incense in a bowl. It has the same perfume as the poison, but not the deadly effect. Ross tries to escape from the room, but finds all the doors locked. In the madness that overwhelms him, he confesses his guilt and is arrested, while Jane and Campbell are reunited.

ENEMY OF "STORK'S NEST (Columbia—Five Parts—Oct 11).—The cast: Mary Miles Minter, Niles Welch, Mr. Bresee, Charles Prince, Wm. Cowper, Mrs. Brundage, Martin Faust, Mr. Cowles.

Through the death of his father, Benton Cabot is left with nothing but a small mountain cabin which he has never seen. He goes to take up his property and in the mountains meets Emmy Garrett, an untutored but attractive girl, just budding into womanhood. Emmy is a child of the woods and Benton's city dress and ways amuse her greatly. His cabin is uninhabitable so Benton goes to work for Bije Stork and lives with Bije, his brother, Si Stork, and Si's wife, Crishy, a poor creature, crushed by years of servitude.

Benton takes an instinctive dislike to Bije and senses that there is something wrong with the Stork establishment. He and Emmy feel attracted to each other, despite the lack of respect Emmy feels for Benton. Emmy sends Benton a note by Jim Whitlicks, a half-witted boy, but Bije intercepts. Instead of telling Benton he goes to see Emmy and tells her that Benton is too busy to see her. Emmy sneaks away and sees Benton chatting with a party of autoists from the city. She goes back and, at her grandfather's solicitation, promises to marry Bije. Jim Whitlicks tells Benton of the intercepted note and he goes to see Emmy. She will have nothing to do with him and drives him out of the house into a furious storm. Benton finds the ford swollen by the storm and is nearly drowned. But he is saved by Emmy, whose change of heart led her to follow him. Then she realizes she loves Benton but thinks he does not care for her.

Emmy wants to get all dressed up. So she and Crishy Stork send Jim to town for cloth. The money Jim tenders Hicky Price, the storekeeper, is found to be counterfeit. Hicky calls in the sheriff and they decide to hunt Bije Stork down. They find he is a counterfeiter and conceals the counterfeit money in Benton's abandoned shack. The Storks realize that the jig is up. Si gets Emmy in his team and goes for the counterfeit money. At the shack he meets Benton, who rescues Emmy after a hand-to-hand fight. Benton rides off with Emmy, pursued by the Storks in their wagon, when they meet the sheriff's posse. The Storks turn and flee. Pursued hotly they perish when the wagon goes over a cliff. Thus freed Emmy makes clear her love for Benton and the young folks are left happy.

WORLD FILM CORP.

THE FLASH OF AN EMERALD (Shubert—Sept. 27).—The cast: Robert Warwick, Dorothy Fairchild, Jean Stuart, Julia Stuart, Georgia May Fursman, Clarissa Selwynne, June Elvidge and Paul Gordon.

Lucius Waldeck is a social vulture. In a New York hotel lobby, he is attracted by the porter carrying in a sickly child. While thus engrossed, he sees a magnificent emerald pinned in the dress of the child's grandmother. Determining to possess the jewel, he follows Mrs. Weston, who has gone to St. Ann de Beaupre, near Quebec, Canada, in order to appeal for the recovery of her granddaughter, at the time of the visit of the pilgrims. Waldeck trails Mrs. Weston and that night, he crawls up over the roof of the stable and gains admittance to Mrs. Weston's rooms. He chloroforms her and repeats the same operation with the child and the maid. Then he secures the emerald.

Months later, Victoria and Sonia are in New York. The former has been an only comrade of Morton Conway, a rich young man, who, although he knows and appreciates the friendship existing between her and Sonia, is in love with Phillipa Ford, a mercenary young lady. Phillippa has become interested in a man who represents himself to be the secret agent of the Russian revolutionists. The man is Waldeck. At a ball, Victoria sees Waldeck and recognizes him in a vague sort of a way. She tries to warn Phillipa, who chooses to consider the warning as jealousy; Phillipa believing that Victoria is trying to cause trouble in her affair with Waldeck in order to cause trouble between Phillipa and Norton, so that Norton will leave Phillipa and return to Victoria. Waldeck gives the emerald to Phillipa. Victoria sees the emerald and recognizes the true character of Waldeck. Phillipa insists that it is a jewel given her by her mother. Waldeck learns that the emerald has been his undoing, so deftly removes it from Phillipa's bodice when embracing her. Then he leaves this country.

Phillipa receives a note from Waldeck, asking her to deliver a box which he had intrusted to her, and which he said contains the collections for the Russian revolutionists, to a stateroom in an outgoing steamer. Phillipa still believes in the innocence of Waldeck. Victoria notifies the police of her opinion that Waldeck is the man wanted for murder of the child in Canada. Detectives discover the note which he sent to Phillipa regarding the box, so the police go to the steamer and await the appointed hour when Phillipa is to deliver the box to the mysterious woman. At the right moment they pounce on both Phillipa and the other woman, who is Marie, the former maid of Mrs. Weston's, and who has been Waldeck's accomplice in all the work. The box is discovered to contain the jewels and valuables stolen by Waldeck. Waldeck, realizing that there is no hope of escape, commits suicide. Morton Conway realizes that he has been wasting his affections on Phillipa, whose true character has been disclosed. And he realizes that all the suspicion, caused by Phillipa's tongue and directed at Victoria, are unjust. He appreciates her goodness and all promises well with them.

J-M FIRE EXTINGUISHER

Labelled by the Underwriter's Laboratories and included in the list of approved fire appliances issued by the National Board of Fire Underwriters.

Read these distinctive improvement features that make this extinguisher the most positive protection against all incipient fires.

1. Easiest to aim—both hands free to direct the stream.
2. Sealed, indicating at sight that the extinguisher is filled ready for use.
3. Ten seconds easy pumping develops sufficient air pressure to discharge entire contents automatically in a steady stream at an average distance of 30 feet.
4. Flat bottom acts as a steady rest for quick easy pumping.
5. Extinguishing liquid is non-corrosive to metal, skin or fabric and is deadly to fires of any origin including celluloid, gasoline, oil or electricity.

Because air pressure may be stored before operating, fires can be attacked in out-of-the-way places and from cramped quarters where pump-while-you-use extinguishers are inefficient.

The safety of your audience demands that you investigate the merits of this new and perfected extinguisher. Write to nearest branch for demonstration.

A New Mercury Arc Rectifier

This new rectifier embodies many improvements that are of vital interest to moving picture theatre managers.

With a Mercury Arc Rectifier you get brighter pictures, whiter pictures, clearer pictures and pictures without flicker. And the big saving in your current bills soon pays for the initial cost. Many theatres that have a. c. and d. c. use a Mercury Arc Rectifier on a. c. because of the economy and the many other advantages of the Mercury Arc Rectifier—which in the end means more profit and increased business.

Air First!

The success of your theatre depends on two things—

Good Air—Good Films.

Air first, because no matter how good your films, if the theatre is close, hot and stuffy, people will go elsewhere. You must make them comfortable.

If you want "capacity houses" the year round, see that your theatre is properly ventilated.

The perfect ventilation of your theatre may be easily, inexpensively and permanently maintained by the installation of—

"GLOBE" VENTILATORS

They are absolutely noiseless—there are no moving parts to get out of order—they are storm-proof—simple—efficient.

Install them and forget them—they will be busy every minute 24 hours a day, helping you make more profits.

The King is Dead!
Long Live the King!

King Philip II of Spain has been dead more than three centuries.

But his spirit has been reincarnated in "In the Palace of the King," F. Marion Crawford's great masterpiece.

Essanay has brought to life the old Spanish court, with its thrilling love romances, intrigues, and royal plots in this 6-act photoplay.

It is a great spectacular pageant with 5,000 persons appearing in costumes—knights and ladies, soldiers and peasants.

The all-star cast includes Richard C. Travers, E. J. Ratcliffe, Nell Craig, Arleen Hackett, Lewis Edgard, Ernest Maupain, Lillian Drew, Sydney Ainsworth and Thomas Commerford. Directed by Fred E. Wright.

Carter De Haven and Flora Parker De Haven in "The College Orphan"

Directed by Wm. Dowlin

Sixteenth Prize Release, Broadway Universal Features
Released Oct. 25th.

That this charming comedy drama is timely, seasonable and full of the right atmosphere is to mention merely its most obvious attractions. Director Dowlin has succeeded in getting the true college spirit into all the school scenes, whether indoors or out. The versatile Carter DeHaven at the opening of the story is sent to college by his irate dad, and in disgrace, which is somewhat tempered by the thousand dollar check secretly given him by his fond mama. His escapades with his fraternity brothers; his championship with the little maid of all work at his boarding house; the football team's ridiculous compliance with the faculty order that the game must be made "more refined and gentle;" his victory over his college rival and his father's business competitor make a real human story that moves swiftly, logically and with the greatest charm. The settings are elaborate as to interiors, and realistic and interesting as to exteriors. The entire production is of the sort to interest any audience and prove a profiable booking for any Exhibitor.

"The Millionaire Paupers" With Grace Thompson, Gretchen Lederer, Arthur Shirley, Lon Chaney and Olive Fuller Golden.

Directed by Jos. De Grasse

Prize Romantic Drama
Gold Seal—3 Reels
Released Oct. 26th.

With truly dramatic interest, though based on everyday lives and happenings, has this splendid scenario been worked out, and presented on the screen in a strong photoplay. Grace and Arthur, who have never met, are intended for each other by fond parents. Each declines the honor, and endeavors to avoid meeting the other. How they meet without knowing the other's identity and the dramatic events that lead to a happy ending are strongly portrayed by a cast of unusual brilliance. The story is big enough to warrant the attention that has been paid to the cast and to the settings, and the entire production is very much beyond the average.

J. Warren Kerrigan in "A Life at Stake"

Directed by Jacques Jaccard

Prize Western Drama
Victor—3 Reels
Released Oct. 27th.

The heroic personality of the popular Universal star, J. Warren Kerrigan, appears to great advantage in this thrilling and absorbing story of a man's conflict with himself when torn between revenge and a duty to humanity. The story is big; the crucial moment bigger, and the acting of Mr. Kerrigan dominant and powerful. Every lover of a fine human interest drama and of the splendid characterizations of this much loved actor will welcome this splendid photoplay.

"The Flag of Fortune" With Murdock MacQuarrie, Mother Benson and Edna Payne

Directed by Murdock MacQuarrie

Prize Patriotic Drama
Big U—3 Reels
Released Oct. 28th.

Here is a novelty which shows what every fan is crazy to see—the movies in the making. Grandpa has lost his job, and granddaughter has secured one as a moving picture extra. Grandpa visits the studio and is chosen as the type needed by the director for the character of an old soldier in a picture then being made. How the flag Grandpa carries in a battle scene restores his lost pension papers and how Granddaughter wins a life-long position with the leading man, make two of the most delightful reels which the versatile MacQuarrie has produced in many a day.

"Craters of Fire" With Albert Capozzi

Prize Dual Role Drama
Imp—3 Reels
Released Oct. 29th.

One of the strangest stories that has been presented on the Universal Program in some time. Two brothers—one a successful scientist, the other an unsuccessful spendthrift—whose likeness is so marked as to mystify even their closest friends, are the leading characters in a photoplay that for intensity of situations, the depiction of the baser passions, and for elaborate and realistic settings, is in a class by itself. It will truly bring any audience to the edge of their seats, and leave them gasping as great scene after great scene follows in the swift action of the plot. A notable production that is bound to go big.

"The Superior Claim" With Sherman Nainbridge, Edythe Sterling and Rex De Rosselli

Directed by William Franey

Prize Heart Interest Western Drama
101-Bison—3 Reels
Released Oct. 30th.

The wonderful resources of the Universal City Studios and Ranch were drawn upon generously to produce this convincing and realistic Western drama in which Sherman Bainbridge, well known as a popular juvenile and "villain," makes his debut as a leading man. A Western bad man discovers in his rival the person of his own son, whom he had left as an infant years ago in the "East." The identity is established by the picture of the boy's dead mother, and eventually his is recognized as the "superior claim." The vigorous acting; the wild and western punch that pervades every scene put this fine photoplay far ahead of the usual cowboy Western. It is a fine drama splendidly produced.

"The Man From Argentine" With Sydney Ayres and Doris Pawn

Directed by Sydney Ayres

Prize Romantic Drama
Powers—3 Reels
Released Oct. 31st.

A beautiful drama of the heart, beautifully staged, and ably acted by an exceedingly clever company. In the South American scenes the atmosphere is remarkably realistic, and in the Northern scenes the settings are faithful and interesting. Exiled for a supposed treasonable offense, the "Man from Argentine" finds happiness and his heart's desire in an alien city. This fine picture will carry any audience with it to its very effective climax, and provide them with most enjoyable entertainment.

WARNING

Several so-called film exchanges are offering to the Public the following:

CHARLES CHAPLIN in "THE MIXUP"
(4 Reels)

"AMBITION" and "THE REVIEW"
(4 Reels) (3 Reels)

Charles Chaplin has asked us to announce that he never appeared in any of the above pictures, and in fact that he has never appeared in a four-reel motion picture.

From what we can learn, never having seen these films, we believe that some one who realizes the great demand of the public for Chaplin films, has taken the pains and liberty of getting together scraps of some of his earlier plays and assembling them, and now is trying to foist them on an unsuspecting public.

Mr. Exhibitor, we notify you of this so you may not be misled, and so your patrons are not misled. If we had not advised you we might be blamed. Now that we have told you, if you show the above named as the product of Chaplin's brain and art, you are fooling your customers, but through no fault of ours.

You know Charles Chaplin is producing exclusively for ESSANAY.

We know you do not want to mislead the public.

A Promise Fulfilled!

We predicted that Pauline Frederick in "Zaza" would be considered one of the greatest screen achievements of the year. It has already been conceded this distinction by trade, public and critics. Miss Frederick has surpassed all the former stage interpretations of that wonderful character, and the photoplay exceeds in power and impressiveness all the stage versions of the famous drama. In its review of this superb photo-production describes in the following manner the marvelous art of Miss Frederick and the splendid merits of the subject:

THE NEW YORK EVENING SUN

> "Miss Frederick made her place on the screen in 'The Eternal City,' but 'Zaza' must establish her in a lone eminence among American film actresses for temperamental roles. Here was not the hair-tearing Zaza of Leslie Carter memory, and the actress won the greater sympathy because of that fact. Play and character have been discreetly toned down by the Famous Players and the results are excellent. Miss Frederick's first tender interest in Dufrene, her joy in his love and her frenzy on learning that he is married fit perfectly together to form a character of strong appeal. Her clearly shown change of heart when she meets the man's child in his home is a masterpiece of screen portrayal. The production as a whole produced perfect illusion."

IF THE INCREASE FROM ONE TO 421,875 IN FOUR YEARS A WORLD

One hen should lay 150 eggs per year. If half of these are pullets the second year their increase should equal 375, the third year 56,253, and the fourth year 421,875.

Working upon the above basis the famous J. RUFUS WALLINGFORD could form a $10,000,000 corporation and take away half the money of a county. He could sell a phonograph to a deaf man, opera glasses to a blind man, running shoes to a cripple, and a comb to "Onion Jones."

TRIANGLE STANDARD

You read last week what the New York newspapers thought of the first week's Triangle Plays. It was said then that the mark set was too high for safety—that we couldn't hold the pace. We didn't have any such fear. We KNEW what was coming. This is what happened after the first showing:

> "The public has no cause to complain that the TRIANGLE FILM CORPORATION has not lived up to its promises. Every one of the pictures shown is itself worth going to see. 'Old Heidelberg,' with Dorothy Gish, proved one of the gems of the series thus far shown."
> —New York Sun.

> "The new program is calculated to be even more far-reaching than its predecessors. 'Stolen Magic' is one of the best comedies that has yet reached the screen."
> —New York American.

> "'The Coward' draws an audible gasp from the audience." —New York Times.

> "'Old Heidelberg' struck a high mark in scenic and photographic art." —New York World.

And by this time you know that both Philadelphia and Chicago newspapers have glowingly concurred in the New York verdict.

Where Does the EXHIBITOR Belong?

Editorial No. 2 By the Associated Editor-in-Chief

At the head or the foot of the class?

The trouble has been that producers have been trying to cram him as near to the foot as they could.

And the way it should be is this: The exhibitor should be at the head of the procession. He is the dominant figure, or he will be as soon as the business of motion pictures calms into a staple enterprise.

It is not something unusual in the history of commerce that the man who should control an industry has been forced for a short time back from his rightful position. You can look in almost any other business which has grown from infancy to a maturity and you will find the same conditions. Manufacturers have combined, come near to monopoly, never considered for a moment the dealer, and have made money. But the reaction has always set in. And the dealer has always, without a single exception, regained his place.

It is the simplest of economics to realize that the exhibitor, the king of his field, shall be monarch of all he surveys. His audience is his to handle as he will. His territory is his to work as he will. The manufacturer is always, when a business attains its equilibrium, at the mercy of the dealer.

Some months ago there came together a group of wise men. They realized all that has been seen on close analysis of the motion picture business.

So, they decided to do what was the greatest thing that has ever been done in this business up to this day and year. They decided to forget that they were manufacturers for the moment, and instead, in their imagination, to reconstruct the entire motion picture structure with the exhibitor the dominant control.

That was how Associated began. In Associated language, exhibitor means "King." In Associated language, every enterprise and proposition is based on the premise that the exhibitor must O. K. it before it is carried out.

Let the EXHIBITOR Rule!

Associated Service means lower prices for the exhibitor, better pictures for the exhibitor, a program that the exhibitor can use as he wishes, as a foundation for his entire week, with never a hitch on account of censorship, delay, or poor production. Associated means that the exhibitor is not only furnished Associated Program, but he is the advertised element in all the great national campaigning which is to be done from now on as long as the exhibitor is in business.

Thousands to Advertise the Exhibitor

A national campaign beginning Nov. 1st is to be conducted through the leading dailies of the country. Hundreds of thousands of dollars are to be spent from that date on with but one idea in mind—to increase the prestige, profits and business of the Associated Exhibitor. Below you will find a list of those newspapers already contracted for. Others will appear from week to week as contracts are closed.

EXCHANGES

We Have Set Aside

$100,000.00

For YOU

The Associated idea is against chain exchanges because these are against the exhibitor idea. Leading independents may not in every case be able to handle their territory in the big manner necessary to put Associated over as we want it put over. Therefore, we have set aside this appropriation to aid any reliable, worthy exchange which needs assistance.

Putting over a big program needs capital. We have all that is needed.

If you have a territory that measures up to our standard we will show you how you can make $25,000 a year.

"The Land of Adventure"

There's something about "The Land of Adventure"—possibly it is the spirited acting of Edward Earle—that makes it "like an adventure in a book," such a book as might be written by such a master of dare-devil adventures as Richard Harding Davis. In brief, it is bright, entertaining and ripples with a lighter side—an amusing aspect—of two young soldiers of fortune who go to a revolution-torn South American republic to smooth things out.

Harry Beaumont, with many scenarios to his credit and a wealth of acting experience to draw from, has ingeniously worked in some novel effects. It's the favorite, Edward Earle in a thoroughly fitting and likable role—something "different." Also Margaret Prussing, Jean Dumar, Johnnie Walker, Julian Reed, Harry Linson, Frank Lyon and Mrs. Erskine.

"THE RULING POWER"

Here's the story:

Mr. Williams, a stern father and man of wealth, disinherits his son Hugh, for marrying Rose, a seamstress. Twenty years later, although Rose is practically supporting her sick husband, their little store is taken from them and they are obliged to move, with Martha, their daughter, to the tenement district. Here follows a bitter fight against the power of evil and poverty. Hugh dies and Mr. Williams (now a politician-to aid his finances) meets and takes a liking to Martha. Still bitter against Rose, he offers to adopt the child, but Martha refuses to leave Rose. Steve, an East Side "sport" makes trouble for Rose and her daughter. In desperation, Rose goes to Mr Williams for aid in suppressing the dance halls and "gardens." He refuses and she openly denounces him, shows him that if women had the vote in her state, they could clean out such places. Impressed by the truth of what she says, Williams lends his influence to Woman's Suffrage; it wins, and a joyful reunion of the whole family follows.

The Woman Suffrage Societies of New York, Pennsylvania and New Jersey have already advertised and circularized broadcast that "The Ruling Power" will be exhibited throughout these States, and are advising sister societies to follow the same advertising campaign in their States

Facts and Comments

DO YOU want to prevent censorship in New York? If you want to prevent it, now is the time to act. Exhibitors must get together. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD is doing all in its power to help. Slides and speakers in this campaign are at your disposal. Write and you will be served. Defeat this new constitution which gave the motion picture industry such short shrift. The exhibitors of the censor-ridden states will tell you that these pests of censors cut the life and the vital interest out of the best features. They spoil the pleasure of your patrons and hit you in the one vulnerable spot. Now is the time. If we show that the film men are aware of their rights and know how to strike back at the reactionary politicians who ran the constitutional convention, the men in the legislature in 1916 will respect us more. We will have a public sentiment in our favor. GET BUSY. WAKE UP. LET US HEAR FROM YOU AT ONCE.

ONE of the defenders of the new constitution (there are but very few) says that the motion picture grew too fast and that "the constitution has not had time to catch its breath." Well, that may be true in a measure, but there were too many asthmatics in that convention, anyhow.

WE HAVE no desire to improve the ethical standards of the yellow journals, but we just want to say in all humility that their efforts to reform the motion picture is not very convincing until they have cleaned their own house. One of these journals, The New York World, which has been particularly severe on us poor film men, recently devoted about half of its front page with big illustrations to the report of a miserable scandal involving the private affairs of two women. No motion picture has quite reached that level of indecency. Magistrate Corrigan was quite right when he said that many of the blackmailing lawyers of the city use the threat of publicity in their nefarious schemes.

CONGRATULATIONS to the exhibitors of Kansas who are making such a brave fight against censorship. They have found the slide to be a mighty weapon. Censors fear the slide. They fear it so much that they want the dungeon for any daring exhibitor who presumes to criticise them. Press the fight home. The great task of the industry now is the redemption from disgrace of Kansas, Ohio and Pennsylvania.

* * *

PENNSYLVANIA just at this writing has a fair lead in the idiocy of its censorial decisions. The leather medal may have to be shipped back across the line to Ohio any day, but for the moment Breitinger et al. have a superior claim. They have "slashed up" "Carmen." Think of it. "Carmen" as a novel has been on the shelves of the libraries of the world for about seventy-five years; "Carmen" as an opera has been seen and heard in every part of the civilized world for almost half a century, and no one thought that the morals of mankind were endangered thereby. The Pennsylvania censors make no distinction; a classic is just as horrible to them as any other film. The objection to one scene was that it "made the censor shudder." Bless his dear old head, there are many things that make us shudder. The Pennsylvania censors have made us shudder many and many a time. The producers have taken an appeal to the courts. Even if they win, they have been annoyed and unjustly been put to great expense.

THE good result of harmonious action among exhibitors is shown once more in the case of the local exhibitors, who have started a campaign for a modification of the present harsh and unreasonable rule against standees. The co-operation of many aldermen has been assured and the probabilities point to a victory.

* * *

THE pains and penalties of war are beginning to be felt in this country in more than one way. The film industry of America is among the first to feel the hand of the European taxgatherer. England is staggering under the heavy burden of the war. Our prediction of last week is verified by the latest news from Great Britain. According to this reliable information all films hereafter imported into England are to be taxed at one third of their value. No distinction is apparently made between negatives, positives or raw stock.

Intelligent Characterization

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

HOW in the world can intelligent characterization, the one charm to be counted upon in "putting over" a mediocre story, be expected of authors who are either incapable of understanding human nature, or who do not see the necessity of winning interest through establishing the distinguishing qualities of their leading characters. We rarely become interested in people of the passing crowd, while our sympathies may be easily stirred for those we come to know. In order to appreciate both action and the motive behind action in screen stories, we must have some intimate acquaintance with the leading personalities brought to our attention. To depict mere movement without meaning is to revert to the first moving pictures ever exhibited, yet it is being done day after day by producers whose estimate of the public is that of their own limitations.

Now and then a story is flashed on the screen which soon warms our hearts. We see in the evolution of an individual something akin to ourselves, or to humanity as we know it, and we soon get the impression that we are looking at something that has really happened. Even inconsistencies are excused, so prepossessed have we become with the fascinating personality before us. It may be a comedy, a castigation of our defects; it may be a tragedy, convicting society of wrong doing; it may be an intense drama, scourging the injustice of cherished institutions; we may become absorbed in the outcome of a crucial situation—what would it all amount to if we were called upon to merely watch a picture and not the projection of human character, authentic, veracious and readily understood? We might occasionally be entertained, but we would seldom be impressed.

Only an author of exceptional perceptions, partaking of the intuitive, need attempt the construction of individual types without study. Characterology has become a science to be studied from the two points of sex view and from that of humanity in general. It is not entirely safe to consider the gentler sex of today from even the standpoint of the Immortal Bard. "She's beautiful, and, therefore, to be wooed; she is a woman, therefore to be won." She is not so simple as she was. A finer ideal of her arose more than a half century ago in "Ingomar, the barbarian and Parthenia," an ideal that has persisted in thousands of stories since then, in "The Great Divide" and similar plays, all portraying a semi-cultivated man winning through brute force and brought to a finer realization of himself through woman's refining influence. Many worth-while women of to-day are not to be had in that way. They resent an exhibition of brutal force as we all do the terrorizing barbarism of the self-styled "Master Nation of Europe."

The sexes must be considered as they are, and this means the whole domain of human consciousness, if we are to progress from elemental ideas into the present fascinating complex of human character, yet this research need not be carried away from the lines of Nature. Our impulses and emotions are much the same as they always were—they are possibly intensified—but we are obliged more and more to consider the domination of mind over what might as well be called "our former selves." Not to consider mind and the power it exerts over the elemental within us is to confess its absence in character analysis. She is noble, sweet, pure and lovely, and, therefore, to be wooed. She is a splendid woman, and therefore to be splendidly won.

An infinite variety of portrayals may show the superman of today in a struggle to subordinate his "former self" to the requirements of higher civilization. He might easily be placed, through double exposure, in the position of a spectator to the combat going on within him. His finer self can be so spiritual as to stand aloof, outself himself, superior to his fate, and thus free to control the Old Adam, free to regulate his passions instead of being merely an animal embodiment of them. When he is his nobler self, note his kindness to little children, his affection for relatives and friends, his compassion for the weak and erring. He may even get the whip hand over his vanity, not presume a superiority in a world like ours, where nobody is anybody in particular. He may have a power of mind that reaches out to thousands yet be without assumption, without hypocrisy.

The average hero suffers nothing and really achieves nothing. All things are thrown his way. He is simply a nice-looking, well-groomed, tailor-made, lucky dog. He opens a gold mine, falls heir to a million, stumbles into the accumulation of some other man's labor and is decidedly un-American. He is only a fortunate weakling, whose loftiest ambition is to make an impression through physical appearance—really great men speak through their souls. The screen hero, whether of the drawing-room or of the plains, makes his principal address through his clothes and his shape. The spirit within seems to be of secondary consequence. The screen hero is a poser, a creature of the mirror, the real one is at his best when most unmindful of effect, aggressive and determined from hard necessity, but in a creative way, never to the injury of his fellow men.

The real hero is intensely human, despite his occasional exhibitions of superior mental force. He contains within his complicated makeup the elements of all villainy, and he may descend to the depths in his varied moods, but the light that shines within him is not of one-candle power, it is a burning flame, consuming him at times, at others brightening the lives of all within the scope of his influence. His character is a fabric of many intense characters, and he may live one or another of these in his differing moods and periods. He is not a tame hero, one who merely repeats himself over and over again. Whatever his criminal instincts, they have become intellectualized and may be utilized for noble purposes in the end, but their outbreaks constitute one of the strong fascinations of a dramatic story. In the high color and contrasts of his portrait lie the essence of the drama.

Sum up primitive man, and the solution of primitive woman is not far removed, but why should the primitive be as far as the average story goes in picturing a heroine? She is Eve's reincarnation, and so little more than those who have penetrated the depths of one human character are either amused or disgusted by the portrayal. We have had a surfeit of her on the screen. Is it possible that men who write and visualize such stories have never encountered any but females of rudimentary minds? They are either lacking in comprehension of human character, or they have been wandering so long in the weeds that they have ceased to believe in the existenc of flowers. They are blossoming all around us, some of them strong-hearts, some of them child-hearts, sweet, pure, and earnestly thoughtful for Him who perceives all.

The Federal Decision

By W. Stephen Bush.

IN GAUGING the true meaning and value of the decision in favor of the Government and against the Motion Picture Patents Company and others one thing must be borne in mind: Many of the evils complained of and prosecuted by the Government had been remedied in the course of the legal proceedings. Discrimination in service, the refusal to serve an exhibitor who wanted to mix his program had been abandoned some time before Judge Dickinson's decision was rendered. The license agreements which had been so vigorously objected to by the Government have expired some time ago, and no attempt has been made to renew them. The defendants to that extent confessed the error of their ways. The embodiment of these principles of the freedom of trade and commerce in the decree to be entered upon Judge Dickinson's findings is therefore a mere formality. The decree will be ample protection against any other attempt to monopolize the industry.

Most students of motion picture history agree that the combination, unlawful and oppressive though it was, had in some ways benefited the industry. The men who combined looked upon clean pictures as the best pictures from a business point of view. As I recall the great mass of pictures made and marketed under the conditions which have now been declared violative of the Sherman Anti-trust Law, I am struck by the fact that there were but few pictures to which a sane man or woman could have objected on moral grounds.

The animosities and the bitterness engendered by the brusque and often unjust methods of the defendants have happily passed away and are today little more than a memory. We have been able to get the right perspective. Like most other human agencies, the defendant corporations had their good points as well as their bad ones. I do not pretend to forecast the consequences that may result from individual suits for damages against the defendants. With all their imperfections, which are neither small nor few, our modern civilization and our system of justice have shown themselves capable of protecting the weak against the strong. Retribution is one of the elements of justice.

Our readers will do well to study the decision carefully. It contains a guarantee for the future, which will go far to encourage the spread and development of the industry.

It is proper for a just judgment of the situation to point out that natural trade developments had as much to do with the liberation of the industry from monopolistic control as the law courts and the watchful government. If we had continued on a single reel basis it would have been much harder to break up combinations in restraint of trade. The law of our great industry, however, seems to be expansion. We have progressed in such marvelous fashion that the pinnacle of today is the lowest rung in the ladder of tomorrow. It was the multiple reel which gave a new direction to the development of the motion picture.

The screen being the most powerful visualizing power known in the annals of mankind it naturally looked for new fields to conquer. Fiction, literature, the drama afforded new opportunities to this wonderful screen and the unit of a thousand feet was abandoned. The public response to the expansion of the motion picture was enthusiastic. The millions of patrons at once saw the advantages of the feature and realized its superior powers of entertainment. Capital for the production of features was found in abundance.

When the feature was firmly established in popular favor the motion picture escaped from the control of the few. With an increasing supply of these features the exhibitor found new prosperity and a new freedom. Of course I do not mean to say that the single reel will disappear altogether. Nothing more improbable could be imagined. On the contrary there are signs of a distinct revival.

Keep on Fighting

By W. Stephen Bush.

AN OLD champion of the freedom of the screen out in Ohio writes to THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD in commendation of the article, "We Want No Protection." What he says on the subject is so well put by one who is on the worst part of the firing line that we feel justified in printing some of his points here. Says he:

> This "kow-towing" and "fawning" on the part of the Ohio film men has caused us all our trouble since censorship has been foisted upon us. We have always felt that the censors, even as individuals, should be given scant courtesy by film men inasmuch as they are individually aggressive in insisting by their actions and bearing that they are right and the whole trade, including, of course, the trade journal writers, are wrong. Men of ordinary "nerve" would resign under such a unanimous fire of satire and facts, but their extraordinary "nerve" makes them proof against even a unanimous broadside. They well know that though they are most graciously received in the film offices they are cursed after leaving. If they were "made to feel" their position by the film men it would make a vast difference to us in our fight, anyway humoring the censors is carried on to a disgraceful extent, often by subordinates who are thus going contrary to the publicly expressed sentiments of their New York "heads."

You cannot compromise on a principle. It is the same every hour in the day and night and every day of the year.

Our correspondent tells in another portion of his letter of a great press campaign against censorship in Ohio. The most hopeful sign of the whole Ohio situation is to be found in an aroused and enlightened public opinion. The public and the press are beginning to see the ulterior dangers of censorship. Public men who are afraid to speak their minds on censorship are plucking up courage and say what they think. Utterances like that of Postmaster General Burleson are becoming more frequent. Mr. Burleson in a letter to a society interested in motion pictures intimated that it was the duty of public opinion to regulate the motion picture.

In the mean time all friends of the motion picture are interested in the final outcome of the arrest of the exhibitor who is to be punished because he showed slides without the sanction of the Ohio censors. The decision whatever it may be is bound to crystallize the situation. It will do a whole lot to call general attention to the daring despotism of the censors. If they are allowed to interfere with the slide it means an usurpation of power which the people and the courts of Ohio will never tolerate.

According to present indications the censors are suffering from chilled feet. They tried to get Mayor Baker of Cleveland, where the "offense occurred, to help them out and lock the exhibitor up in the dungeon specially reserved for those wicked citizens who dare criticise the censors or any of them." Mayor Baker, it seems, flatly refused with the remark that "free speech is the right of every American citizen."

Uncle Sam Orders Dissolution of Motion Picture Patents Co. and Others.

In a Sweeping Decision Judge Dickinson Upholds the Government and Characterizes Defendants as Unlawful Combinations in Restraint of Trade—Question of Appeal in Doubt—The Salient Features of the Opinion—Practical Results and Consequences.

By W. Stephen Bush.

BY FAR the most momentous legal decision in the history of the motion picture has just been rendered by Judge Dickinson in the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. Judge Dickinson's decision ends the long drawn out litigation against the Motion Picture Patents Company, the General Film Company, and other defendants, who had been prosecuted by the Federal Government under the Sherman Anti-Trust Law. The Government claimed that the defendants had organized and were operating in violation of the Sherman law and contended for a judgment of dissolution.

Sweeping Victory for the Government.

Judge Dickinson decides the issues presented in favor of the Government and orders the dissolution of the defendant corporations. The judgment is sweeping in its terms. The opinion rendered by the Judge is lengthy and carefully considers all the questions raised by the facts and the law in the case. It will be remembered that the litigation began on August 16th, 1912, when the Government, through its Attorney General, filed its bill of complaint in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. The following defendants were named and served with process:

The Motion Picture Patents Company, the General Film Company, the Biograph Company, the Vitagraph Company of America, of New York; the Lubin Manufacturing Company and Sigmund Lubin, of Philadelphia; the Thomas A. Edison, Inc., Frank L. Dyer, and William Pelzer, of Orange, N. J.; the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, the Selig-Polyscope Company, the Melies Manufacturing Company, George K. Spoor, Gaston Melies and W. N. Selig, of Chicago; the Armat Moving Picture Company, of Washington, D. C.; the Kalem Company, Inc., Henry N. Marvin, J. J. Kennedy, Samuel Long, and J. A. Berst, of New York; Albert E. Smith, of Brooklyn, and the Pathe Freres, of New Jersey.

The Government, which in the actual proceedings was represented by the then Deputy Attorney General Edwin P. Grosvenor after filing the complaint and receiving answers from the various defendants, moved for the appointment of an examiner under the provisions of the Sherman statute. John C. Hacker was thereupon appointed examiner for the purpose of taking testimony. Examiner Hacker at once started on his work and sessions were held in New York, Philadelphia and St. Louis, as well as other cities, to collect testimony. The volume of evidence taken in the course of these sessions which lasted for about a year and six months, is extremely heavy. The Government called over a hundred witnesses, among them producers, actors, directors, exhibitors, exchange dealers and importers. The various defendants called even more witnesses than the Government. The taking of evidence was finished in the early part of 1914, counsel presented their arguments to the Federal Court in Philadelphia shortly thereafter, and now has come the decision.

Appeal Seems Doubtful.

It seems doubtful whether the defendants or any of them will appeal. Mr. Lubin has been quoted as opposed to further litigation. None of the attorneys for the defendants could be induced to speak for publication on the probability of a further appeal. They all refused to either confirm or deny. It is believed, however, that the attorneys are much more eager to appeal than are their clients. The suit has naturally been a gigantic expense to the defendants, the amount paid to lawyers for their services aggregating probably half a million dollars. The defendants have sixty days to appeal. The time runs from the entry of the decree, which will be signed by Judge Dickinson. Judge Dickinson has invited the Government, as well as the defendants, to be heard on the form of the decree. The substance of the decree will, of course, be in strict conformity with the findings of the decision.

The Text of the Opinion.

The decision covers twenty closely printed pages. At times the language is purely technical and would mean a little to the average layman. At other points the opinion is very discursive and of interest only to lawyers. The main features of the decision are quoted literally:

> A petition was filed in this case under the Act of July 2, 1890, averring the combination of the defendants to accomplish an unlawful restraint of trade and consequent obstruction of the free flow of commerce in interstate transactions, in the sale of positive motion picture films and other necessary accessories of the motion picture art. The prayer is that a stop be put, by the power of the law, to the practices charged to be illegal.
> The record is of such bulk, and the discussion has taken such a wide range and has with such thoroughness dealt with all possible phases of the case, that to even outline, with anything like adequacy, all the considerations involved in its decision, would extend an opinion beyond manageable limits.
>
> The present discussion is therefore limited to two questions (and largely to one of these) which give us the bearing points upon which the whole case turns. This restriction does not imply the slighting of any feature of the arguments, so well worthy of the fullest attention, which have been addressed to us, because there is substantial accord in the thought that with these questions eliminated the defence has failed. * * *
> The gravamen of the offence may be gathered from the general summary that it is a conspiracy to drive from the field all other traders in the things which make possible the practice of the motion picture art and to monopolize to themselves that trade and through this the practice of the art itself.
> This latter feature justifies the interpolation into the discussion, of a preliminary question which lies at the threshold of the proceedings. The defence asserts the real charge to be that of an effort to control the motion picture business. This is asserted to be the business of dramatic representation and dramatic representation to be the practice of an art. The control, with the seeking of which the defendants are charged, is therefore the control of an art and not of trade or of anything which is the subject of commerce or can be brought within the laws relating thereto. * * *
> It has been settled by the decisions, under the earlier copyright laws, that the copyright of a dramatization covered a photo-play presentation of the same subject. This was based upon the recognition of, what every observer experiences, the similitude, if not identity, of the impressions received from seeing a photo-play and from the same play acted out by actors living and moving before his eyes. The photo-play business may therefore he well said to bear the same relation to dramatic art which the theatrical business does. The latter has not, however, the same relation to trade and commerce. The moving picture business, as an entirety, is made up of the presentations, to which the public is invited, and of a trade in other things, which make this final display possible. If it is a photo-play, it has, of course, the same basis of the labors of the author and the art of the actor as has the acted play. The spectator of the play sees the actors acting out the play. That which the spectator of the photo-play thinks he sees is an illusion. He thinks he sees, for instance, a man moving (or a picture of it), and, in one sense, he does because such is his mental impression of what is before him. This illusion is produced by projecting upon a screen, in rapid succession, enlarged reproductions of a series of consecutively quickly taken photographs of a man as he is moving. There must be, therefore, in the motion picture business the use of all these additional accessories, from the screen back to the raw film and the camera, as part of the apparatus for the production of a photo-play.

> One of these essential things in the motion picture business is the positive motion picture film or reel, and the charge made against these defendants is that whatever may have been their final purpose with respect to the control of the art, what they combined to do and have done, is to restrain trade or commerce in these films, which are articles of trade and the subject of large inter-state transactions, in which the defendants had part. The latter fact is admitted. It is evident that whoever controls the films, referred to, controls the motion picture business, but the point, with which we are now concerned, is that inter-state trade in these films is within the statute.

> The next branch of the defence, which presents itself for analysis and discussion, is that based upon the patent rights of the Motion Picture Patents Co. The plea is, in legal effect and in practical acknowledgment, one in confession and avoidance, for there is, as already stated, a substantial (although not formal) admission that, with this patent right ownership out of the case, plaintiff should have the relief prayed. * * *

> As a conclusion to the whole discussion, we deem the Bath Tub Case to be decisive of the principle contended for by the United States. There it is true the patent was not on the ware, which was the subject of the trade sought to be monopolized, but on a tool used in its manufacture, and the case doubtless might have been ruled upon that distinction.
